Where a petition for review is filed concerning an agency's allegation of nonnegotiability which is only a restatement of a prior allegation, and no changes in the substance or language of the proposal were made during the period between allegations, the petition seeks review of the earlier allegation. Thus a union's petition for review must be filed within the prescribed time limit (15 days) from the date of service on the union of the agency's first allegation rather than the date of service of the second allegation.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal seeking payment of travel expenses incurred while on official time concerned a condition of employment which is within the Agency's administrative discretion, and is not inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. 5701 et seq., or Federal Travel Regulations and is therefore negotiable.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

Representation of employees in matters concerning their employment affects the working conditions of those employees. A proposal seeking payment of travel expenses incurred because of such representational activity clearly involves a condition of employment not excepted from the definition thereof.

The Travel Expense Act governs the general subject of payment of travel expenses for employees traveling on "official business," it does not specifically address payment for travel engaged in while conducting labor-management activity. Thus, a proposal concerning such payment is not precluded as involving a matter specifically provided for by Federal statute so as to be excepted from the definition of conditions of employment.

A proposal seeking payment of travel expenses incurred while on official time is not contrary to provisions of the Travel Expense Act and Federal Travel Regulations so as to make it nonnegotiable as inconsistent with Federal law and Government-wide regulations. The Act and the Regulations provide that federal employees on "official business," i.e., activity sufficiently in the interest of the United States, are entitled to appropriate expenses and allowances. The agency has the discretion to determine whether such activity served the convenience of the agency or was in the primary interest of the Government. The Authority found that the proposal would not require the agency to authorize either specific travel or expenses which do not comport with regulatory requirements and restrictions. Further, the agency failed to cite legal or regulatory precedent which would absolutely prohibit it from exercising through negotiations its discretion to determine whether travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States to constitute official business.

A proposal seeking payment of travel expenses incurred while on official time does not interfere with right of the agency to determine its budget under § 7106(a). The proposal does not expressly require that a line item be added to the agency's budget nor does it prescribe an amount to be allocated in the agency's budget for programs or operations. The agency provided no specific information or estimates of the financial impact of the proposal, therefore the Authority rejected its general claim that the "significance and unavoidability of increased costs attendant to the payment of travel expenses resulting from labor-management relations activities has been 'officially recognized.'"

Federal employees traveling on official business are entitled to appropriate expenses and allowances. "Official business," is not specifically defined by law or regulation. As a general proposition, the Comptroller General has ruled that payment of travel expenses is authorized where the activity involved was sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to be regarded as official business. 44 Comp. Gen. 189 (1964).

DIGEST NOTES

Proposals concerning "appropriate arrangements" for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management rights under § 7106(b)(3) are negotiable unless the arrangements "excessively interfere" with the exercise of management rights.

In cases where the Authority addresses a management allegation that a union proposal of appropriate arrangements is nonnegotiable because it conflicts with management rights described in § 7106(a) or (b)(1), the Authority will consider whether such an arrangement is appropriate for negotiation within the meaning of § 7106(b)(3) or whether it is inappropriate because it excessively interferes with the exercise of a management right. In making such a determination, the Authority will examine the record to ascertain as a threshold question whether a proposal is in fact intended to be an arrangement for employees adversely affected by management's exercise of those rights. In order to address this threshold question, a union should identify the management right or rights claimed to produce the alleged adverse effects, the effects or foreseeable effects on employees which flow from the exercise of those rights, and how those effects are adverse.

Once the Authority has concluded that a proposal is in fact intended as an arrangement, it will then determine whether the arrangement is appropriate or whether is is inappropriate because it excessively interferes. This will be done by weighing the competing practical needs of employees and managers. In balancing these needs, the Authority will consider such factors as: (1) What is the nature and extent of the impact experienced by the adversely affected employees, i.e., what conditions of employment are affected and to what degree? (2) To what extent are the circumstances giving rise to the adverse affects within the employee's control? (3) What is the nature and extent of the impact on management's ability to deliberate and act pursuant to its statutory rights, i.e., what management right is affected; is more than one right affected; what is the precise limitation imposed by the proposed arrangement on management's exercise of its reserved discretion or to what extent is managerial judgment preserved? (4) Is the negative impact on management's rights disproportionate to the benefits to be derived from the proposed arrangement? (5) What is the effect of the proposal on effective and efficient government operations? Additional considerations will be applied where relevant and appropriate.

A proposal would not excessively interfere with management's rights under § 7106(a)(2)(C) which provides that when management decides to fill a vacant position from which employees have been demoted in a reduction-in-force (RIF) and there are two or more such demoted employees who are candidates for the position, management would select the candidate who has the highest retention standing. The provision constitutes an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management rights within the meaning of § 7106(b)(3). The Authority found that: (1) the proposal related solely to employees who have been demoted through reduction-in-force. Such actions have extremely significant negative impact on affected employees. (2) By its very definition a reduction-in-force cannot legally be based on matters personal to the employee and hence within his control. (3) The management right affected by the provision (to fill positions by making selection from any appropriate source) is an important one. However, the qualifications of the employee to be placed in the position under the provision are unquestioned. No other management right is affected by the proposal, and it is significant that the proposal in no way attempts to intrude on management's underlying decision concerning whether or not to fill a vacancy. Nor can it be construed to require management to take any affirmative act concerning the organization, management, or assignment of its workforce in order to carry out its mission and determine how work shall be performed. (4) Any "burden" on management, under the circumstances, was insubstantial in comparison to the detriment originally suffered, and benefit later obtained by the affected employees(s). (5) In requiring that "the employee who possessed the highest retention standing . . . be promoted," the proposal on its face will further, rather than impede, the purposes of effective and efficient government operation.

A proposal that requires at least seven days advance notice of a change in an employee's work schedule is nonnegotiable because it conflicts with 5 C.F.R. § 610.121, a Government-wide regulation. The proposal would prevent the agency from complying with the mandate of the Government-wide regulation that management change such schedules as soon as it becomes aware of the need to do so.

ORDER DISMISSING PETITION FOR REVIEW

This case is before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2424.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations on a petition for review of negotiability issues filed by the Union. For the reasons indicated below, it has been determined that the Union's petition for review was untimely filed and must be dismissed on that basis.

On August 30, 1985, the Union submitted proposals regarding the Employee Assessment Plan (EAP) to the Agency in preparation for upcomimg negotiations. By memorandum of September 16, 1985, the Agency notified the Union that most of its proposals appeared to be nonnegotiable. In an attachment included with that memorandum, the Agency indicated each proposal which it considered to be nonnegotiable and the reasons therefore. After the parties resumed negotiations on September 19, 1985, the Union agreed to set aside the proposals which the Agency stated were nonnegotiable and complete negotiations on other issues. On September 20, 1985, the parties entered into a Memorandum of Understanding whereby the parties agreed to a revised EAP. That agreement provided that negotiations could be reopened to resolve those areas regarding the EAP that still remained in dispute between the parties.

On October 3, 1985, the Union requested a written declaration of nonnegotiability from the Agency in respect to its disputed proposals. On October 4, 1985, the Agency sent a memorandum to the Union, requesting that the Union refer to the September 16th memorandum, and more specifically, to the attachment thereto which described the proposals that the Agency had previously indicated were nonnegotiable. On October 7, 1985, the Union requested clarification of the October 3, 1985, statement of nonnegotiability, stating that the September 16th Memorandum was defective under section 2424.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. In a memorandum dated October 28, 1985, the Agency reaffirmed its position previously stated in the October 4, 1985, letter. The Union then filed the instant negotiability appeal on November 7, 1985, or within 15 days from the date of service of the Agency's letter of October 28, 1985.

It is well established that a petition for review must be filed within 15 days from the date of service on the Union of an Agency nonnegotiability allegation. See, e.g., National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 226 and U.S. Department of Agriculture, Food and Nutrition Service, 15 FLRA 97 (1984). While the Union's November 7, 1985, petition was filed within 15 days from the date of service of the Agency's letter of October 28, 1985, the record indicates that the Agency's letter merely reaffirmed its earlier allegation of October 4, 1985.[1] The Authority has held that where a petition for review is filed concerning an agency's allegation of nonnegotiability which is only a restatement of a prior allegation, and no changes in the substance or language of the proposal have been effectuated during the period between allegations, the petition seeks review of the earlier allegation. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2303 and Metropolitan Washington Airports, Federal Aviation Administration, U.S. Department of Transportation, 17 FLRA No. 8 (1985). In this case, the Union provides no indication that it effected any changes in the contested proposals between October 4 and 28, 1985. Accordingly, the Union's petition seeks review of the October 4 allegation. Since, as noted previously, the Union's petition was not filed with the Authority until November 7, 1985, it is outside the time limits set forth in section 2424.3 of the Authority's regulations and, is, therefore, untimely.

[1] The Union's contention that the Agency's October 4, 1985 letter did not constitute an allegation of nonnegotiability since it referred to the September 16th memorandum that was defective must be rejected. Here, in response to a written request by the Union for an allegation of nonnegotiability, the Agency stated in its October 4, 1985 letter that the proposals that it deemed to be nonnegotiable were outlined in the attachment to the September 16th memorandum. Thus, the record clearly shows that the Agency's October 4th letter set forth its statement of the nonnegotiability of the disputed proposals by referring to the attachment to the September 16th memorandum.

Accordingly, as the Union's petition for review was untimely filed, and apart from other considerations, it is hereby dismissed.[2]

DECISION AND ORDER ON REMAND

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority pursuant to a remand from the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The sole question presented is whether payment by an agency of travel expenses and per diem allowances incurred by employees using official time in the conduct of labor-management relations is within the duty to bargain under the Federal Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute).

In a previous decision in this case, National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 9 FLRA 629 (1982), the Authority found the following Union proposal to be within the duty to bargain.

> The employer agrees to pay the travel expenses incurred by employees while using official time available under the terms of this agreement.

The original finding of negotiability was premised upon the conclusion that where "official time" had been granted by the Statute, or negotiated between the parties, employees using it are on "official business" and thus, under law, are entitled to travel expenses and per diem allowances. See Interpretation and Guidance, 2 FLRA 265 (1979). That interpretation was rejected by the Supreme Court in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983). In footnote 17 at p. 107 of its decision the Supreme Court stated that, "unions may presumably negotiate for such payments in collective bargaining as they do in the private sector." In light of the decision, the Authority requested, and the Court of Appeals ordered, remand of the instant case. Upon remand, the Authority issued a "Notice of Reopened Proceedings and Request for Statements of Position" in which it solicited a statement of position from each of the parties as to the effect of the Supreme Court's decision on the negotiability of the above proposal.

II. Positions of the Parties

As explained by the Union, the proposal seeks agreement as to what categories of union activities shall be construed to be in the primary interest of the Government and, hence, "official business" for purposes of reimbursement of incidental and otherwise proper travel expenses. Once such a determination is made the Union acknowledges that "of course, all the specific Travel Regulations apply."

The Agency contends that the proposal is not within the duty to bargain for three independent reasons:

a. It does not concern conditions of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute because payment of travel expenses is specifically provided for by law;

b. it is inconsistent with Federal law and Government-wide regulations;

c. it interferes with its right to determine its budget under section 7106(a)(1).

III. Analysis

A. "Condition of Employment"

The proposal clearly involves a condition of employment not excepted from the definition thereof. Representation of employees in matters concerning their employment affects the "working conditions" of those employees. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604 (1980)(Union Proposal II), enf'd as to other matters sub nom. Department of Defense v. FLRA, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982). For relevant private sector decisions similarly finding such expenses to be conditions of employment, see Midstate Telephone Corporation v. NLRB, 706 F.2d 401 (2nd Cir. 1983) and Axelson, Inc. v. NLRB, 599 F.2d 91 (5th Cir. 1979).

Whether travel expenses incurred in the conduct of labor-management relations activity are payable from federal funds is not specifically addressed by the Statute or the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701, et seq. The Statute and its legislative history are silent on this subject. Indeed if it were not, the present litigation might well be unnecessary. While the Travel Expense Act governs the general subject of payment of travel expenses for employees traveling on "official business," it does not specifically address payment for travel engaged in while conducting labor- management activity. Thus the Agency's contention that the proposal involves a matter specifically provided for by Federal statute so as to be excepted from the definition of conditions of employment must be rejected.

B. "Inconsistent with Federal Law or Government-Wide Rules or Regulations"

The thrust of the Agency's argument is that because no law specifically provides for such payment of expenses, it must be inferred that such payments are precluded.[1] It further argues that the Federal Travel Regulations (hereinafter FTRs) limit payment to those travel expenses which are essential to the transacting of official business, and that the granting of "official time" does not confer "official business" status on travel undertaken while on official time.[2] It contends that a determination as to whether an employee is on "official business" is dependent on the particular facts involved in each individual situation. Consequently, such a determination is not a matter of "unlimited discretion" on the part of the Agency.[3]

[1] To the extent the Agency contends that the expenditure of funds to pay the travel expenses and per diem allowances of Agency employees using official time to conduct labor-management relations is unsupported by a congressional appropriation of funds, the claim is without merit. In September 1979, Congress appropriated funds for the "necessary expenses" of the Customs Service for fiscal year 1980. Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government Appropriations Act of 1980, Pub. L. No. 96-74, 93 Stat. 559, 560. A line item for "travel and transportation of persons" was included in the Customs Service's budget estimate for that fiscal year. Budget of the United States Government, Fiscal Year 1980, Appendix, at p. 762. Subsequent to fiscal year 1980 the activities of the Customs Service, including travel of employees, have been carried out under continuing resolutions. See, e.g., Continuing Resolution of 1984, Pub. L. No. 98-151, 97 Stat. 964. Such congressional appropriation acts, which presumably have supported travel by employees representing the Agency in connection with labor relations activities, also would support the disbursement of funds for such travel by Agency employees as may occur under the Union's proposal in this case.

2/ The FTRs have been held to be Government-wide rules or regulations within the meaning of the Statute. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 and U.S. Army Engineer District, Kansas City, Missouri, 13 FLRA 23 (1983).

3/ The Agency incorporates by reference guidance issued by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) that a determination that specific travel related to union activities is in the primary interest of the Government and, hence, constitutes "official business" is a decision reserved solely and exclusively to agencies. FPM Letter 711-162 (Subject: Payment of Travel and Per Diem Expenses for Employee Negotiators Representing Unions in Collective Bargaining) dated January 19, 1984. The Authority notes that such guidance is merely that and is not binding on the various federal agencies. See National Treasury Employees Union v. Devine, 587 F. Supp. 960, 963 (D.D.C. 1984); see also Federal/Postal/Retiree Coalition v. Devine, 751 F.2d 1424 (D.C. Cir. 1985).

The provisions of the Travel Expense Act and the FTRs are set forth, in relevant part, in appendices A and B. Briefly summarized the statutory provisions state that federal employees traveling on "official business" are entitled to appropriate expenses and allowances. The regulations in turn limit such reimbursement to that "which is necessary to accomplish the purposes of Government effectively and economically."

In exercising his authority to render decisions on questions involving payments and vouchers pursuant to 31 U.S.C. 3529 (1982 ed.), the Comptroller General of the United States administers and interprets the Travel Expense Act. Neither the Travel Expense Act nor the regulations specifically define the term "official business." As a general proposition the Comptroller General has ruled that payment is authorized where the activity involved was sufficiently in the interest of the United States so as to be regarded as official business. 44 Comp. Gen. 189 (1964).

In the labor-relations context, the Comptroller General has applied a similar standard. Prior to passage of the Statute, an agency was not precluded from making payment of travel expenses and per diem allowances to union representatives upon a determination that it served the convenience of the agency or was otherwise in the primary interest of the Government. BATF, supra, pp. 100-01 n. 11 and 107 n. 17 citing 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966).[4]

Thus determinations concerning whether to make such payments are within the discretionary administrative authority of an agency. The Authority has consistently held that insofar as an agency has discretion regarding a matter affecting conditions of employment it is obligated under the Statute to exercise that discretion through negotiation unless precluded by regulatory or statutory provisions.

[4] Relying upon the principles enunciated by the Comptroller General in that opinion, the Federal Labor Relations Council, established by E.O. 11491 to administer labor-management relations in the Federal service, held a proposal seeking travel costs for certain contract administration activities to be within the duty to bargain under the provisions of that Executive Order. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, Region VII, 5 FLRC 250 (1977).

National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 748, 759-60 (1980). Moreover, nothing in the Statute limits this duty to matters over which an agency has total discretion. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 8 FLRA 409 (1982). In the instant case, the Agency has not cited any legal or regulatory provision, nor is any apparent, which would absolutely prohibit it from exercising through negotiations the discretion which it possesses to determine whether, and under what circumstances, travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business.[5/]

The Union has acknowledged that payment of any travel expenses flowing from this proposal, if agreed upon, would be subject to the provisions of the FTRs.[6/] Hence, we conclude the proposal would not require the Agency to authorize either specific travel or expenses which do not comport with the regulatory requirements and restrictions. The proposal was not intended to, and could not, require the Agency to use specific authorization procedures and practices relating to actual travel which conflicted with the FTRs. It would not foreclose individual determinations regarding the propriety under the FTRs of authorizing particular travel and expenses. To the extent that case-by-case determinations are required under law and regulation, this proposal would not be inconsistent with such procedures. Cf. U.S. Department of Justice v. FLRA, 727 F.2d 481, 489-90 (5th Cir. 1984) (wherein the Court held in the circumstances presented that law and regulations required case-by-case determination as to method or means of travel used by employees). Thus the Agency's contention that the proposal is inconsistent with Federal law, and Government-wide regulations must be rejected.

It is noted that where a determination as to whether something is in the Government's interest is within an agency's administrative discretion, such determination is subject to bargaining. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3525 and U.S. Department of Justice, Board of Immigration Appeals, 10 FLRA 61, 65 (1982).

C. "Conflicts with the Right to Determine (the Agency's) Budget"

The Authority has previously held that interference with the right of an agency to determine its budget under section 7106 insulates the negotiation process in two fundamental respects. First, an agency cannot be required to negotiate particular budgetary matters relating to the determination of the programs and operations to be included in its estimation of proposed expenditures and the amounts required to fund them. Second, where an agency makes a substantial demonstration that a significant and unavoidable increase in costs, not offset by compensating benefits, will result, an otherwise negotiable proposal may be found to violate this section 7106(a) right of the Agency. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, supra, at page 608.

The Agency acknowledges that the Union Proposal does not expressly require that a line item be added to the Agency's budget and tacitly concedes that it would not prescribe an amount to be allocated in the Agency's budget for programs or operations. The Agency argues (without specific support) that the proposal would entail significant and unavoidable costs which are not offset by compensating benefits to the Agency. It only claims generally that the significance and unavoidability of increased costs attendant to the payment of travel expenses resulting from labor-management relations activities has been "officially recognized."[7] a. A report in Government Employees Relations Report (GERR) regarding an OPM estimate that payment of travel and per diem for union negotiators on official time under section 7131(a) of the Statute would cost 15 sample agencies $2 million per year. GERR (BNA) No. 852 at 11 (1980).

No specific information or estimates of the financial impact of the proposal have been presented. Based on this record, the Agency's poorly supported assertion cannot provide a ground for concluding that there is a substantial demonstration that the proposal would result in a significant and unavoidable increase in costs. Therefore, its allegation that the proposal is inconsistent with its right to determine its budget cannot be sustained. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 6 FLRA 423 (1981), aff'd mem. sub nom. Office of Personnel Management v. FLRA, 706 F.2d 1229 (D.C. Cir. 1983).

IV. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, the Authority finds that the Union Proposal concerns a condition of employment which is within the Agency's administrative discretion, and is not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. Therefore, it is within the duty to bargain.8/ In making

c. The statement of the Supreme Court in BATF at 464 U.S. 100 that:

> Under the 1962 Executive Order establishing the first federal labor relations program, the decision whether to pay union representatives for the time spent in collective bargaining was left within the discretion of their employing agency, apparently on the ground that, without some control by management, the length of such sessions could impose too great a burden on government business. [Citation and footnote omitted.]

8/ In finding this proposal within the duty to bargain the Authority makes no judgment as to its merits.

this finding, it is noted that while the Agency must bargain in good faith over the disputed proposal it is under no obligation to agree to this particular formulation. Consideration by management of the consequences of the proposal are a legitimate aspect of the bargaining process. Should matters of concern to the Agency, such as perceived potential for increased expenditures, prevent the parties from reaching agreement, such considerations could be presented tc the Federal Service Impasses Panel in a proceeding pursuant to section 7119 of the Statute.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning the Union Proposal.

APPENDIX A

Relevant Provisions of
5 U.S.C. §§ 5701 et seq.

§ 5702. Per diem; employee traveling on official business

(a) Under regulations prescribed under section 5707 of this title, an employee while traveling on official business away from his designated post of duty, or in the case of an individual described under section 5703 of this title, his home or regular place of business, is entitled to (1) a per diem allowance for travel inside the continental United States at a rate not to exceed $50, and (2) a per diem allowance for travel outside the continental United States, that may not exceed the rate established by the President, or his designee, for each locality where travel is to be performed. For travel consuming less than a full day, such rate may be allocated proportionately.

(c) Under regulations prescribed under section 5707 of this title, the Administrator of General Services, or his designee, may prescribe conditions under which an employee may be reimbursed for the actual and necessary expenses of official travel when the maximum per diem allowance would be less than these expenses, except that such reimbursement shall not exceed $75 for each day in a travel status within the continental United States when the per diem otherwise allowable is determined to be inadequate (1) due to the unusual circumstances of the travel assignment, or (2) for travel to high rate geographical areas designated as such in regulations prescribed under section 5707 of this title.

§ 5704. Mileage and related allowances

(a) Under regulations prescribed under section 5707 of this title, an employee who is engaged on official business for the Government is entitled to not in excess of--

(1) 20 cents a mile for the use of a privately owned motorcycle;

(2) 25 cents a mile for the use of a privately owned automobile; or

(3) 45 cents a mile for the use of a privately owned airplane;

instead of actual expenses of transportation when that mode of transportation is authorized or approved as more advantageous to the Government. A determination of such advantage is not required when payment on a mileage basis is limited to the cost of travel by common carrier including per diem. Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, in any case in which an employee who is engaged on official business for the Government chooses to use a privately owned vehicle in lieu of a Government vehicle, payment on a mileage basis is limited to the cost of travel by a Government vehicle.

(b) In addition to the mileage allowance authorized under subsection (a) of this section, the employee may be reimbursed for--

(1) parking fees;

(2) ferry fees;

(3) bridge, road, and tunnel costs; and

(4) airplane landing and tie-down fees.

§ 5706. Allowable travel expenses

Except as otherwise permitted by this subchapter or by statutes relating to members of the uniformed services, only actual and necessary travel expenses may be allowed to an individual holding employment or appointment under the United States.

§ 5707. Regulations and reports-

(a) The Administrator of General Services shall prescribe regulations necessary for the administration of this subchapter, except that the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts shall prescribe such regulations with respect to official travel by employees of the judicial branch of the Government.

APPENDIX B

1-1.3. General rules.

b. Reimbursable expenses. Traveling expenses which will be reimbursed are confined to those expenses essential to the transacting of official business.

1-1.4. Authorization of travel.

a. Travel policy. It is the policy of the Government that agencies shall authorize only that travel which is necessary to accomplish the purposes of the Government effectively and economically.

b. Agency responsibilities.

(1) Except as otherwise provided by law, all travel shall be either authorized or approved by the head of the agency or by an official to whom such authority has been delegated. Ordinarily, a travel authorization shall be issued before the incurrence of the expenses. Agencies shall prescribe procedures for travel situations where it is not practical or possible to issue a written authorization in advance.

(2) Agency heads shall communicate the Government's travel policy (see a, above) to all travel authorizing officials at all levels within their respective agencies and establish controls to ensure that only travel that is essential to the purposes of the Government and for accomplishment of the agency's mission is authorized or approved.

(3) Travel authorizing officials shall authorize or approve only that travel necessary to accomplish the agency mission in the most effective and economical manner. Authorizing officials should be aware of travel plans, including plans to take annual leave in conjunction with travel, and shall ensure appropriate consideration of the need for the travel, the use of travel substitutes (i.e., mail, teleconferencing, etc.), and the most cost effective routing and means of accomplishing travel. Each employee's travel shall be authorized separately under specific guidelines provided in 1-1.5.

1-1.5. Guidelines for issuing travel authorizations. The travel policies and practices of each agency shall reflect, but not be limited to, the guidelines stated herein.

a. Types and use of travel authorizations. General or blanket travel authorizations for entire agencies or groups of employees shall not be used. To ensure adequate managerial and supervisory attention to the need for all travel, each employee's travel shall be authorized separately under one of the following types of travel authorization:

(1) Unlimited open authorization. This type of authorization allows an employee to travel for any purpose without further authorization. Unlimited open authorizations shall be issued only for department or agency heads, their deputies, or other principal agency officials as the agency head or deputy may designate, and managers of major subunits where no supervisor is present.

(2) Limited open authorization. This type of authorization allows an employee to travel without further authorization under certain specified conditions (i.e., travel to specific geographical area(s), for specific purpose(s), subject to trip cost ceilings, or for specific periods of time). Limited open authorizations may be provided for employees whose duties require frequent repetitive travel. Such authorizations, however, should be reviewed and revalidated at least quarterly and should include realistic limitations on purpose(s), geographic area(s), number of trip(s), trip duration, and costs.

(3) Trip-by-trip authorization. This type of authorization allows an individual or group of individuals to take one or more specific trips and shall include the specific purpose, itinerary, and estimated costs. Travel not covered in an unlimited or limited open authorization (see (1) and (2), above) shall be separately authorized on a trip-by-trip basis.

b. Levels of approval and requirements for special purpose travel. Due to the relatively high costs associated with certain kinds of travel, such travel shall be authorized only on a trip-by-trip basis and reviewed at a level of authority sufficient to provide policy approval. The types of travel covered by this requirement are indicated in (1) thru (3), below.

Authorization of travel for purposes other than those listed in (1) thru (3), below, should be delegated to the lowest management level which has responsibility for both program accomplishment and obligation or commitment of funds.

(1) Conferences, meetings, and training sessions. Travel for conference and meeting attendance and training sessions shall be authorized on a trip-by-trip basis. When authorizing travel for conference and meeting attendance, the approving official shall ensure that the number of attendees from the agency is necessary and justified. In addition, the need for conferences and meetings for which total travel and per diem estimates exceed $5,000 shall be certified by a level of authority sufficient to provide policy approval as designated by the head of the agency scheduling the conference or meeting.

c. Purpose(s) of travel. Each travel authorization and the associated travel voucher(s) (see 1-11.5g) shall specify clearly the purpose(s) of the travel. For uniformity in establishing travel purposes on authorizations, agencies should use travel purpose categories that conform to the extent possible to those listed in appendix 1-B.

d. Cost estimates. Travel authorizations shall include estimates of the cost of the travel. Both unlimited and limited open authorizations shall also include an estimate of the travel costs to be incurred over the period covered by the authorization. Agencies shall use these estimates to obligate the funds necessary to carry out that particular travel in order to improve travel budgetary controls. (For advance of funds for the estimated costs of travel, see 1-10.3.)

1-2.1. Expenses payable as transportation. Transportation expenses which the Government may pay either direct [sic] or by reimbursement include fares, rental fees, mileage payments, and any expenses incident to transportation such as baggage transfer; official telegraph, telephone, radio, and cable messages in connection with items classed as transportation; steamer chairs, steamer cushions, and steamer rugs at customary rates actually charged; staterooms on steamers; and other expenses set forth in 1-2 through 1-6 and 1-9.

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Erwin B. Ellmann filed by the Agency pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Agency has also filed a request for a stay of the award under part 2429 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. For the reasons stated below, it has been determined that the exceptions and the request for a stay must be dismissed as interlocutory.

According to the Arbitrator, the parties agreed that the issue to be resolved by him was whether the Detroit Teleservice Center (the Activity) violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement by eliminating free-of-charge parking for some employees when the Activity moved to a new location; and, if so, what should the appropriate remedy be? In the instant award the Arbitrator essentially found that the Activity had violated the parties' agreement. However, the Arbitrator expressly deferred any award as to an appropriate remedy until the parties had an opportunity to explore various possibilities. In that latter regard, the Arbitrator only directed the parties to consider those possibilities and to notify him of the results within a set period of time. The Arbitrator further advised the parties that if they reached agreement he would, if the parties so desired, review their agreement with the object of confirming it in his award; and if they did not reach an agreement, they should be prepared to submit additional evidence and argument at a further hearing on this matter.

Section 2429.11 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides: "The Authority and the General Counsel ordinarily will not consider interlocutory appeals." That is, the Authority ordinarily will not consider an appeal until a final decision has been rendered on the entire proceeding.

In this case, it is clear that the Arbitrator has not rendered a final award on the entire dispute before him. Rather, as indicated above, the Arbitrator issued an interim award deciding the first part of the issue presented, i.e., whether the Activity violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement, and expressly deferred final disposition as to the remedy in the dispute. Thus, the Agency's exceptions are considered interlocutory and the facts and circumstances are not such as to warrant review of the exceptions at this time.

Accordingly, since the Agency's exceptions are interlocutory and Authority review is not warranted under the circumstances, the exceptions and the request for a stay are hereby dismissed. However, the dismissal is without prejudice to the renewal of any of the Agency's contentions in exceptions duly filed with the Authority after a final award is rendered by the Arbitrator.

For the Authority.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of two provisions of a negotiated agreement disapproved by the Agency head under section 7114(c) of the Statute. The first provision, while important, can be disposed of by application of previous Authority precedent whereas the second provision raises significant issues for which the Authority adopts a new analytical framework.

II. Background

The Authority's analysis of the second provision at issue in this case (cited in its entirety below), presents an opportunity for fundamental reevaluation of previous Authority precedent. This reexamination is necessitated by the holding of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 702 F.2d 1183 (D.C. Cir. 1983), reversing and remanding American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 and Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 91 (1981).

In deciding that case the Court rejected the so-called "direct interference" test previously applied by the Authority in evaluating the negotiability of matters described as "appropriate arrangements" under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. While that Court had previously sustained the application of that test as to "procedures" under section 7106(b)(2)[1], it had not had an opportunity to address its applicability to "appropriate arrangements." In rejecting "direct interference" as an analytical device in section 7106(b)(3) cases, the Court enunciated a standard which requires an analysis of whether "excessive interference" with a right reserved to management would result from implementation of the proposal. The Court stated that:

> Undoubtedly, some arrangements may be inappropriate because they impinge on management prerogatives to an excessive degree. . . . Beyond that, we decline to speculate as to what the word "appropriate" may lawfully be interpreted to exclude. Its precise content is for the Authority to determine in the first instance, based on its knowledgeable estimation of the competing practical needs of federal managers and union representatives.

Since the date of that decision the Authority has applied the D.C. Circuit rule and rationale only to cases remanded to it by that Court.[2] We have not, as a general matter of law, embraced that reasoning in deciding pending negotiability cases. Today we adopt that test as the Authority's standard. Additionally, we articulate factors to be considered in arriving at a determination of whether or not a given proposal is appropriate as an arrangement and therefore negotiable, or inappropriate as an arrangement because it excessively interferes with management prerogatives, and is therefore nonnegotiable.

III. Provision 1

> Section 3. When a change of work schedule or hours of work resulting from other than mission requirements is necessary, the employer agrees to notify the union and the employees at least 7 days in advance. Such notices will be given by publishing announcements in sufficient time so as to give adequate notice to all employees. With regard to employees who are absent from duty on leave, notice will be mailed to them by their supervisor at their listed emergency notification address. If an employee is not given notice of any such change and reports to duty based on the superseded schedule, he will be retained in a "work status" and assigned appropriate work for that day.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency asserts that Provision 1 is nonnegotiable because it conflicts with 5 CFR 610.121, a Government-wide regulation. The Union argues that the provision is merely a renewal of a previously approved provision and that it does not conflict with the Government-wide regulation.

B. Analysis

Provision 1 would require the Agency to provide the Union and unit employees seven (7) days advance notice whenever a change in employee work schedules is necessary. In this respect, the provision at issue has substantially the same effect as Provision 1 in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2484 and U.S. Army Garrison, Fort Detrick, Maryland, 17 FLRA No. 106 (1985), appeal docketed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2484 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, No. 85-1405 (D.C. Cir. July 3, 1985). The provision at issue in that case required the agency to provide two (2) weeks notice to employees of any change in work schedules. The Authority determined that the provision was outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute because it was inconsistent with an applicable Government-wide regulation, 5 CFR 610.121(b)(2). In particular, the Authority found that the proposal, by requiring at least two weeks notice to employees of a change in work schedules, would prevent the agency from complying with the mandate of the Government-wide regulation that management change such schedules as soon as it becomes aware of the need to do so. Just as in Fort Detrick, the National Guard civilian technicians covered by this provision, are covered by 5 CFR 610.121. (See 5 CFR 610.101, 550.101.)

C. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth in the Fort Detrick decision, Provision 1 is outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute because it is inconsistent with an applicable Government-wide regulation. In this connection, the Union's argument that the provision is a renewal of previous contract language is not relevant.

IV. Provision 2

> Section 7. a. When the specific position, in an activity, from which an employee has been demoted through reduction in force (RIF) becomes vacant and is being filled, the demoted employee will be considered for repromotion noncompetitively to the position subject to paragraph b., below.
> b. A basis for nonpromotion will be an unsatisfactory performance rating which is documented in the employee's OPF, or that his work either before or after demotion by reduction in force was not at an acceptable level of competence.
> c. If more than one employee meets the criteria contained in a and b above the employee who possessed the highest > retention standing at the time he/she was changed to a lower grade will be promoted.

> d. All employees previously demoted without personal cause, misconduct or inefficiency, will receive special consideration for repromotion.

By its terms and as interpreted by both the Union and the Agency, which interpretation is adopted by the Authority, Provision 2 would provide that when management decides to fill a vacant position from which employees have been demoted in a reduction-in-force (RIF) and there are two or more such demoted employees who are candidates for the position, management would select the candidate who has the highest retention standing. National Guard RIF regulations provide for employees to be released from their tenure group based upon their relative retention standing. Thus, the employee who has the highest relative retention standing among competing employees would be released, if he or she is reached for release, after employees with lower standing. The effect of the provision, therefore, would be to require the repromotion of the employee with the highest relative retention standing before employees with lower standing.[3]

The parties apparently agree that the provision would not require the selection of an employee who is not qualified or does not possess the compatible military grade for the position. Since the position for which the employee with the highest retention standing would be selected is the same position from which he or she had been demoted through no fault of the employee, that person would obviously be qualified and possess the requisite military grade for the vacancy. This distinguishes Provision 2 from Union Proposals 3 and 6 in Association of Civilian Technicians, Montana Air Chapter and Department of the Air Force, Montana Air National Guard, Headquarters 120th Fighter Interceptor Group (ADTAC), 20 FLRA No. 85 (1985). In that case, the Authority held that Union Proposals 3 and 6 were contrary to law, 32 U.S.C. § 709(b), because they required management to place civilian technicians in positions without regard to compatibility of military grade.

[3] For a detailed analysis of retention standing for National Guard employees, see Association of Civilian Technicians, Pennsylvania State Council and the Adjutant General, Department of Military Affairs, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 3 FLRA 50 (1980); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2953 and National Guard Bureau, Office of the Adjutant General, Nebraska, 7 FLRA 87 (1981), affirmed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2953 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 730 F.2d 1534 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the provision, by mandating the selection of the repromotion eligible employee with the highest retention standing, violates its right under section 7106(a)(2)(C) to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source. The Union argues to the contrary, citing the decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in AFGE, Local 2782, that the provision constitutes an "appropriate arrangement" within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute, for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management's rights.[4] The Agency's response to that argument is that only proposals which "indirectly affect" management rights are negotiable as appropriate arrangements under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

B. Analysis

1. Adoption of the Excessive Interference Test

The issue before the Authority in determining the negotiability of the second provision is whether the locally agreed-upon arrangement for employees demoted without fault interferes with the exercise of management's rights under section 7106(a) so as to be rendered inappropriate for negotiation under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. As stated at the outset of this decision, the Authority finds the considerations addressed by the District of Columbia Circuit in AFGE, Local 2782 to be applicable here and the Authority will apply the excessive interference test enunciated therein both in this decision and in future decisions analyzing appropriate arrangement issues.[5] By so doing, we reject the Agency's argument that only proposals which indirectly affect management rights are negotiable.

[4] In its Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, 14 FLRA 801 (1984), the Authority held that, even though the proposal at issue constituted an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3), it nevertheless was outside the duty to bargain because it was inconsistent with certain provisions of the Federal Personnel Manual which were applicable Government-wide regulations. The Authority reaffirmed that conclusion in its Decision and Order on Motion for Reconsideration (July 11, 1985). However, those provisions of the Federal Personnel Manual are not applicable to National Guard civilian technicians and, thus, are not at issue in the instant case.

In its decision in that case the Court reasoned:

> [t]hat an arrangement proposed under paragraph (b)(3) of § 7106 is not ipso facto invalidated by conflicting with paragraph (a)(2)(C) [a "management right"] is evident from the prologue of subsection (b), which states that "[n]othing in this section shall preclude any agency and any labor organization from negotiating" over the specified items. The prologue of subsection (a) makes the same point, declaring that all management prerogatives it contains (including those in paragraph (a)(2)(C)) are "[s]ubject to subsection (b) of this section." . . .
> The conclusion is inavoidable that what was intended was an exception to the otherwise governing management prerogative requirements of subsection (a). . . .

[5] In adopting the D.C. Circuit's rationale, the Authority notes the analysis applied in United States Air Force, Headquarters, Warner Robins Air Force Logistics Command, Robins Air Force Base, Georgia v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 727 F.2d 1502 (11th Cir. 1984), reversing American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 987 and Headquarters, Warner Robins Air Force Logistics Command, Robins Air Force Base, Georgia, 8 FLRA 667 (1982), wherein the 11th Circuit cited with approval the District of Columbia Circuit test enunciated in AFGE, Local 2782, but held that the proposal at issue in that case did not constitute an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) because it "substantively infringed" on the exercise of management's rights.

> The portions of legislative history most precisely directed to the point at issue here support the interpretation we have adopted. . . .
> Undoubtedly, some arrangements may be inappropriate because they impinge upon management prerogatives to an excessive degree. . . .
> [T]he Authority is free to determine whether the union's proposal, albeit not invalid simply because it contravenes . . . management rights, is nonetheless inappropriate.

702 F.2d 1185-1188. [Emphasis in original.]

In this and future cases where the Authority addresses a management allegation that a union proposal of appropriate arrangements is nonnegotiable because it conflicts with management rights described in section 7106(a) or (b)(1), the Authority will consider whether such an arrangement is appropriate for negotiation within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) or, whether it is inappropriate because it excessively interferes with the exercise of management's rights.

In making that determination, the Authority will first examine the record in each case to ascertain as a threshold question whether a proposal is in fact intended to be an arrangement for employees adversely affected by management's exercise of its rights. In order to address this threshold question, the union should identify the management right or rights claimed to produce the alleged adverse effects, the effects or foreseeable effects on employees which flow from the exercise of those rights, and how those effects are adverse. In other words, a union must articulate how employees will be detrimentally affected by management's actions and how the matter proposed for bargaining is intended to address or compensate for the actual or anticipated adverse effects of the exercise of the management right or rights.

Once the Authority has concluded that a proposal is in fact intended as an arrangement, the Authority will then determine whether the arrangement is appropriate or whether it is inappropriate because it excessively interferes. This will be accomplished, as suggested by the D.C. Circuit, by weighing the competing practical needs of employees and managers. In balancing these needs, the Authority will consider such factors as:

> (1) What is the nature and extent of the impact experienced by the adversely affected employees, that is, what conditions of employment are affected and to what degree?
> (2) To what extent are the circumstances giving rise to the adverse affects within an employee's control?
> For example, compare AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, Decision and Order on Remand, 14 FLRA 801 (1984), (proposal applies to employees demoted through no fault of their own) with National Labor Relations Board Union and National Labor Relations Board, Office of the General Counsel, 18 FLRA No. 42 (1985) (proposal concerned employees management proposed to demote or terminate due to demonstrated inability or unwillingness to perform acceptably).
> (3) What is the nature and extent of the impact on management's ability to deliberate and act pursuant to its statutory rights, that is, what management right is affected; is more than one right affected; what is the precise limitation imposed by the proposed arrangement on management's exercise of its reserved discretion or to what extent is managerial judgment preserved?
> See, for example, Association of Civilian Technicians, Montana Air Chapter and Department of the Air Force, Montana Air National Guard, Headquarters 120th Fighter Interceptor Group (ADTAC), 20 FLRA No. 85 (1985) (Proposal 1) (proposal which would have precluded management, regardless of circumstances, from obtaining additional personnel with skills unavailable in the unit held to excessively interfere with management rights).

> (4) Is the negative impact on management's rights disproportionate to the benefits to be derived from the proposed arrangement?
> See, for example, Montana Air National Guard, supra, (Proposal 1) (harm to agency's mission balanced against uncertain benefits of the proposal to employees).
> (5) What is the effect of the proposal on effective and efficient government operations, that is, what are the benefits or burdens involved?

These considerations are not intended to constitute an all-inclusive list. As frequently noted in the opinions of various judicial and quasi-judicial entities, an adjudicative body must consider the totality of facts and circumstances in each case before it. Additional considerations will be applied where relevant and appropriate. Inasmuch as a ritualistic or mechanistic approach is neither suggested, nor contemplated, the Authority will expect the parties to cases of this nature filed in the future to address any and all relevant considerations as specifically as possible.

2. The Test As Applied to The Provision at Issue

The provision relates solely to employees who have been demoted through reduction-in-force. Such actions have extremely significant negative impact on affected employees. Demotion, even though no fault of one's own, causes eventual loss of grade, pay, and attendant benefits. Demotion through RIF frequently results in the employee being placed in a position which requires skills, knowledges, and abilities less than those required in his or her previous position with concomitant lack of job satisfaction. Next to removal from the Federal service, it is difficult to imagine any action with more severe impact than a demotion. Such actions with respect to Federal employees generally are considered of a magnitude sufficient to trigger the limited subject matter jurisdiction of the Merit Systems Protection Board. See 5 CFR 351.901.

By its very definition a reduction-in-force cannot legally be based on matters personal to the employee and hence within his control. See, generally, Technician Personnel Manual (TPM) 351. Compare as to Federal employees generally, 5 CFR 351.201(a)(2); see especially, Losure v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 2 MSPB 361 (1981).

The management right affected by the provision (to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source) is an important one. However, it must be remembered that the qualifications of the employee to be placed in the position under the provision are unquestioned. Indeed, the employee must have previously performed the duties of the position acceptably in order for the provision to apply. No other management right is affected by the provision, and it is significant that the provision in no way attempts to intrude on management's underlying decision concerning whether or not to fill a vacancy. Nor can it be construed to require management to take any affirmative act concerning the organization, management, or assignment of its workforce in order to carry out its mission and determine how work shall be performed.

Reductions-in-force for National Guard technicians under the National Guard regulations, like reductions-in-force for Federal employees generally, are not premised solely on seniority as that concept has emerged in private sector labor relations. To the contrary, reductions-in-force of National Guard technicians are governed by an intricate regulatory scheme which recognizes and quantifies the performance of employees in both their civilian and military capacities as well as their length of service.[6] Thus, in requiring that "the employee who possessed the highest retention standing . . . be promoted," the provision on its face will further, rather than impede, the purposes of effective and efficient government operation. Accordingly, to require selection of the employee with the highest retention standing is to do nothing more than to require selection of the person who but for the depth of the RIF would have been, and would still be, encumbering the position. Any "burden" on management in these circumstances is insubstantial in comparison to the detriment originally suffered, and benefit later obtained, by the affected employee(s).

C. Conclusion

The Authority finds, therefore, that Provision 2 would not excessively interfere with management's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(C) and that the provision constitutes an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management's rights within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. See Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, 14 FLRA 801 (1984), affirmed in Decision and Order on Motion for Reconsideration (July 11, 1985).

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review as to Provision 1 be, and it hereby is, dismissed. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Agency shall rescind its disapproval of Provision 2, which was bargained on and agreed to by the parties at the local level.[7]

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Don Hamilton by the Union pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. For the reason stated below, it has been determined that the exceptions must be dismissed as untimely filed.

The Arbitrator's award is dated December 26, 1985, and appears to have been served on the parties by mail on the same day.

Under section 7122(b) of the Statute, as amended,1/ and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, as amended,2/ which amendments are applicable to exceptions pending or filed with the Authority on or after March 2, 1984, and under sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Rules and Regulations, which are also applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, any exceptions to the Arbitrator's award in this case had to be filed, that is, received in the national office of the Authority not later than the close of business on January 29, 1986. However, the exceptions were not filed with the Authority at its national office in Washington, D.C., until January 31, 1986.

Accordingly, as the Union's exceptions were untimely filed, they are hereby dismissed.

ORDER DISMISSING PETITION FOR REVIEW

This case is before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2424.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations on a petition for review of negotiability issues filed by the Union. For the reasons indicated below, it has been determined that the Union's petition for review was untimely filed and must be dismissed on that basis.

Under section 7117(c)(2) of the Statute and section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the time limit for filing a petition for review of negotiability issues is 15 days after service on the Union of the Agency's allegation that the duty to bargain in good faith does not extend to the matter proposed to be bargained.

The Agency's allegation of nonnegotiability in this case apparently was served on the Union by mail on January 2, 1986. Therefore, under section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations as well as sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 which also are applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, the petition for review had to be filed, that is, received in the national office of the Authority, no later than the close of business on January 22, 1986. However, the petition for review was not filed until February 3, 1986, and thus was untimely.

Accordingly, as the Union's petition for review was untimely filed, and apart from other considerations, it is hereby dismissed.

ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

This case is before the Authority on a request for reconsideration filed by the Union on December 23, 1985, seeking reconsideration of the Authority's Decision of November 22, 1985. For the reason set forth below, the request must be denied.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, effective September 10, 1981, provides in pertinent part:

> 2429.17 Reconsideration.
> After a final decision or order of the Authority has been issued, a party to the proceeding before the Authority who can establish in its moving papers extraordinary circumstances for so doing, may move for reconsideration of such final decision or order. The motion shall be filed within 10 days after service of the Authority's decision or order. . . .

The Authority's Decision was dated and served on the Union by mail on November 22, 1985. Therefore, under section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, and sections 2429.21 and 2429.22, which are also applicable to the computation of the time limit here involved, the Union's request for reconsideration was due in the national office of the Authority before the close of business on December 9, 1985. Since, as indicated above, the Union's request was not filed until December 23, 1985, it is clearly untimely and must be denied.

Accordingly, for the reason set forth above, and apart from other considerations, the Union's request for reconsideration is hereby denied.

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION

This matter is before the Authority on the union's motion for reconsideration of the Authority's decision of August 31, 1984, denying the union's exceptions to an arbitration award. The motion for reconsideration asserts in essence that reconsideration is warranted under section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules due to "extraordinary circumstances" arising from allegedly prohibited ex parte communications.[1] For the reasons discussed below, the union's motion has failed to demonstrate the existence of "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and therefore must be denied.

In its motion, the union alleges that one letter and two telephone conversations relating to this case while it was pending before the Authority constitute prohibited ex parte communications within the meaning of part 2414 of the Authority's Rules. Upon careful consideration of the union's motion, including an internal inquiry into the specific allegations made by the union, the Authority concludes that no prohibited ex parte communications occurred in this matter and reconsideration accordingly is not warranted.

> [A] party . . . who can establish extraordinary circumstances for so doing, may move for reconsideration of [an Authority] final decision or order. . . .

The Authority's regulations relating to ex parte communications are set forth in 5 C.F.R. Part 2414. The regulations prohibit interested persons from making, in "any agency proceedings subject to 5 U.S.C. § 557(a)," any prohibited ex parte communication to Authority officials or employees who are or may reasonably be expected to be involved in the decisional process of the proceeding. 5 C.F.R. § 2414.2(a) (1984). Under the Statute, Authority proceedings subject to 5 U.S.C. § 557(a) include only unfair labor practice cases. However, the Authority applies the same standards contained in the regulations to other cases which are presented to it for resolution, including cases in which the Authority is called upon to resolve exceptions to arbitrators' awards.

The term "ex parte communications" is defined in section 2414.3(b) as "an oral or written communication not on the public record with respect to which reasonable prior notice to all parties is not given, subject however, to provisions of §§ 2414.5 and 2414.6." Those sections, in turn, provide in relevant part that prohibited ex parte communications do not include oral or written requests for information solely with respect to the status of a proceeding (section 2414.6(b)), and also do not include written communications which are contemporaneously served by the communicator on all parties to the proceeding in accordance with the provisions of part 2429 of the Authority's Rules (section 2414.5(a)).

Applying these standards to the instant case, the Authority concludes that, contrary to the union's assertions, no prohibited ex parte communications occurred herein. Specifically, the union asserts that a letter dated August 24, 1984, from the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks to the then Chairman of the Authority constitutes a prohibited ex parte communication. This assertion is without merit because, apart from other considerations, the letter was contemporaneously served on the union in accordance with the provision of part 2429 of the Authority's Rules and therefore was not a prohibited ex parte communication under the rules set forth above. Moreover, the letter was not considered by the Authority in rendering its decision in the instant case. Thus, the letter provides no basis for granting reconsideration in the instant case.

Further, the union contends that two telephone calls from the Commissioner constitute prohibited ex parte communications. This contention is also without support. In August 1984, the Commissioner telephoned the Chairman and inquired into the status of the proceeding before the Authority. The Chairman referred the Commissioner to the Authority's Director of Case Management, who informed him that the case was under active consideration and was likely to be issued shortly. In neither conversation were the merits of the proceeding discussed. Consequently, the Authority finds that the telephone calls constituted oral requests for information solely with respect to the status of the proceeding and therefore were not prohibited ex parte communications under the rules set forth above. Thus, the union's assertion in this regard likewise provides no basis for granting reconsideration in the instant case.

Accordingly, as the union's motion fails to demonstrate the existence of "extraordinary circumstances" necessary to warrant the granting of reconsideration, the motion is hereby denied.[2]

DIGEST NOTES

Where a petition for review is filed concerning an agency's allegation of nonnegotiability which is only a restatement of a prior allegation, and no changes in the substance or language of the proposal were made during the period between allegations, the petition seeks review of the earlier allegation. Thus a union's petition for review must be filed within the prescribed time limit (15 days) from the date of service on the union of the agency's first allegation rather than the date of service of the second allegation.

A memorandum of understanding between the parties amounted to a written request by the union for an allegation and a simultaneous written response by the agency alleging the matter was nonnegotiable. Thus, the execution of the memorandum of understanding became the effective service date of the agency's allegation of nonnegotiability.

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Bernard Cushman filed by the Union pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. For the reason stated below, it has been determined that the exceptions must be dismissed as untimely filed.

The Arbitrator's award is dated December 31, 1985, and appears to have been served on the parties by mail on the same day.

Under section 7122(b) of the Statute, as amended,[1] and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, as amended,[2] which amendments are applicable to exceptions pending or filed with the Authority on or after March 2, 1984, and under sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Rules and Regulations, which are also applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, any exceptions to the Arbitrator's award in this case had to be filed, that is, received in the national office of the Authority not later than the close of business on February 3, 1986. However, the exceptions were not filed with the Authority at its national office in Washington, D.C., until February 4, 1986.

This case is before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2424.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations on a petition for review of negotiability issues filed by the Union. For the reasons indicated below, it has been determined that the Union's petition for review was untimely filed and must be dismissed on that basis.

From the record before the Authority, it appears that on June 17, 1985, the parties began bargaining over a new collective bargaining agreement. During the course of these negotiations, a dispute arose concerning the negotiability of a Union proposal U-3 concerning employee performance ratings. On June 25, 1985, the parties entered into a Memorandum of Understanding, which provided in pertinent part that, "The Union has presented a proposal contained in Article 9 Performance Appraisal Systems (union proposal U-3), dated 6-21-85, which Management intends to declare nonnegotiable. The exact proposal is section 5E." That agreement provided further that "The Union has indicated that it intends to file an appeal of the agency's declaration of nonnegotiability." Article 9, Section 5E provided as follows:

> E. An employee who believes he/she is performing at the level he/she was last rated in a previous annual rating, and was not notified during an earlier conference that the performance had fallen below that rating, the employee may not be rated lower on an element which was rated higher.

On September 1, 1985, the parties executed a national agreement.

On October 3, 1985, the Union made a written request for an allegation of nonnegotiability on what it characterizes as a "carryover" proposal from the previous agreement. The proposal read as follows:

> A performance rating for an employee may not contain any lower rating on any element which was rated higher on the previous annual rating if the employee was not notified during an earlier conference that the employee's performance was not consistent with the higher rating.

By memorandum dated October 21, 1985, the Agency responded that the Union's October 3, 1985, request was untimely because the proposal presented was the subject of a Memorandum of Understanding executed on June 25, 1985. The Union then filed the instant negotiability appeal on October 28, 1985, or within 15 days from the date of service of the Agency's letter of October 21, 1985.

In this case, the parties' Memorandum of Understanding of June 25, 1985, amounts to a written request by the Union for an allegation and a simultaneous written response by the Agency alleging the matter proposed to be nonnegotiable.[1] It is well settled that a petition for review must be filed within 15 days from the date of service on the Union of an Agency nonnegotiability allegation. See, e.g. National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 226 and U.S. Department of Agriculture, Food and Drug Nutrition Service, 15 FLRA 97 (1984). Although the Union contends that its letter of October 3, 1985, constituted a different request for a negotiability determination on a "modified" U-3 proposal which was presented during subsequent negotiations, such contention can not be sustained. The record clearly indicates that the proposal set forth in the October 3, 1985, request is merely a restatement of the original proposal which the Agency had declared nonnegotiable in the June 25, 1985, Memorandum of Understanding. The restatement effected no changes in the substance or language of the proposal. Thus, while the Union's petition filed with the Authority on October 28, 1985, was filed within 15 days from the date of service of the Agency letter of October 21, 1985, that letter was, in essence, only a restatement of the earlier allegation. It is therefore clear that the Union's petition in this case seeks review of the Agency's allegation of June 25, 1985. Thus, under section 7117(c) of the Statute and section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the petition for review had to be filed, that is, received in the national office of the Authority, no later than the close of business on July 10, 1985. However, the petition for review was not filed until October 28, 1985, and thus was untimely.

Accordingly, as the Union's petition for review was untimely filed, and apart from other considerations, it is hereby dismissed.[2]

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Jacob Seidenberg filed by the Union pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. For the reasons stated below, it has been determined that the exceptions must be dismissed as untimely filed.

The Arbitrator's award is dated January 2, 1986, and appears to have been served on the parties by mail on the same day.

Under section 7122(b) of the Statute, as amended, 1/ and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, as amended, 2/ which amendments are applicable to exceptions pending or filed with the Authority on or after March 2, 1984, and under sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Rules and Regulations, which are also applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, any exceptions to the Arbitrator's award in this case had to be filed with the Authority no later than the close of business on February 5, 1986. However the exceptions were not filed until February 7, 1986. Therefore, the exceptions were untimely filed.

Accordingly, as the Union's exceptions were untimely filed, they are hereby dismissed.

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Ellen M. Bussey filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Agency has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Agency's exceptions are denied.

The Union's petition for review was dismissed as untimely where the activity had demonstrated proper service of its allegation of nonnegotiability, and it was clear that the union's petition was filed beyond the due date, regardless of whether the due date is calculated in terms of the date of service by mail, or date received.

The timeliness of petitions for review filed with the Authority is not a determination that is optional at the Authority's discretion. The Authority's jurisdiction over a petition for review is dependent on its own determination of whether the petition was filed within the 15 days mandated by the Statute for such filings.

A proposal giving employees the option to wear uniforms or civilian clothes would effectively negate the agency's decision to require uniforms for the purpose of achieving ready identification of employees and, hence, directly interferes with the Agency's exercise of the right under § 7106(a)(1) to determine internal security practices. (proposal A)

There is direct relationship between the uniform requirement and the agency's need to be able to readily identify its employees in order to protect its property and accomplish its mission. Thus, a proposal giving employees the option as to whether or not they wear uniforms relates to the methods and means of performing work and is negotiable only at the discretion of the agency. (proposal A)

Proposals that would assure that uniforms worn by employees are appropriate to the weather and work place conditions, relate to the impact and implementation of an agency action which adversely affects employees and constitute appropriate arrangements. The proposals relate to the agency's decision to require the employees to wear uniforms and do not interfere with the agency's right to determine internal security practices. The proposals are therefore within the duty to bargain under § 7106(b)(3). (proposals B and C)

Proposals that would assure that uniforms worn by employees are appropriate to the weather and work place conditions do not involve the technology, methods and means of performing work. The proposals are limited to attempting to assure that the uniforms are suitable for the conditions in which the employees work. They would not interfere with an instrumentality, including an agent, tool, device, measure, plan or policy used by the agency for the accomplishing or the furthering of the performance of work. DIGEST NOTES

The exceptions in this case were filed to all bench decisions of the arbitrator rendered in the second phase of a bifurcated arbitration process. The dispute concerned official time for representational activities in the agency's field offices. The decisions of the arbitrator sustained grievances relating the wrongful denial of official time and awarded as a remedy compensatory time off or overtime compensation.

In an exception to the arbitrator's bench awards, the agency contended that the awards were arbitrary and capricious because they directly conflicted with the prior interim and final award of the Arbitrator. The Authority found that the portion of the award cited by the agency related to travel and per diem and not to the wrongful denial of official time. Accordingly, the exception provided no basis for finding the award deficient and was denied.

In an exception to the arbitrator's bench awards, the agency contended that the awards failed to draw their essence from the collective bargaining agreement. In as much as, the grievances pertained to nonduty time of the union official grievants, the agency asserted that they were not within the definition of grievance under the agreement limiting grievances to matters relating to employment. The Authority denied the exception because it failed to establish that the wrongful denial of official time did not relate to employment.

The agency contended that the arbitrator's bench awards of either compensatory time off or overtime compensation for the agency's wrongful denial of official time were contrary to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 5542(a) pertaining to overtime work. The Authority has previously held that a union official's performance of representational activities on nonduty time (i.e., outside regular work hours) was not the performance of "hours of work officially ordered or approved" that constituted overtime work under the governing provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 5542(a) for which overtime pay or compensatory time off could be granted. The arbitrator's awards are deficient to the extent that they have awarded compensatory time off or overtime compensation and therefore, they must be modified to substitute entitlements provided by § 7131(d).

Where official time, authorized by official time provisions of a collective bargaining agreement consistent with section 7131(d), is wrongfully denied and representational functions thereafter performed on nonduty time, § 7131(d) entitles the aggrieved employee to be paid for the amount of time that should have been official time. The arbitrator's bench awards should have granted the grievants compensation for the amount of time spent performing union representational activities on non-duty time which the arbitrator ruled should have been performed on official time. Accordingly, the bench awards are modified by substituting for the respective number of hours of overtime compensation or compensatory time off an equal number of hours of compensation at the appropriate straight-time rate.

DIGEST NOTES

A grievance was submitted to arbitration claiming that under the established performance standards, the grievant's performance level with respect to all four of his job elements should have been rated "outstanding rather than "exceeds." The arbitrator ruled that the performance of the grievant, as evaluated under the established standards and specifically described and appraised in the grievant's formal annual performance appraisal, was quantitatively perfect in three of his job elements. The arbitrator further determined in accordance with the definition of outstanding performance that the grievant was entitled under the established standards to a rating of "outstanding" as to those three elements. As his award the arbitrator ordered that the disputed annual appraisal be changed accordingly and that the grievant be granted any recognition that is normal for employees receiving an appraisal of "outstanding."

In its exception the agency contended the award was contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) because the arbitrator substituted his judgment for that of management in the establishment of performance standards and was therefore contrary to management's right to direct employees and assign work. The Authority held that consistent with management's rights under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) and consistent with Authority precedent, the award simply and appropriately applied to the grievant the performance standards established by management. The arbitrator properly limited his review of the grievant's performance to that which was specifically described and appraised in the grievant's formal annual appraisal. The grievance and the award properly related only to the application of management's performance standards to the grievant. The award does not relate to the establishment by management of those standards: it has not affected management's discretion to determine the content of the standards, it has not resulted in the substitution of judgment by the Arbitrator for that of management as to the content of the standards or the appraisal of the grievant's performance, and has not resulted in the setting of new standards. Accordingly, no basis is provided for finding the award deficient as contrary to the Statute.

In its exception the agency contended that the arbitrator's award was contrary to 5 U.S.C. § 4302 in that the award barred the use of a nonquantitative performance standard which is expressly permitted by § 4302. The Authority held that the award in no manner bars management from establishing a nonquantitative performance standard in accordance with § 4302. The award simply determined that with the standards that management had established stated solely in quantitative terms, it would be arbitrary and capricious for outstanding performance, which management had already defined, to be characterized in other than quantitative terms. The exception provided no basis for finding the award deficient.

The Authority found that the agency's contention that the arbitrator's award failed to draw its essence from the parties collective agreement, constituted nothing more than disagreement with the arbitrator's findings of fact and his reasoning and conclusions and that consequently the exception provided no basis for finding the award deficient.

The agency's contention that the award was based on nonfact because it was premised on two mistaken findings of fact is nothing more than a disagreement with the arbitrator's findings of fact and his reasoning and conclusions. The arbitrator properly took into account the performance of the grievant as stated in his performance appraisal, and consequently the contention of the agency is this respect provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

This case is before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2424.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations on a petition for review of negotiability issues filed by the Union. For the reasons indicated below, it has been determined that the Union's petition for review was untimely filed and must be dismissed on that basis.

Under section 7117(c)(2) of the Statute and section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the time limit for filing a petition for review of negotiability issues is 15 days after service on the Union of the Agency's allegation that the duty to bargain in good faith does not extend to the matter proposed to be bargained.

As part of its petition for review, the Union submitted a copy of the Activity's allegation of nonnegotiability dated December 24, 1986, that was addressed to an Alan Pedigo of St. Petersburg, Florida. Thus, the Activity's allegation of nonnegotiability in this case apparently was served on the Union by mail on December 24, 1985. Therefore, under section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations as well as sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 which also are applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, the Union's petition for review had to be filed, that is, received in the national office of the Authority, no later than the close of business on January 13, 1986. However, the petition for review dated January 16, 1986, was not filed until January 16, 1986. The parties were given telephonic notice of the timeliness issue and an opportunity to respond in writing.

The Activity has supplied the Authority with a copy of its return receipt -- or "green card"-- showing that Mr. Alan Pedigo of St. Petersburg, Florida accepted delivery on December 27, 1986. The Union has filed a written response arguing that: (1) the Activity sent its allegation dated December 24, 1985, by "regular U.S. Mail" and, therefore, was not in compliance with section 2429.27(b) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations; (2) the Union is willing to accept and acknowledge service by regular mail and be bound by the date received, which was December 27, 1986; and (3) the Authority is causing unnecessary litigation on procedural questions that have not been raised by the parties.

The Activity's return receipt for Mr. Pedigo shows that it was in compliance with section 2429.27(b) of the Authority's rules of procedure when it served its allegation of nonnegotiability on the Union by certified mail. Moreover, even assuming that the Authority had the discretion in this instance to calculate the timeliness of the Union's petition for review from December 27, 1986 -- the date of receipt by the Union of the Activity's allegation -- sections 2424.3 and 2429.21 of the Rules and Regulations dictate that the due date for any petition for review of that allegation was January 13, 1986.

With respect to the Union's assertion that the Authority is intervening on the side of dismissing appeals when no procedural question has been raised by either party, the timeliness of petitions for review filed with the Authority is not a determination that is optional at the Authority's discretion. Section 7117(c)(2) of the Statute states in pertinent part: "The exclusive representative may, on or before the 15th day after the date on which the agency first makes the allegation . . . institute an appeal . . . by . . . filing a petition with the Authority . . . ." Clearly, the question whether the Authority has jurisdiction over a petition for review is dependent on its own determination of whether the petition was filed within the 15 days mandated by the Statute for such filings.

In sum, the Activity has demonstrated proper service of its allegation on the Union, and it is clear that the Union's petition was filed beyond the due date, regardless of whether the due date is calculated in terms of date of service by mail, or date received. Accordingly, as the Union's petition for review was untimely filed, and apart from other considerations, it is hereby dismissed.

For the Authority.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the General Counsel filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision and the Respondent filed an opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's conclusion and recommended Order. In adopting the Judge's conclusion that the complaint should be dismissed herein, the Authority notes particularly that the record evidence does not establish that the employee herein was discriminated against or interfered with because he filed grievances or engaged in other protected activity. More specifically, the Authority finds, as did the Judge, that there was no evidence of union animus on the part of the supervisor herein; that the record evidence did not show any relationship between the grievances filed by the employee herein and his allegedly lowered 1983 performance appraisal rating; and that no correlation was shown between the employee's complaint to his union representative concerning the work assignments given to certain employees and his 1983 performance rating. Accordingly, the Authority concludes that the General Counsel has failed to meet the burden of proving that the Respondent unlawfully discriminated against the employee, and the complaint alleging a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute shall be dismissed.*/

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a Complaint and Notice of Hearing issued on May 29, 1984 by the Regional Director for the Federal Labor Relations Authority, Boston, Massachusetts Region, a hearing was held before the undersigned on July 24, 1984.

This proceeding arose under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (herein called the Statute). It resulted from charges originally filed on February 21, 1984 and amended on May 18, 1984 by Dennis R. Lacroix (herein called Mr. Lacroix) against the Department of the Navy, Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, (herein called Respondent).

The Complaint alleges that the agency violated sections 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute by considering the protected Union activity of Mr. Lacroix in preparing his annual performance appraisal for calendar year 1983 and by preparing and issuing a lowered performance appraisal for calendar year 1983 because of Mr. Lacroix's protected Union activity.

Respondent's Answer denied the commission of any unfair labor practices.

All parties were represented at the hearing. Each was afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce evidence, and to examine as well as cross-examine witnesses. Thereafter, briefs were filed with the undersigned which have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record herein, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings and conclusions:

Findings of Fact

On Monday, April 4, 1983 Dennis R. Lacroix was involuntarily transferred to the crew of supervisor James Knowles.[1] Mr. Knowles, credibly testified that he did not know the reason for Mr. Lacroix's transfer to his crew. In any event, the involuntarily transfer resulted from an unfair labor practice charge being filed alleging discrimination by Mr. Lacroix's previous supervisor. The transfer was subsequently found by the Authority in Department of the Navy, Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, 17 FLRA No. 107 (1985), to be in violation of the Statute. Mr. Lacroix continued to work under Mr. Knowles' supervision until sometime in March 1984.

During 1983, while he worked on the crew supervised by Mr. Knowles', Mr. Lacroix was told by both Knowles and General Foreman Joseph Freda that he was doing a good job; there were no problems with the quantity or quality of his work; and they were both satisfied with his work. These same things were told Mr. Lacroix by his Foreman and General Foreman regarding his performance in 1982, when Lacroix received a "highly satisfactory" overall summary rating. Without question Mr. Lacroix was safety conscious and indeed he voiced a number of complaints and filed several grievances. The grievances concerned environmental differential or Code 27 pay for exposure to asbestos while working aboard ship and a counselling session on or around August 18, 1983.

During his period as temporary foreman, Mr. Knowles supervised between ten and twelve individual employees in the time frame in which Mr. Lacroix worked under his supervision. Of the ten or twelve employees who Knowles supervised he had the opportunity to evaluate and prepare appraisals on only seven of those employees. The reason he was not allowed to evaluate four of the employees was because of shift transfers prior to evaluations in several instances and at least one employee was an apprentice, who was evaluated under a somewhat different system. Mr. Knowles testified that he would probably have rated three of the four "right in the satisfactory range." A breakdown of the seven he actually supervised shows one outstanding; four highly satisfactory and two satisfactory.

[1] Although Mr. Knowles was acting as a Temporary Foreman, he was at the time of the hearing a WG-10 pipefitter, having been returned to the bargaining unit after serving a two year period as Temporary Foreman.

The two satisfactory ratings went to Mr. Lacroix and Mr. Wood. Of considerable note is a chart prepared by the General Counsel which shows appraisals for the seven employees evaluated by Mr. Knowles in 1983 and a comparison with the 1982 ratings of each employee:

	1982 Ratings				1983 Ratings
Employees	S	H/S	Outst.	Overall Summary	S	H/S	O	Overall Summary
Hallam	0	4	0	H/S	0	0	4	O
Hannigan	0	4	0	H/S	0	2	2	H/S
Cressey	0	4	0	H/S	0	2	2	H/S
Liberty	4	0	0	S	0	3	1	H/S
Tanguay	4	0	0	S	0	4	0	H/S
Wood	1	3	0	H/S	2	2	0	S
Lacroix	0	4	0	H/S	3	1	0	S

This chart shows that Mr. Knowles did not rate most of those employees the same as their 1982 supervisor. In fact when the evaluations are compared there is a wide discrepancy between what previous supervisors and Mr. Knowles felt about many of these employees. One reason for such disparity is probably that new and different standards of evaluation were applied.

During mid-August 1983, Mr. Lacroix and Mr. Wood were assigned a high pressure air line job on the 605 boat. According to Mr. Knowles, who at that time was acting as General Foreman, he sent Mr. Lacroix to Building 299 to obtain some fittings needed to connect certain hoses and he sent Mr. Wood to the shop to attempt to get some from the supervisor in the shop.

Mr. Knowles testified that some 15-20 minutes went by and that he was called by Mr. Wood and told, "They wouldn't allow us to have any." Later, Mr. Knowles went to Building 299, and asked for the fittings. The tool room tenant gave him two fittings. Mr. Knowles, states that he asked the tool room tenant, "Has anybody been in since suppertime to see you?" And the tool room tenant responded, "Since supper?" And said, "Very seldom do we get asked for these anymore, because we never have them in, we're always out of stock, it seems like." Upon returning to the work area, Mr. Knowles testified that he found Lacroix, Wood and a welder standing around talking. The two were counselled concerning this incident and a grievance concerning their counselling was filed by Steward Joseph R. Luvisi on October 7, 1983.

The grievance was pursued vigorously by Luvisi through several steps, but its revocation was finally denied on January 20, 1984. The General Counsel points out that Mr. Wood's 1983 appraisal was also lowered. However, to my knowledge there is no allegation that Mr. Wood was discriminated against because of his participation in this incident or because he filed a grievance or participated in protected activity.

Interestingly, Luvisi and another steward, Robert Liberty, had nothing but praise for Mr. Knowles' handling of labor relations matters. Luvisi who handled several of Mr. Lacroix's complaints stated, "I've never had any problem at all with Jimmy Knowles. Every time I've talked to him about any kind of concern, whether it be a safety problem or any kind of labor management relations, he's always been very receptive."

Mr. Liberty, who was at one time a chief steward also testified that Mr. Knowles relationship with him as steward and chief steward was "very good." Mr. Liberty also testified that while he was phasing out his union activities during the time he worked for Mr. Knowles, he had filed one grievance on behalf of Mr. Lacroix. Voluntarily, Mr. Liberty added that Mr. Knowles was the type supervisor who believed in 8 hours work for 8 hours pay.

Aside from the one counselling session mentioned above Mr. Knowles considered Mr. Lacroix's work satisfactory. Mr. Knowles testified in detail concerning his 1983 rating of employees, including Mr. Lacroix. The testimony reveals that Mr. Knowles never looked at any previous ratings; that his comparison with higher rated employees was just a matter of perception; that he took the attitude of attacking the job and doing it, not trying to skirt the issue of the employees into consideration. In sum, he felt that Mr. Lacroix, when working on more complex jobs had time delays and problems which were not outside the realm of satisfactory work, but was in substance clearly not highly satisfactory. On the other hand he felt more comfortable assigning more complex work to other employees. Mr. Knowles' assignments to employees like Hallam and Hannigan was the subject of complaints. Mr. Knowles no doubt had a great deal of confidence in this duo.

With regard to the grievances filed by Mr. Lacroix concerning Code 27 pay the record clearly demonstrates that contrary to the General Counsel's view, Mr. Knowles supported those grievances. He not only approved one, but three requests for environmental differential pay for Mr. Lacroix and, in fact the grievances were submitted with his signature. The record shows that grievances were filed on September 26, 1983 and February 1 and 14, 1984. It is noted that at least one and probably two of these grievances were filed after Mr. Lacroix filed after the 1983 appraisal was prepared and presented to Mr. Lacroix the latter two grievances. The position that Mr. Knowles took on these grievances was contrary to the ultimate management position that environmental differential pay was not warranted and there is no doubt that he told Luvisi that he had gotten his "ass chewed." Consequently, one of the grievances resulted in arbitration. Unquestionably environmental differential pay for asbestos exposure was a controversial area, as the record shows, and it no doubt stimulated much concern as shown by the congressional and outside interests in the matter. Taken in proper context, Mr. Knowles' got his "ass chewed" because he took a position, which was not the management position and not because he had filed for Code 27 pay for Mr. Lacroix. I see no connection between these grievances and Mr. Lacroix's allegedly lowered rating.

Finally, I find no correlation between Mr. Lacroix's complaining about Hallam and Hannigan working together and his rating. Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Lacroix complained long and hard concerning this assignment, so did others. Others who were rated by Mr. Knowles in the highly satisfactory range. Moreover, assignment of employees, as employees, is not within the purview of another employee so Mr. Lacroix's complaints about those assignments are not, in my view, protected activity.

Discussion and Conclusions

The General Counsel asserts that it made a prima facie showing that Mr. Lacroix had engaged in protected activity and that the protected conduct was a motivating factor in reducing Mr. Lacroix's 1983 rating to "satisfactory." Notwithstanding its contention that a prima facie case was made, the General Counsel urges reconsideration of the Authority's application of its established standards in mixed-motive cases.2/

On the other side of the coin, the Respondent maintains that the rating given Mr. Lacroix had no negative impact on his career opportunities; that notwithstanding a highly satisfactoy rating in the preceding year, Mr. Knowles' evaluation was higher than the evaluation

2/ See, Internal Revenue Service, Washington, D.C., 6 FLRA No. 23 (1981); see also, Office of Program Operations, Field Operations, Social Security Administration, San Francisco Region, 9 FLRA 73 (1982), American Federation of Government Employees v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 716 F.2d 47 (1983). The General Counsel does not thoughtlessly suggest such an approach. However, subsequent to the D.C. Circuit decision, the Authority has reiterated its application of the IRS standard to mixed motive cases. There is validity in the General Counsel's overall argument that the Authority, in essence, may be unnecessarily denying itself the power to act in future cases where union activities are considered in the selection process but are not determinative and where no independent violations of the Statute are found. Notwithstanding such possible denial, the Authority has clearly adopted Mt. Healthy City School District Board of Education v. Doyle, 529 U.S. 274 (1977) as the test for establishing a section 7116(a)(2) violation under the Statute. Based on my overall findings in this matter it is not necessary, in my opinion, to recommend to the Authority based on the instant record any change in that approach. Accordingly, the General Counsel's argument is rejected.

Mr. Lacroix received two years before;[3] there was no anti-union animus involved; and, finally Mr. Knowles' standards were higher than the supervisor who had rated Mr. Lacroix the previous year.

Having established its prima facie case under IRS the burden shifted to the Respondent to establish by a preponderance of the evidence basically, that Mr. Lacroix's appraisal for 1983 would have been the same even in the absence of his protected activity.

Respondent presented evidence which clearly met its burden of proof. While it is not clear what adverse impact would result from Mr. Lacroix's receiving only a satisfactory rating, such ratings could, but it is not shown how in this record, impair Mr. Lacroix's career. Furthermore, ratings are considered in seniority for reductions-in-force under present regulations and could indeed impact of Mr. Lacroix's federal job retention rights. The above is merely speculation, but show that there may indeed be some impact despite Respondent's position to the contrary. More importantly, however, Mr. Knowles was a new Temporary Foreman rating employees for the first time; Mr. Knowles was rating employees under different criteria than they had been previously rated; Mr. Knowles did not rate most of the employees he evaluated for 1983 the same as their supervisor had the previous rating year; Mr. Knowles gave sufficient legitimate business reasons which satisfy the undersigned that the appraisal, while it might have been based on interpersonal relations, was not motivated by Mr. Lacroix's participation in any protected Union activity. Even more important is the fact that there is no record evidence to establish that Mr. Lacroix was, during the period of time in question, more than a satisfactory employee. In fact, the 1983 appraisal is consistent with the evaluation Mr. Lacroix received two years earlier and runs counter to a finding that Mr. Lacroix was more than a satisfactory employee. Thus, he was rated satisfactory in two of the three rating periods shown on the record. Inasmuch as the record clearly supports a finding that the 1983 evaluation was based on Mr. Knowles' assessment of Mr. Lacroix as a satisfactory employee it is concluded that the appraisal should not be disturbed by finding a violation of section 7116(a)(2) of the Statute.

The General Counsel also suggests that Respondent violated section 7116(a) (1) of the Statute by considering the protected activity of Mr. Lacroix in preparing his annual performance appraisal for 1983. Respondent counters that there is a complete lack of anti-union animus. In fact, it argues that there are no statements or conduct which would interfere with or coerce any employees under the Statute. I agree.

A review of the record shows that Mr. Knowles, while a Temporary Foreman seemingly had excellent rapport with the Union. It reveals further that he supported Mr. Lacroix rather than opposed him in his quest for Code 27 pay; that he counselled Mr. Lacroix and Mr. Wood's for what appear to be legitimate concerns; and, that his conduct evinced no animus whatsoever upon which to base a section 7116(a)(1) violation. Moreover, it was not established that Mr. Knowles considered Mr. Lacroix's protected union activity in preparing the 1983 appraisal.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case comes before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). The petition raises issues concerning the negotiability of three Union proposals made in response to the Agency's announcement that it intended to require wage grade employees assigned to the Supply Service warehouse to wear uniforms. The Union proposals are as follows:

A. That the employees of Supply Service warehouse be given the option as to whether or not they wear such uniforms.

B. The uniforms will consist of Spring and Summer shirts, short sleeve and pants; Fall and Winter shirts, long sleeve, and pants, including jackets and overcoats.

C. That employees be provided with safety shoes and galoshes and rain gear for inclement weather.

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that all of the proposals are nonnegotiable. First, it argues that the proposals conflict with an agency regulation, Agency Manual M-1, Part VII, Chapter 7, which, pursuant to language in the parties' collective bargaining agreement, is binding on the Union and, thus, effectively limits the scope of bargaining. The Agency asserts that the uniform requirement has been an established agency-wide (i.e., Veterans Administration) policy since 1971 but that it has not been "strictly enforced" by the local supply service.[1] Second, it argues that the proposals conflict with the Agency's right under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute to determine its internal security practices. Third, it alleges that the proposals conflict with its right under section 7106(b)(1) to determine the technology, methods and means of performing work. With respect to Proposals B and C, the Agency further argues that they regard matters which are not relevant to the impact and implementation of the management decision to require uniforms.

The Union contends that its proposals relate to a management-initiated change in an established past practice relating to conditions of employment and are, therefore, negotiable. It takes issue with the Agency's assertion that the proposals are barred by the above-cited agency regulation, arguing among other things that the regulation does not mandate that warehouse personnel wear uniforms. As to Proposals B and C, it asserts, in essence, that they are intended to assure that necessary and appropriate attire is available to employees and, hence, they relate to the impact and implementation of the Agency's requirement that a uniform be worn.

> General Stipulation
> Section 1. In the administration of all matters covered by the agreement, officials and employees are governed by existing or future laws and the regulations of appropriate authorities, including policies set forth in the Federal Personnel Manual; by published agency policies and regulations in existence at the time the agreement was approved; and by subsequently published agency policies and regulations required by law or by the regulations of appropriate authorities, or authorized by the terms of a controlling agreement at a higher agency level.

III. Analysis

A. Effect of Agency Regulation and Collective Bargaining Agreement

It is well established that during the term of a collective bargaining agreement the exclusive representative is entitled under the Statute to notice and an opportunity to negotiate over proposed changes in established conditions of employment unless it has clearly and unmistakably waived its bargaining rights. Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, 5 FLRA 9 (1980). The Agency tacitly concedes that the Union was entitled to notice and an opportunity to bargain regarding management's decision to require certain employees to wear a uniform. It contends in effect, however, that the Union agreed in the parties' collective bargaining agreement to limit the scope of bargaining to matters consistent with agency regulations and thereby effectively waived its right to bargain matters, such as the proposals at issue, which the Agency contends conflict with such regulations.

The Authority notes that the contract involved was negotiated originally in 1976 under Executive Order 11491, as amended, and that the requirements of the contract characterized by the Agency as having been agreed upon by the Union actually were mandated by the Executive Order to be expressly stated in collective bargaining agreements.[2] We hold that language placed in a contract pursuant to an Executive Order requirement does not constitute a voluntary and conscious yielding by the Union of its right to negotiate to the full extent of the scope of bargaining allowed under a subsequently enacted statute. See Immigration and Naturalization Service, 10 FLRA 202 (1982), reversed as to other matters sub nom. Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, No. 82-2398 (D.C. Cir. Feb. 29, 1984). Thus, we find that the cited contract provisions do not limit the Agency's bargaining obligation to proposals which are consistent with the terms of the agency's regulations. Absent a waiver, otherwise negotiable proposals which conflict with an agency rule or regulation are within the obligation to bargain unless a compelling need exists for the rule or regulation. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1928 and Department of the Navy, Naval Air Development Center, Warminster, Pennsylvania, 2 FLRA 451 (1980). The Agency in this case makes no showing whatsoever that a compelling need exists for the regulation with which it claims the proposals conflict. Hence, there is no basis for concluding that the proposals are barred from negotiation by such rule or regulation.

B. Effect on Agency's Right to Determine Its Internal Security Practices

The record establishes that the requirement for wage grade employees assigned to the Supply Service warehouse to wear distinctive clothing is directly related to the Agency's need to be able to readily identify such employees in order to, among other things, protect its property. Inasmuch as Proposal A would make wearing the uniform optional on the part of employees, it effectively would negate the Agency's decision to require uniforms for the purpose of achieving ready identification of employees and, hence, directly interferes with the Agency's exercise of the right under section 7106(a)(1) to determine internal security practices. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 15 and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, North Atlantic Region, 2 FLRA 875 (1980). Thus, we find that Proposal A is not negotiable.

Turning to Proposals B and C, as explained by the Union, they would assure that the clothing worn by the Supply Service warehouse employees is appropriate to the weather and work place conditions. As such, the Union contends that these proposals seek to negotiate over the impact and implementation of an Agency action which adversely affects employees. Thus, the Union's essential contention is that Proposals B and C constitute appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the Agency's action. The Authority finds, contrary to the Agency's contentions, first, that these two proposals relate to the Agency's decision to require the employees to wear a specific type of clothing, i.e., a uniform; and, second, that they do not interfere with the Agency's right to determine its internal security practices. These proposals would not present any interference with the Agency's decision that Supply Service warehouse employees wear distinctive uniform clothing for internal security purposes. Since they do not in any way defeat the purpose for which the concept of distinctive uniform clothing was adopted, i.e., the ability to readily identify Supply Service warehouse employees as such and distinguish them from other individuals, they are not outside the duty to bargain.[3] Rather, they provide only that the prescribed uniform clothing will be suitable for the conditions under which the employees must work. As such, they constitute appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the Agency's decision to require that uniforms be worn and therefore are within the duty to bargain under section 7106(b)(3). Because Proposals B and C do not interfere at all with the Agency's right under section 7106 to determine its internal security, it is not necessary to apply any test for determining "excessive interference" with the relevant management right under section 7106(b)(3). National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986) (Provision 2).

[3] Cf. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Immigration and Naturalization Service Council and U.S. Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service, 8 FLRA 347 (1982) (Union Proposal 2), reversed as to other matters sub nom. U.S. Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 709 F.2d 724 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (wherein the Authority found that because a proposal did not defeat the purpose for which a particular "means of performing the work of the Agency" was adopted, the proposal did not interfere with the Agency's right under section 7106(b)(1) in that regard).

C. Effect on Agency's Right to Determine the Technology, Methods and Means of Performing Work

The Agency contends that all of the proposals involve the methods and means of performing work and are therefore negotiable only at the discretion of the Agency under section 7106(b)(1). With regard to Proposal A, we agree. The record establishes that there is a direct relationship between the uniform requirement and the Agency's need to be able to readily identify its employees in order to protect its property and to accomplish its mission. Thus, we find that Proposal A relates to the methods and means of performing work and is nonnegotiable for that reason as well as the reasoning set forth in Section B of this Order.

The Agency, however, has not shown, nor is it otherwise apparent from the record, that Proposals B and C involve the technology, methods and means of performing the Agency's work. In this regard, as previously stated, the proposals are limited to attempting to assure that the uniforms are suitable for the conditions in which employees work. They would not interfere with an instrumentality, including an agent, tool, device, measure, plan or policy used by the Agency for the accomplishing or the furthering of the performance of its work. See U.S. Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service and National Border Patrol Council, Local 1613, American Federation of Government Employees, 18 FLRA No. 3 (1985). Thus, we find that Proposals B and C are within the duty to bargain.

IV. Conclusions

The Authority finds that the proposals relate to the change proposed by the Agency, i.e., that the employees wear specified clothing. The Authority further finds that negotiation over the proposals is not barred in this instance by the existence of contract language which purportedly binds the parties to follow existing and future provisions of the Agency's regulations. Because Union Proposal A, however, conflicts with the Agency's right to determine its internal security practices and involves methods and means of performing work, it is not within the duty to bargain. Union Proposals B and C do not conflict with the Agency's right to determine its internal security practices or its right to determine the technology, methods and means of performing its work. Rather, those proposals constitute appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the Agency's decision to require that uniforms be worn and, therefore, are within the duty to bargain.[4]

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review insofar as it relates to Proposal A be, and it hereby is, dismissed. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request, or as otherwise agreed to by the parties, bargain concerning Proposals B and C.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the awards of Arbitrator Justin C. Smith filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Union filed an opposition.[1]

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

According to the record before the Authority, this case involves the dispute submitted by the parties to the Arbitrator concerning official time for representational activities in the Agency's field offices. By agreement of the parties, a bifurcated arbitration process was set up to resolve this dispute that had resulted in numerous grievances. The first phase of this process involved the interpretation of the official time provisions of the Statute and the parties' collective bargaining agreement and resulted in an interim award, later made final by the Arbitrator, resolving the proper interpretation and application of the Statute and the agreement to various disputed situations over which grievances were pending.[2] The second phase of the process involves hearings by the Arbitrator to resolve, by bench decisions when practicable, specific grievances pending in various regions of the Agency. The exceptions in this case have been filed to all the bench decisions of the Arbitrator rendered on April 29, 1985, that sustained grievances and awarded as a remedy compensatory time off or overtime compensation. In terms of these decisions, the Arbitrator had generally ruled with respect to the situations of the specific grievances sustained by his bench decisions that in such circumstances, the denial of official time for purposes of representational activities to union officials was in violation of the parties' agreement which had been negotiated consistent with the Statute. With respect to each bench decision as to which exceptions have been filed, the Arbitrator specifically sustained in accordance with his prior awards the individual grievance claiming a wrongful denial of official time and awarded compensatory time off or overtime compensation to correspond with the amount of time spent by the union official to perform the representational activities.

[1] In its opposition the Union contends that the exceptions should be dismissed as untimely. However, contrary to the Union's contention, the Authority has determined that the exceptions were timely filed under the Statute and the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contention

In its first exception, the Agency contends that the bench awards are arbitrary and capricious because they directly conflict with the prior interim and final award of the Arbitrator.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Authority finds that the portion of the prior awards cited by the Agency relates to travel and per diem and not to the wrongful denial of official time for purposes of representational activities. Accordingly, this exception provides no basis for finding the award deficient and must be denied.

[2] Exceptions filed by the Agency to this interim award and the related final award previously have been denied by the Authority. Case No. 0-AR-738 (Oct. 31, 1984); Case No. 0-AR-969 (Sept. 16, 1985).

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contention

In its second exception the Agency contends that the bench awards fail to draw their essence from the collective bargaining agreement. Specifically, the Agency argues that because the grievances pertain to nonduty time of the union official grievants, they are not within the definition of grievance under the agreement limiting grievances to matters relating to employment.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Authority finds that the exception fails to establish that the matter of the wrongful denial of official time does not relate to employment. Accordingly, this exception must be denied.

V. THIRD EXCEPTION

A. Contention

In its third exception, the Agency contends that the award of either compensatory time off or overtime compensation is contrary to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 5542(a) pertaining to overtime work.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

As the Authority has previously indicated, the legal basis for overtime pay is the performance by an employee of overtime work which means "hours of work officially ordered or approved" in excess of eight hours in a day or in excess of 40 hours in an administrative workweek. 5 U.S.C. § 5542(a). Similarly, the legal basis for granting compensatory time off arises under 5 U.S.C. § 5543 as a result of overtime work performed by an employee. In this regard, the Authority has specifically held that a union official's performance of representational activities on nonduty time (i.e., outside regular work hours) was not the performance of "hours of work officially ordered or approved" that constituted overtime work under the governing provisions of section 5542(a) for which overtime pay or compensatory time off could be granted. Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, 19 FLRA No. 104 (1985); Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1164, AFL-CIO, 19 FLRA No. 4 (1985). In both of these cases, the overtime work provisions of section 5542(a) were determined to govern and provisions relating to hours of work under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, 29 U.S.C. § 201 et seq., were not considered because it was not contested that the union officials were employees exempt from coverage under FLSA. See generally 5 CFR part 551 (Pay Administration Under the Fair Labor Standards Act). In terms of this case, it is apparent that the bench awards involved employees who also are exempt from FLSA.3/ Accordingly, the Authority similarly finds that the bench awards in this case are deficient to the extent they have awarded compensatory time off or overtime compensation and that therefore they must be modified to substitute the entitlements provided by the Statute.

The Authority has previously indicated that section 7131(d) of the Statute4/ expressly authorizes the parties to negotiate for the granting of official time for the performance of the specified representational activities and that the Statute effectively provides a remedy when official time under section 7131(d) is wrongfully denied. Specifically, the Authority determined that where official time, authorized by the official time provisions of a collective bargaining agreement consistent with section 7131(d) of the Statute, is wrongfully denied and represen-

3/ In this regard the Agency's exception implicitly presumes that the union officials involved in the bench decisions of April 29, 1985, are exempt from coverage under FLSA, and the Union in its opposition indicates that the union officials involved are exempt employees. Union Opposition at 10.

4/ Section 7131(d) provides:

> (d) Except as provided in the preceding subsections of this section--
> (1) any employee representing an exclusive representative, or
> (2) in connection with any other matter covered by this chapter, any employee in an appropriate unit represented by an exclusive representative, > shall be granted official time in any amount the agency and the exclusive representative involved agree to be reasonable, necessary, and in the public interest.

tational functions are thereafter performed on nonduty time, section 7131(d) entitles the aggrieved employee to be paid for the amount of time that should have been official time. SSA, 19 FLRA No. 104; U.S. Department of the Air Force, Headquarters Oklahoma City Air Logistics Center, Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 916, 19 FLRA No. 105 (1985); Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3231, 19 FLRA No. 109 (1985); Local 1164, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Social Security Administration, Boston Region, 19 FLRA No. 110 (1985). In terms of this case, as has been noted, the Arbitrator with respect to each bench decision essentially found that the denial of official time was in violation of the parties' collective bargaining agreement which had been negotiated consistent with the Statute. Thus, the Arbitrator effectively found that all the conditions of section 7131(d) had been met. Consequently, under the decisions of the Authority, the bench awards should have granted the grievants compensation for the amount of time spent performing union representational activities on nonduty time which the Arbitrator ruled should have been performed on official time.

VI. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the bench awards are modified by substituting for the respective number of hours of overtime compensation or compensatory time off an equal number of hours of compensation at the appropriate straight-time rate.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Robert H. Mount filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Sector Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

A grievance was filed and submitted to arbitration claiming that under the established performance standards, the grievant's performance level with respect to all four of his job elements should have been rated "outstanding" rather than "exceeds." The Arbitrator observed that the established standards for the performance levels of "minimally satisfactory," "fully successful," and "exceeds" for each of the job elements of the grievant's position are stated in quantitative terms. The Arbitrator specifically noted, for example, that for the element pertaining to patient care, the standard for "exceeds" provides that there shall be no more than one instance during the rating period when the incumbent failed to provide adequate medical care. The Arbitrator further observed that although there is no definition in the four job elements for the standard of "outstanding," management by regulation defines outstanding performance as "performance which clearly demonstrates a level of achievement which exceeds to an exceptional degree the established standards." The Arbitrator noted in this respect that it is proper to have no definition of "outstanding" in the performance standards because the use of the term "established standards" in the regulatory definition relates to the standards set for performance below the level of "outstanding." Thus, in accordance with the definition of outstanding performance set by management, the Arbitrator questioned whether the grievant's level of performance exceeded the established standards to an exceptional degree. With respect to the grievant's level of performance, the Arbitrator rejected the Activity's arguments that the grievant's level of performance was lower than as described and appraised in his performance appraisal because of disciplinary actions not described in the appraisal that were taken against the grievant over performance-related matters. The Arbitrator ruled that the performance of the grievant that must be evaluated under the established standards is the grievant's performance as specifically described and appraised in the grievant's formal annual performance appraisal. With respect to the posed question of what level of performance exceeded to an exceptional degree the established standards, the Arbitrator reiterated that the established standards were solely quantitative. Thus, the Arbitrator ruled that it would be arbitrary and capricious in such circumstances to evaluate what constituted outstanding performance in other than quantitative terms, and he consequently again rejected consideration of disciplinary actions against the grievant. Because the grievant's performance as specifically described and appraised in his performance appraisal was quantitatively perfect in three of his job elements, the Arbitrator determined in accordance with the definition of outstanding performance that the grievant was entitled under the established standards to a rating of "outstanding" as to those three elements. As his award the Arbitrator therefore ordered that the disputed annual appraisal be changed accordingly and that the grievant be granted any recognition that is normal for those so appraised.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. Specifically, the Agency argues that by a substitution of judgment of the Arbitrator for that of management in the establishment of performance standards, the award is contrary to management's right to direct employees and to assign work.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority has consistently held that proposals which substantively restrict management in its identification of critical elements of a position and establishment of performance standards are inconsistent with section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute as improper interferences with management's right to direct employees and to assign work. E.g., National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769 (1980), aff'd sub nom. NTEU v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1968 and Department of Transportation, Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, Massena, New York, 5 FLRA 70 (1981) (Proposals 1-2), aff'd sub nom. AFGE, Local 1968 v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 565 (D.C. Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 926 (1983). Similarly, the Authority has held that proposals which would, as their sole effect, subject management's determinations concerning the identification of critical elements and the content of performance standards to the grievance procedure and arbitral review constituted improper interference with management's rights. E.g., Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, 5 FLRA 70 (Proposal 4). In so holding, the Authority has noted that subjecting managerial evaluations concerning critical elements and performance standards to arbitral review would require an arbitrator to substitute his or her judgment as to how the agency should be run for that of management. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of Health and Human Services, Region 10, 13 FLRA 732, 734 (1982), aff'd sub nom. NTEU v. FLRA, 767 F. 2d 1315 (9th Cir. 1985). "Under the Statute, however, management has the right to evaluate the relative importance of job tasks and to formulate levels of achievement for those tasks based upon its own determination of the agency's operating needs, goals, and priorities." Id.

With respect to the arbitrator's role in resolving grievances involving performance appraisal matters, consistent with the above holdings and section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute, an arbitrator could not determine that a grievance directly challenging an agency's identification of job elements or establishment of performance standards is grievable and arbitrable. Nor could an arbitrator render an award substituting his or her judgment concerning the identification of critical job elements and establishment of performance standards for that of management. E.g., Bureau of Engraving and Printing, U.S. Department of the Treasury and Washington Plate Printers Union, Local No. 2, IPDEU, AFL-CIO, 20 FLRA No. 39 (1985).

It is equally well established, on the other hand, that there is a duty to bargain under section 7106(b)(3) on appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by management's exercise of its authority under section 7106(a), e.g., actions which adversely affect employees taken under the performance standards established by management. E.g., American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 3 FLRA 784, 791-92 (1980) (Proposal 5). Thus, in the facts of that case, the Authority specifically found that the proposal in dispute merely established a general, nonquantitative requirement by which the application of critical elements and performance standards established by management may subsequently be evaluated in a grievance by an employee who believes that he or she has been adversely affected by the application of management's performance standard to him or her. To that extent, the Authority held that the proposal was within the duty to bargain. Under such a proposal the Authority noted that an employee against whom management takes disciplinary action for unacceptable performance may, in a grievance of such action pursuant to section 7121(e) of the Statute, raise the issue of whether the performance standards as applied to him or her meet the contractual requirements, i.e., the arbitrator of such a grievance would simply determine if the standard established by management as applied to the grievant complied with the "fair and equitable . . ." requirements of the parties' agreement. In finding that proposal to be within the duty to bargain, the Authority specifically noted that such an arrangement did not affect management's discretion to determine the content of performance standards nor did it authorize an arbitrator to substitute his or her judgment for that of management as to the content of the standards.

The Authority has distinguished between proposed grievance procedures subjecting management's identification of critical elements and establishment of performance standards to arbitral review and grievance procedures relating only to the application of such elements and standards to an individual employee through the appraisal process. Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, 5 FLRA 70 (Proposal 4). As has been noted, the Authority found in that case that a proposed procedure which provided for grievances directly challenging the identification of critical elements and the establishment of the performance standards conflicted with management's rights. In contrast, however, the Authority citing AFGE Local 32, also ruled that a proposed extension of the grievance procedure to any action taken as a result of the application of performance standards to an employee appropriately would extend the negotiated grievance procedure to matters relating to the adverse affect on an employee of the exercise by management of its authority under section 7106 of the Statute. In ruling that the application of management's elements and standards to an employee in the context of a performance appraisal is grievable, the Authority has consistently emphasized, as in the AFGE Local 32 case discussed above, that such a grievance would not relate to the establishment of the standards, because the review by an arbitrator would not preclude management from determining the content of the elements and standards and would not result in the setting of new elements and standards. Instead, arbitral review would simply and appropriately determine whether the application of the elements and standards to the employee through a performance appraisal complied with applicable law, regulation, and the parties' collective bargaining agreement. See, e.g., American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Chicago Region, Illinois, 7 FLRA 217 (1981) (Proposal 7).

Consistent with the above holdings and the Statute, an arbitrator may resolve a grievance by an employee who believes that he or she has been adversely affected by management's application of performance standards in a performance appraisal to that particular employee. In judging management's application of standards and elements to a grievant, an arbitrator may determine that, in the circumstances of the case, management has not applied the elements and standards which it had established to a grievant or has applied those, or other elements and standards, in violation of law, regulation, or an appropriate agreed-upon general, nonquantitative review criterion. In such circumstances, an arbitrator could, for example, sustain an employee's grievance alleging that management had not applied the elements and standards which it had established or had applied those, or other elements and standards, in violation of law, regulation, or an appropriate agreed-upon general, nonquantitative review criterion. In sustaining the grievance the arbitrator as a remedy could direct that the grievant's work product be granted the rating to which entitled under the standards and elements established by management or be reevaluated by management utilizing those standards and elements. Bureau of Engraving and Printing, 20 FLRA No. 39; Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, SSA, Local 1923, AFL-CIO, 7 FLRA 544 (1982). However, in resolving such a grievance, an arbitrator may not, of course, substitute his or her judgment for that of the agency as to the appropriateness of elements and standards established by management. Further, an arbitrator may not conduct an independent evaluation of an employee's performance under the elements and standards established by management and substitute his or her judgment as to what should be that employee's performance evaluation and rating. Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

In terms of this case, as has been noted, the Arbitrator, in resolving the grievance claiming that under management's established performance standards, the grievant's performance should have been rated higher, expressly examined the performance standards established by management and the regulatory definition of outstanding performance; he specifically evaluated the application of the standards established by management to the grievant's performance as described in his performance appraisal prepared by management; and as his award he determined in accordance with the definition of outstanding performance and management's own appraisal of the grievant's performance that the grievant was entitled under the established standards to a rating of "outstanding" as to three of his job elements. Thus, contrary to the Agency's contention that the award improperly interferes with management's right to establish performance standards, the Authority finds that consistent with management's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) and consistent with the Authority precedent described above, the award has simply and appropriately applied to the grievant the performance standards established by management. In this respect, contrary to the argument of the Agency, the Authority likewise finds that consistent with FDIC, Chicago, 7 FLRA 217, which identified the performance appraisal as constituting the application of management's performance standards to an employee, the Arbitrator properly limited his review of the grievant's performance to that which was specifically described and appraised in the grievant's formal annual performance appraisal. Furthermore, the Authority similar to its decision in Social Security Administration, 7 FLRA 544, finds that the Arbitrator appropriately applied the established standards to the grievant's performance described in his appraisal based on the Arbitrator's determination that with the established standards stated solely in quantitative terms, it would be arbitrary and capricious for outstanding performance to be characterized in other than quantitative terms which precluded management's consideration of disciplinary actions. In short, the grievance and the award properly relate only to the application of management's performance standards to the grievant. The award does not relate to the establishment by management of those standards: it has not affected management's discretion to determine the content of the standards, it has not resulted in the substitution of judgment by the Arbitrator for that of management as to the content of the standards or the appraisal of the grievant's performance, and it has not resulted in the setting of new standards. Accordingly, no basis is provided for finding the award deficient as contrary to the Statute.

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to 5 U.S.C. § 4302. Specifically, the Agency argues that the award bars the use of a nonquantitative performance standard which is expressly permitted by section 4302.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority finds that the award in no manner bars management from establishing a nonquantitative performance standard in accordance with section 4302. As has been noted, the Arbitrator in his award simply determined that with the standards that management had established stated solely in quantitative terms, it would be arbitrary and capricious for outstanding performance, which management had defined as that which exceeded to an exceptional degree the established standards, to be characterized in other than quantitative terms. Consequently, this exception provides no basis for finding the award deficient as alleged by the Agency.

V. THIRD EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its third exception the Agency contends that the award fails to draw its essence from the parties' collective bargaining agreement. In support the Agency argues that the award has no basis in the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that this exception constitutes nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's findings of fact and his reasoning and conclusions and that consequently this exception provides no basis for finding the award deficient. See, e.g., Federal Correctional Institution, Petersburg, Virginia and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2052, Petersburg, Virginia, 13 FLRA 108 (1983).

VI. FOURTH EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its fourth exception the Agency contends that the award is based on nonfacts because it is premised on two mistaken findings of fact. In support the Agency contends that the Arbitrator mistakenly evaluated the grievance on the basis of the grievant's performance as stated in his performance appraisal and mistakenly extrapolated in an arithmetic progression the established performance standard for "outstanding."

B. Analysis and Conclusions

As determined in the resolution of the first exception and contrary to the contention of the Agency, the Arbitrator properly took into account the performance of the grievant as stated in his performance appraisal, and consequently the contention of the Agency in this respect provides no basis for finding the award deficient. The remaining contention of the Agency constitutes nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's findings of fact and his reasoning and conclusions and likewise provides no basis for finding the award deficient on the ground that the central fact underlying the award is concededly erroneous and in effect is a gross mistake of fact but for which a different result would have been reached. See, e.g., General Services Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, Council 236, 15 FLRA 328 (1984).

VII. DECISION

For the reasons stated above, the Agency's exceptions accordingly are denied.

ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

This matter is before the Authority on a request filed by the Department of the Air Force (the Agency) seeking clarification of the Authority's decision of June 21, 1985 (18 FLRA No. 81). In that decision, on exceptions filed by the Agency, the Authority set aside the Arbitrator's interest arbitration award directing the parties to include a provision in their collective bargaining agreement authorizing 100 percent official time for certain Union representatives. In its request for clarification, the Agency asks whether the Authority set aside the Arbitrator's resolution of the parties' entire negotiation impasse that was before him or only that portion excepted to by the Agency, i.e., the portion dealing with full-time union representatives, and whether all other portions of his award remain in effect.

As set forth in the Authority's decision, the entire dispute before the Arbitrator concerned an impasse which arose during the parties' negotiation of a new Master Labor Agreement. The Federal Service Impasses Panel had directed that the impasse be referred to mediation-arbitration for resolution. Negotiations under the Arbitrator's direction apparently produced agreement on all issues except a Union proposal that 100 percent official time be authorized for certain Union representatives. Before the Arbitrator, the Agency contended, as it had earlier, that the Union's proposal was not within the duty to bargain under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

In its decision, the Authority concluded that the Agency's allegation raised a negotiability issue under section 7117(c)(1) of the Statute and that by deciding that the parties' agreement should contain the disputed provision, the Arbitrator had determined that the Agency had an obligation under the Statute to bargain on the matter, despite its allegation to the contrary. Under established Authority precedent, the Arbitrator was without authority to decide such a negotiability issue arising under section 7117(c)(1) since, as required by section 7105(a)(2)(E), such issues may only be resolved by the Authority. Accordingly, the Authority set aside the Arbitrator's award deciding the negotiability issue as contrary to section 7105(a)(2)(E).

The Authority concludes that the Agency's request for clarification must be denied. Thus, without passing upon whether the Authority's Rules and Regulations provide for the filing of such requests, the Authority finds that clarification is not warranted in this case. As indicated above, the Authority clearly set aside only that portion of the Arbitrator's resolution of the parties' dispute that was before the Authority on exceptions filed by the Agency, i.e., the interest arbitration award directing the parties to include in their agreement the disputed provision authorizing 100 percent official time for certain Union representatives. The Authority did not address any other aspect of the parties' entire dispute or the effect of the decision on such other aspects or on other proceedings in the dispute.

Accordingly, since the decision appears clear in that regard, the Agency's request for clarification is denied.

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Clifford E. Smith filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Agency has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Agency's exceptions are denied.

DIGEST NOTES

A grievance was submitted to arbitration alleging that the activity violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement when it required certain employees to work a midweek holiday. The activity alleged that it had acted within its rights to assign work. The Arbitrator determined that management's right to assign work is not absolute and may be abridged by provisions of the agreement and by past practices. Accordingly he sustained the grievance and directed the employer to cease and desist from requiring employees to work on midweek holidays. The Authority found that by effectively prohibiting the assignment of work on midweek holidays, the award had enforced the parties' agreement and practices so as to improperly deny the agency its right under § 7106(a)(2)(B) to determine when work which had been assigned would be performed. Consequently, the award was set aside.

An arbitration award may not interpret or enforce a collective bargaining agreement so as to improperly deny an agency the authority to exercise its rights under the statute.

No past practice may be established regarding the rights enumerated in § 7106(a) that would bind management to the particular manner in which it had exercised such rights in the past so as to preclude management from acting otherwise in the exercise of those rights.

DIGEST NOTES

This dispute was referred to interest arbitration for resolution and concerned the negotiation impasse of the parties over what modification, if any, should be made in the grievance procedures and what procedures should be followed by the parties in effecting final approval of agreements negotiated on the local level. The union had proposed a change in the grievance procedures to provide travel and per diem expenses for the grievant, witnesses, and representatives while presenting a grievance. The arbitrator concluded that if each party pays its own way in pursuing a grievance, the stakes are more equitable and the parties are encourage to settle the grievance at an early stage without resort to arbitration. He thus, determined not to incorporate the union's proposal into the the collective bargaining agreement. The arbitrator determined not to change the procedure for approval of local agreements, but suggested a clarification of the existing agreement and proposed certain language for consideration by the parties.

In its first exception the union contended that the arbitrator's resolution of the impasse over grievance procedures by determining not include the travel and per diem provision was contrary to § 7131(d) and ignores the evidence showing hardships on employees of grievances and the evidence showing that it is not traditional in the federal sector for each side to pay its own costs. The Authority concluded that the arbitrator's determination not to require that the union's proposal be included in the agreement was not contrary to to § 7131(d) and that the union's contention that the award was contrary to the evidence was nothing more than disagreement with the arbitrator's evaluation of the evidence and with his reasoning and conclusions in reaching his determination.

In its second exception the union contended that the arbitrator's resolution of the impasse over the approval procedure was contrary to law and contrary to the evidence. The Authority found that the exception did not address the arbitrator's award, which resolved the impasse in favor of the union by ruling not to change the approval procedure of the existing agreement. Instead, the union only argued that the arbitrator's suggested clarification of the existing language and his proposal of the additional language for consideration of the parties, which was not mandated to be incorporated into the agreement, was deficient. Consequently, because the exception did not address the award, there was no basis for finding the award deficient.

A union proposal seeking payment of travel and per diem expenses incurred by employees on official time is within the agency's duty to bargain under the Statute. However, while the agency is obligated to bargain in good faith over the disputed proposal it is under no obligation to agree to the union's formulation.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal that would establish a range of percentages of salary for the purpose of determining the amount of performance awards is nonnegotiable. Because the proposal would substantially affect the rate of a performance related award, it has the effect of establishing the rate of a monetary incentive for performance and thus, directly interferes with management's rights to direct employees and to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). Performance based incentive awards relate to an employee's accomplishment with respect to his or her job requirements. Such awards are, therefore, ultimately based in management's right to determine those employee job requirements. (proposal 1)

Proposals that would determine the amount of an incentive award once an agency decides to grant the award do not interfere with management's right to determine its budget. The Authority will find a proposal inconsistent with an agency's right to determine its budget if the proposal by its terms prescribed a particular program or an amount of funds to be included in the agency's budget or if the agency made a substantial demonstration that the proposal would result in a significant unavoidable increase in costs which would not be offset by compensating benefits. The proposals neither prescribe a particular program nor an amount of funds to be included in a budget. Further, assuming that the proposals would require the agency to budget larger amounts for incentive awards, it was not demonstrated that the increase would not be offset by compensating benefits. The proposals specifically linked the amount of an award to the amount of benefits to the government which resulted from the suggestion being awarded. (proposals 1, 2 and 3)

Proposals that would determine the amount of an incentive award once an agency decides to grant the award do not interfere with management's right to determine the technology, methods and means of performing work. The agency asserted that if, because of budgetary restraints, it were unable to provide an award in the amount specified by the proposal, it would be prevented from implementing a suggestion which could involve worthwhile improvements to the technology, methods, and means of performing work. The Authority held that an employee whose suggestion is adopted has the right to be considered for an award and an agency is not bound to grant an award upon adoption of a suggestion. (proposals 2 and 3)

Proposals that would determine the amount of an incentive award once an agency decides to grant the award are not contrary to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 4502 and 4503, which the agency describe as reserving to the head of each agency the right to determine the amount of each incentive award. Those statutory provisions vest agencies with the discretion to determine the amount to be paid as awards for suggestions. The Authority has held that an agency has a duty to bargain to the extent of its discretion with respect to matters affecting the conditions of employment of its employees. Since there is no indication that the discretion provided the agency in 5 U.S.C. § 4502 and 4503 is intended to be sole and exclusive the agency must bargain on the subject. (proposals 1, 2 and 3)

A union has a right to request in writing that an agency serve it with a written allegation of nonnegotiability under 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

- 5 U.S.C. § 5701 et seq. (Travel Expense Act)

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal seeking payment of travel expenses incurred while on official time concerned a condition of employment and is therefore negotiable. See 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986) (which held that such a proposal concerned a condition of employment which was within the Agency's administrative discretion, and was not inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. 5701 et seq., or Federal Travel Regulations).

A proposal seeking payment of travel expenses incurred while on official time and providing for case by case determinations as to the appropriateness of specific travel and per diem expenses which are necessary and proper under law and governing regulation, is not inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. 5701 et seq., or Federal Travel Regulations and is therefore negotiable. The Authority has found that agencies have the discretion, under the Act and implementing regulations, to determine whether and under what circumstances travel related to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States to constitute official business for which employees may receive appropriate expenses from Federal funds. The exercise of that discretion is subject to the negotiation process.

Travel and per diem expenses need not be tied to § 7131 official time in order to be negotiable. Instead, the negotiability of travel and per diem is based on consideration of whether the travel involved is in the primary interest of Government so as to constitute "official business," without consideration of § 7151. See 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986).

DIGEST NOTES

Proposals that provide for the waiver of interest and penalty charges on the delinquent repayment of unused travel advances are inconsistent with the Debt Collection Act of 1982 and the implementing regulations in the revised Federal Claims Collection Standards.

Prior to the issuance of the Authority's decisions in these cases but after the parties submissions had been filed, Congress enacted the Debt Collection Act of 1982, Pub. L. No. 97-365, 96 Stat. 1749. Motions for reconsideration were granted to consider the impact of the Act on the Authority's decisions finding negotiable union proposals relating to the conditions under which employees will reimburse the Agency for monies they have received through advances, where work-related expenses actually incurred are less than the advance. The proposals were in dispute only in so far as they provided that interest and late payment charges would not be assessed.

The requirement in 31 U.S.C. § 3717 that agencies charge interest and late payment penalties on outstanding debts owed the United States Government was intended by Congress to be mandatory and imperative. Agencies are without discretion to waive interest charges absent express exception

Section 31 U.S.C. § 3717(g), provides that the mandatory interest requirement of the Debt Collection Act does not apply where a "contract" prohibits the charging of interest or assessment of late payment charges. That section, however, does not authorize an agency to enter into a collective bargaining agreement which contains a provision waiving the application of the required interest and penalty charges. In view of the importance attached by Congress to the interest and penalty requirements of the Act, any exceptions to § 3717 should be narrowly construed so as not to frustrate the Congressional purpose.

The term "contract" in 31 U.S.C. § 3717(g)(1) refers to those contracts which specifically concern the payment of money pursuant to particular government program involving loans administered by agencies, and not to contracts in the general sense, such as collective bargaining agreements.

The major purpose of the Debt Collection Act was to facilitate collection procedures in the federal government by expanding the debt collection tools available to federal agencies. The Act's purpose was primarily to facilitate the collection of "general debts," however, its coverage was not intended to be limited solely to such "general debts," but also to include those debts such as unused travel advances for which salary offset was already authorized.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal seeking payment of travel expenses incurred while on official time concerned a condition of employment and is therefore negotiable. See 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986) (which held that such a proposal concerned a condition of employment which was within the Agency's administrative discretion, and was not inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. 5701 et seq., or Federal Travel Regulations).

Proposals are negotiable that provide for reimbursement of travel and per diem expenses for certain representational activity and are not inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act or its implementing regulations. Agencies have the discretion, under the Act and 41 C.F.R., Part 101-7 (Federal Travel Regulations), to determine whether and under what circumstances travel related to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for which employees may receive appropriate expenses from Federal funds. The exercise of that discretion is subject to the negotiation process. (provisions 1, 2, and 3)

There is no compelling need for an agency regulation which provides that determinations on whether to pay travel and per diem may be made only on a case by case basis and solely by management. The regulation is not essential to comply with the Travel Expense Act or the Federal Travel Regulations. Neither the Act or its implementing regulations require that determinations as to whether travel related to labor-management relations activities is primarily in the interest of the United States be made unilaterally by management and only on a case by case basis.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal that would require an agency to fill vacancies during the period of retained-grade eligibility by selecting qualified employees who had been affected by reduction-in-force (RIF) actions involving release from competitive levels but who were in a retained-grade status, was outside the duty to bargain under § 7117(a)(1) because it was inconsistent with a government-wide regulation. The proposal conflicted with Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the Federal Personnel Manual, which would permit agencies to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source. The proposal in this case would require the agency to select only those employees who are affected by RIF actions involving release from competitive levels for vacancies which it has decided to fill during the period of retained eligibility.

DIGEST NOTES

The issue submitted to the arbitrator was whether management was justified under the parties' collective bargaining agreement or under applicable law or regulation in refusing to pay the travel and per diem expenses of the local union president for a trip involving a visit to officials of and the national union and Congress. The arbitrator found that the activity's refusal to pay travel and per diem was wholly untenable under the provisions of the parties' agreement and was not supportable under any cited law or regulation. The arbitrator's award directed management to pay the expenses, stating that the refusal to pay was was not mandated by any law or regulation and violative of the parties agreement.

In its first, second and third exceptions the agency contended that the award was based on nonfact and failed to draw its essence from the collective bargaining agreement. The agency alleged that the arbitrator could not have properly interpreted the parties' collective bargaining agreement and therein, find a basis on which to award the payment of travel and per diem. The Authority concluded that the exceptions constituted nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's interpretation and application of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The arbitrator clearly interpreted the agreement to encompass travel and per diem payments. The agency in its exceptions was clearly seeking to have its interpretation of the agreement substituted for that of the arbitrator. The exceptions therefore, provided no basis for finding the award deficient.

The agency contended in its exception that the award was contrary to management's right to determine the budget of the agency. The Authority found that the Statute is silent on whether travel expenses incurred in the conduct of labor-management relations activity are payable from federal funds and that the agency had not shown, beyond a bare assertion, that the proposal conflicted with the right of the agency to determine its budget under § 7106. The agency was clearly disagreeing with the arbitrator's interpretation and application of the agreement which provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

The agency contended in its exception that the award was contrary to management's right to determine the mission of the agency. The Authority found that the agency had not shown, beyond a bare assertion, that the arbitrator's award interferes with the right of the agency to determine its mission. The agency was clearly disagreeing with the arbitrator's interpretation and application of the agreement which provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

The agency contended in its exception that the award was contrary to the official time provisions of § 7131. The Authority found that the agency had not shown, beyond a bare assertion, that the arbitrator's award was contrary to the official time provisions of the Statute. The agency was clearly disagreeing with the arbitrator's interpretation and application of the agreement which provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

The arbitrator's award directing the payment of travel and per diem expenses to a union official, incurred in the performance of labor-management relations activity while on official time, was modified to provide for agency determinations regarding the propriety of the travel and per diem expenses under the Federal Travel Regulations.

DIGEST NOTES

The issue submitted to arbitration was whether the agency violated § 7131(d) and the parties' agreement by failing to pay the travel and per diem expenses of a union representative when he performed certain representational activities on official time. The arbitrator found that the parties had agreed in their collective bargaining agreement that union representatives engaged in certain representational activities were entitled to reimbursement for related travel and per diem expenses. In his award he determined that the agency was obligated to pay the representative reasonable and necessary travel and per diem expenses in connection with the representational activities involved and directed the the agency reimburse the representative "in the same manner an to the same extent it would otherwise reimburse employees engaged in official agency travel, upon presentation of appropriate documentation with respect to his expenses."

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

In its first exception the agency contended that the arbitrator's award failed to draw its essence from the parties' collective bargaining agreement. In order for an award to be found deficient as failing to draw its essence from the parties' collective bargaining agreement, the party making the allegation must demonstrate that the award cannot in any rational way be derived from the agreement; or that the award is so unfounded in reason and fact, so unconnected with the wording and purpose of the agreement, as to manifest an infidelity to the obligation of the arbitrator; or that the award evidences a manifest disregard for the agreement; or that the award does not represent a plausible interpretation of the agreement. The Authority found that the agency failed to demonstrate that the arbitrator's award was deficient under any of the tests described above.

In its second exception the agency contended that the arbitrator's award was contrary to § 7131 because the agency was not obligated to pay travel and per diem expenses for union representatives on official time under that provision. The Authority held that the arbitrator interpreted a provision of the parties' agreement as requiring the agency to pay the travel and per diem expenses of union representatives performing covered labor-management relations activities on official time. While the agency was correct in stating that § 7131 does not require agencies to pay travel and per diem to union representatives on official time, in this case, the agency negotiated an agreement provision requiring it to pay such expenses. The Authority held that the arbitrator's award based on his interpretation of the agreement was not contrary to § 7131.

In its third exception the agency asserted that the arbitrator's award was deficient because travel and per diem is a subject outside the duty to bargain and that as interpreted by the arbitrator, the pertinent provision in the parties agreement is nonnegotiable as inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act since it provides for the payment of travel and per diem expenses without the mandatory agency head determination that the employee was traveling on official business and that the travel was in the primary interest of Government. The Authority found that the arbitrator's determination effectively constitutes a finding that the agency had exercised its discretion under the Travel Expense Act through negotiations and had determined that the covered activities were sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business. Further, the arbitrator in directing the payment of travel and per diem expenses in connection with the covered activities, expressly provided for the agency to reimburse the employee representative "in the same manner and to the extent it would otherwise reimburse employees engaged in official agency travel, upon presentation of appropriate documentation with respect to his expenses." Thus, the arbitrator effectively directed the payment of travel and per diem expenses only to the extent the expenses are consistent with the Federal Travel Regulations. The agency failed to establish that the award was deficient.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Francis T. O'Brien filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATION AWARD

The parties submitted to arbitration the issue of whether the Activity violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement when it required certain employees to work a midweek holiday. Before the Arbitrator the Activity argued that it had properly acted in accordance with its right to assign work. However, the Arbitrator stated that management's right to assign work is not absolute and may be abridged by provisions of the agreement and by past practices. In this respect, he determined that under the parties' collective bargaining agreement, there was an established practice of not requiring employees to work midweek holidays. Accordingly, the Arbitrator sustained the grievance and directed the employer to cease and desist from requiring employees to work on midweek holidays.

III. EXCEPTION

In its exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority has repeatedly recognized that the plain language of section 7106(a) provides that "nothing" in the Statute shall "affect the authority" of an agency to exercise the rights enumerated in that section. E.g., American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1968 and Department of Transportation, Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, Massena, New York 5 FLRA 70, 79 (1981), aff'd sub nom. AFGE Local 1968 v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 565 (D.C. Cir. 1982), cert. denied 461 U.S. 926 (1983). Therefore, the Authority has consistently held that no arbitration award may interpret or enforce a collective bargaining agreement so as to improperly deny an agency the authority to exercise its rights under that section. E.g., U.S. Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service, Western Regional Office, San Pedro, California and American Federation of Government Employees, Immigration and Naturalization Service Council, Western Region, Local 2805, 18 FLRA No. 20 (1985). In addition, the Authority has clearly indicated that no past practice may be established regarding the rights enumerated in section 7106(a) that would bind management to the particular manner in which it had exercised such rights in the past so as to preclude management from acting otherwise in the exercise of those rights. See, e.g., Veterans Administration Medical Center, Kerrville, Texas and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2281, 18 FLRA No. 57 (1985); Department of the Interior, U.S. Geological Survey, Conservation Division, Gulf of Mexico Region, Metairie, Louisiana, 9 FLRA 543, 545 (1982). Section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute reserves to management officials the authority to assign work. Encompassed within this right is the right to determine without interference when work which has been assigned will be performed. E.g., National Federation of Federal Employees, Council of Consolidated Social Security Administration Locals and Social Security Administration, 13 FLRA 422 (1983); New York State Nurses Association and Veterans Administration Medical Center, Bronx, New York, 11 FLRA 578 (1983). In terms of this case, as has been noted, the Arbitrator determined that under the parties' collective bargaining agreement, there was an established practice of not requiring employees to work midweek holidays and that such practice precluded management from acting otherwise with respect to the assignment of work. Thus, the Authority finds that by effectively prohibiting the assignment of work on midweek holidays, the award has enforced the parties' agreement and practices so as to improperly deny the Agency its right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) to determine when work which has been assigned will be performed. Consequently, the Authority concludes that the award is deficient as contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Arbitrator's award is set aside.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the interest arbitration award of Arbitrator William E. Rentfro filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.*/

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The dispute before the Arbitrator concerned, among other things, the negotiation impasse of the parties over what modification, if any, should be made in the grievance procedures and what procedures should be followed by the parties in effecting final approval of agreements negotiated at the local level. Pursuant to the provisions of the parties' general agreement approved by the Federal

Service Impasses Panel, the impasse was referred to interest arbitration for resolution. With respect to the grievance procedures, the Arbitrator noted that the Union had proposed a change to provide travel and per diem expenses for the grievant, witnesses, and representatives while presenting a grievance. In terms of the proposal, the Arbitrator observed that traditionally, the risk or cost in processing a grievance has been borne by each party. He concluded that if each party pays its own way in pursuing a grievance, the stakes are more equitable and the parties are encouraged to settle the grievance at an early stage without resort to arbitration. Accordingly, as his award in this respect, the Arbitrator determined not to incorporate this proposal into the collective bargaining agreement.

With respect to the approval procedure, the Arbitrator noted that the Activity had proposed several amendments and that the Union had objected to the proposals because they were not within the mandatory duty to bargain and therefore were not properly before the Arbitrator. The Arbitrator agreed with the Union's characterization and concluded that the proposed changes were not appropriate amendments to the approval procedure as contained in the existing agreement. Accordingly, as his award in this respect, the Arbitrator determined not to change the approval procedure of the existing agreement. However, because of the expressed concerns of the Activity, the Arbitrator suggested that a clarification of the existing agreement might satisfy those concerns. Thus, he suggested a clarification of the existing language and proposed for consideration by the parties certain additional language to further clarify the intent of the existing agreement.

The Union has filed exceptions to the Arbitrator's resolution of both of these impasses.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception the Union contends that the Arbitrator's resolution of the impasse over grievance procedures by determining not to include a provision for travel and per diem is deficient as contrary to law and contrary to the evidence. In support of this exception, the Union primarily argues that the refusal to provide for travel and per diem is contrary to section 7131(d) of the Statute and ignores the evidence showing the hardships on employees of grievances and the evidence showing that it is not traditional in the Federal sector for each side to pay its own costs.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Authority finds that the Union fails to establish that the award is deficient as alleged. Contrary to the argument of the Union that the refusal to provide for travel and per diem is contrary to section 7131(d), the Authority stated in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), that both the Statute and the legislative history are silent on the payment from Federal funds of travel expenses incurred in the conduct of labor-management relations activities, which would include in terms of this case the processing of grievances. Id. at 3. Moreover, the Authority noted in Customs Service that the U.S. Supreme Court, in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, 464 U.S. 89 (1983), had rejected the argument that employees on official time were entitled under law to travel and per diem expenses. In reaching its decision on remand in the Customs Service case, in the light of the Supreme Court's decision in BATF, the Authority concluded that the union's proposal seeking payment of travel and per diem expenses incurred by employees on official time was within the agency's duty to bargain under the Statute. However, the Authority further concluded that while the agency was obligated to bargain in good faith over the disputed proposal it was under no obligation to agree to the union's formulation. Customs Service, at 8-9. The Authority therefore finds in this case that the Union's position that it was entitled as a matter of law to have its proposal for the payment of travel and per diem expenses included in the parties' agreement is without merit. The Authority concludes that that the Arbitrator's determination not to require that the Union's proposal be included in the agreement is not contrary to section 7131(d) of the Statute as alleged by the Union. Similarly, the Union's contention that the award is contrary to the evidence is nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's evaluation of the evidence and with his reasoning and conclusions in reaching his determination not to incorporate the Union's proposal into the agreement. Consequently, this contention provides no basis for finding the award deficient. See, e.g., American Federation of Government Employees, Council 236 and General Services Administration, National Capital Region, 12 FLRA 236 (1983).

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second exception the Union contends that the Arbitrator's resolution of the impasse over the approval procedure is contrary to law and contrary to the evidence.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Authority finds that the Union fails to establish that the award is deficient as alleged. In support of this exception the Union does not argue that the Arbitrator's determination not to change the existing agreement is deficient or that the approval provision ofthe existing agreement is contrary to law. Instead, the Union only argues that the Arbitrator's suggested clarification of the existing language and his proposal of additional language for consideration by the parties, which the Union concedes is not mandated to be incorporated into the agreement, are deficient. Consequently, because this exception does not address the award, which as noted resolved the impasse in favor of the Union by ruling not to change the approval procedure of the existing agreement, no basis is provided for finding the award deficient.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and presents issues concerning the negotiability of three Union proposals.

II. Procedural Issue

The Agency contends that the Union's petition for review was untimely filed. Contrary to the Agency's contention, the Authority finds that the petition was timely submitted with respect to the Union's written request for a written allegation of nonnegotiability. Under section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, a union has the right to request in writing that an agency serve it with such written allegation. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3385 and Federal Home Loan Bank Board, District 7, Chicago, Illinois, 7 FLRA 398 (1981).

III. Union Proposal 1

Percentage of award based on the employee's salary shall range as follows:

Annual Performance Rating	Range
Outstanding	10% to 15%
Superior	5% to 10%

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is nonnegotiable because it conflicts with management's right to determine its budget under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute. The Agency also argues that the proposal is inconsistent with 5 U.S.C. §§ 4502 and 4503.

The Union contends that the proposal is not inconsistent with management's right to determine its budget. The Union also contends that the proposal is not inconsistent with 5 U.S.C. §§ 4502 and 4503.

B. Analysis

1. Management rights

Under existing Authority precedent, we find that the proposal is nonnegotiable for reasons other than those alleged by the Agency. In particular, Union Proposal 1 would establish a range of percentages of salary for the purpose of determining the amount of an award given for employee performance. Because this proposal would substantively affect the rate of a performance-related award, it has the same effect as Union Proposal 5 in National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue Service, 14 FLRA 463 (1984), appeal docketed sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. FLRA, No. 84-1292 (D.C. Cir. July 9, 1984). In that case the Authority found that a proposal which would establish the rate of a monetary incentive for performance directly interfered with management's rights to direct employees and to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B).

Because this proposal concerns awards for employee performance, however, it is different from Union Proposals 2 and 3 in this case. Performance based incentive awards relate to an employee's accomplishment with respect to his or her job requirements. Performance awards are, therefore, ultimately based in management's right to determine those employee job requirements. Incentive awards granted for suggestions relate to an employee's voluntary participation in an agency suggestion program. See Federal Personnel Manual, Chapter 451. In determining whether a proposal prescribing the amount or range of amounts of incentive awards is negotiable, therefore, the Authority looks to see whether the award is ultimately based in the exercise of a management right, as is the case with performance awards. Compare National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 207 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Washington, D.C., 14 FLRA 598, 601-4 (1984) (Union Proposal 2), appeal docketed as to other matters sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, No. 84-1286 (D.C. Cir. July 6, 1984), in which the Authority held a proposal establishing the amount of a suggestion award to be within the duty to bargain.

C. Conclusion

For the reasons more fully set forth in our decision in the Internal Revenue Service case cited above, Union Proposal 1 is not within the duty to bargain. Moreover, for the reasons discussed below in connection with Union Proposals 2 and 3, we find that Union Proposal 1 does not interfere with management's right to determine its budget and is not inconsistent with 5 U.S.C. §§ 4502 and 4503.

A. Positions of the Parties

In addition to the arguments raised in connection with Union Proposal 1, the parties are in dispute as to whether Union Proposals 2 and 3 are also nonnegotiable because they are inconsistent with management's right, under section 7106(b)(1), to determine the methods, means and technology of performing its work.

B. Analysis

1. Management rights

As explained by the Union, Union Proposals 2 and 3 would leave to the discretion of the Agency the decision as to whether to grant an award; however, once the decision to grant such an award was made the terms of the proposal would apply with respect to determining the amount of the award.

In American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 603 (1980), enforced as to other matters sub nom. Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982), the Authority stated generally that it would find a proposal inconsistent with an agency's right to determine its budget if the proposal by its terms prescribed a particular program or an amount of funds to be included in the agency's budget or if the agency made a substantial demonstration that the proposal would result in a significant and unavoidable increase in costs which would not be offset by compensating benefits. Union Proposals 2 and 3 prescribe neither a particular program[1] nor an amount of funds to be included in a budget. Assuming, as the Agency contends, that it would be required by the proposals to budget larger amounts for its incentive awards program, it has not demonstrated that such increase would not be offset by compensating benefits. In fact, the proposals would specifically link the amount of an award to the amount of benefits to the government which resulted from the suggestion being rewarded.

Nor can the Agency's assertion that the proposals would interfere with its right under section 7106(b)(1) to determine the technology, methods, and means of performing work be sustained. The Agency contends that if, because of budgetary restraints, it were unable to provide an award in the amount specified by the proposals, it would be prevented from implementing a suggestion which could involve worthwhile improvements to the technology, methods, and means of performing work. The Agency's assertion that its inability to provide a specified award would preclude implementation of suggested improvements to technology, methods, and means is not persuasive. An employee whose suggestion is adopted has the right to be considered for an award and an agency is not bound to grant an award upon adoption of a suggestion. Federal Personnel Manual, Chap. 451, Subchap. 8-5; see also Stephen L. Kempinski v. The United States, 164 Ct. Cl. 451 (1964), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 981 (1964).

[1] Agencies are required pursuant to 5 CFR 451.205(a)(3) (1984 Supp.) to allocate "an adequate budget" to assure prompt action on incentive awards.

2. Inconsistent with Federal Law

Finally, the Agency contends that the proposals are contrary to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. §§ 4502 and 4503, which it describes as reserving to the head of each agency the right to determine the amount of each incentive award. Those statutory provisions vest agencies with the discretion to, among other things, determine the amount to be paid as awards for suggestions.[2] The Authority has held that to the extent that an agency has discretion with respect to a matter affecting the conditions of employment of its employees, that matter is within the duty to bargain. National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 748 (1980). Absent any indication that the discretion provided to agency heads in 5 U.S.C. §§ 4502 and 4503 is intended to be sole and exclusive, the Agency's position cannot be sustained.

> § 4502. General provisions
> (a) Except as provided by subsection (b) of this section, a cash award under this subchapter may not exceed $10,000.
> (b) When the head of an agency certifies to the Office of Personnel Management that the suggestion, invention, superior accomplishment, or other meritorious effort for which the award is proposed is highly exceptional and unusually outstanding, a cash award in excess of $10,000 but not in excess of $25,000 may be granted with the approval of the Office.
> (c) A cash award under this subchapter is in addition to the regular pay of the recipient. Acceptance of a cash award under this subchapter constitutes an agreement that the use by the Government of an idea, method, or device for which the award is made does not form the basis of a further claim of any nature against the Government by the employee, his heirs, or assigns.
> (d) A cash award to, and expense for the honorary recognition of, an employee may be paid from the fund or appropriation available to the activity primarily

C. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons we find that Union Proposals 2 and 3 do not directly interfere with management's rights to determine its budget or to determine the methods, means, or technology of performing its work. We also find that Union Proposals 2 and 3 are not inconsistent with 5 U.S.C. §§ 4502 and 4503.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case comes before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It raises issues concerning the negotiability of a single Union Proposal.

II. Union Proposal

> Employee negotiators representing the union will be compensated by the agency for all travel and per diem expenses unless the agency can demonstrate just cause for not doing so. At a minimum, cause will focus upon any disparate treatment of the management and union teams, the interest of the public, employee morale, and a viable labor management relationship.

III. Positions of the Parties

As explained by the Union, the proposal is not intended to conflict with any applicable law or regulation. Indeed, the Union states:

> This proposal permits any agency to examine the facts of each reimbursible incident and to decide after the event whether it is reimbursible. By focusing upon a "just cause" standard we have chosen a nonquantitative term of art that allows for a variety of arguments to be raised by the agency. The agency could raise the argument that reimbursement for a particular event is barred by law or regulation. The agency could argue that there is no nexus to government interests or that it is not in the best interest of the government. The arbitrator deciding this dispute would take a variety of factors into consideration and issue a decision based on a weighing of all arguments. The only argument that could standing alone bar reimbursement without consideration of the other arguments is that reimbursement would violate law and regulation.

See, Union Response at pages 8 and 9. Finally, the Union maintains that its proposal limits travel and per diem reimbursement to unit employees authorized to be at the bargaining table on official time. This number is limited to a number of employees equal to the number which represent the Agency.

The Agency contends that the proposal is not within the duty to bargain for the following reasons:

> 1. It does not concern conditions of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute because payment of travel expenses is specifically provided for by law;
> 2. it is inconsistent with Federal law or Government-wide regulation; and
> 3. the demand for travel and per diem to employee/negotiators is not limited to those employee/negotiators who are receiving official time.

IV. Analysis

A. "Conditions of Employment"

The Agency makes an essentially identical "conditions of employment" argument to that made by the agency in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986). The Authority rejected that argument in Customs Service and it is rejected here for the same reasons set forth in that case.

B. Inconsistent with Federal law or Government-wide Rules or Regulations

The Agency contends, in essence, that under the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701 et seq., and the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs), 41 CFR, Part 101-7, a determination as to whether an employee is on "official business" is dependent on the particular facts involved in each individual situation. Consequently, such a determination is not a matter of unlimited discretion on the part of the Agency.

In Customs Service, the Authority has found that agencies have discretion, under the Travel Expense Act and implementing regulations, to determine whether and under what circumstances travel related to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for which employees may receive appropriate expenses from Federal funds. The exercise of that discretion was held to be subject to the negotiation process. The Agency here makes no specific argument that the proposal does not meet the statutory and regulatory standards discussed in Customs Service. Moreover, as noted in the Union's Position, the proposal envisions case by case determinations as to the appropriateness of specific travel and expenses which are necessary and proper under law and governing regulation. Given these circumstances, and for the reasons expressed in Customs Service, the Agency's assertion that the proposal is inconsistent with law and Government-wide regulations must be rejected.

C. Limited to those Employee/Negotiators Who Are Receiving Official Time.

The Agency contends that the proposal, on its face, would permit employee/negotiators who are not receiving official time to be entitled to travel and per diem. However, in our view the explicit language of the proposal does not require payment of travel and per diem to those employee/negotiators who are not receiving official time. Indeed, the Union, as previously noted, interprets the proposal to limit travel and per diem reimbursement to only unit employees authorized to be at the bargaining table on official time. In any event, nothing in Customs Service analysis indicates that travel and per diem must be tied to 7131 official time in order to be negotiable. Instead, negotiability of travel and per diem is based on consideration of whether travel involved is in the primary interest of the Government so as to constitute "official business" without consideration of section 7131. Consequently, we find the Agency's contention not to be supported.

V. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, the Authority finds that the proposal concerns a condition of employment which is not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. Therefore, the proposal is within the duty to bargain.*/

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request, or as otherwise agreed to by the parties, bargain concerning the Union Proposal.

CONSOLIDATED DECISION ON RECONSIDERATION

I. Statement of the Case

These cases are before the Authority pursuant to the Authority's Order granting the Agency's motions for reconsideration of the Authority's December 3, 1982, decisions in National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 and U.S. Army Engineer District, Kansas City, Mo., 10 FLRA 550 (1982) and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1363, Republic of Korea and U.S. Army Garrison, Yongsan, Korea, 10 FLRA 560 (1982). The sole question presented is the impact that the Debt Collection Act of 1982 has upon the negotiability of the proposals herein.

In the previous decisions in these cases, the Authority found the following proposals to be within the duty to bargain:

Union Proposal (O-NG-467)

> 1. That all employees be notified, on travel orders and annually of the requirement to file travel vouchers no later than 15 days after completion of travel;
> 2. That employees that do not comply with paragraph 1, or who are indebted to the U.S. Government be officially notified that payment be made within 15 days of the receipt of the notice;
> 3. That payment becomes delinquent after 30 days from the date of the notice and payroll deductions will be initiated; unless a waiver or payment arrangements have been made;
> 4. That no interest charge be made. (Interest charge for delinquent unused travel advances). [Only the underscored language is in dispute.]

Union Proposal (O-NG-450)

> We propose that members of our bargaining units not be subject to late payment charges.

The proposals concern the conditions under which employees will reimburse the Agency for monies they have received through advances where the work-related expenses actually incurred are less than the advance. The proposals were in dispute only insofar as they provided that interest and late payment charges would not be assessed. The original finding of negotiability was premised upon the conclusion that an agency has discretion under the Federal Claims Collection Standards (FCCS), 4 CFR Parts 101-105,1/ and the Treasury Fiscal Requirements Manual (TFRM).

Prior to the issuance of the Authority's decisions but after the parties' submissions had been filed, Congress enacted the Debt Collection Act of 1982, Pub. L. No. 97-365, 96 Stat. 1749 (1982) (the Act). Accordingly, the Agency's motions for reconsideration were granted so that the Authority could consider the impact of the Act upon the negotiability of the Union's proposals. Upon careful consideration of the entire record, including the parties' contentions, the Authority makes the following determinations.

II. Motion to Strike

The Union moved that portions of the Agency's statement of position be struck because they exceeded the scope of the issue upon which the Authority granted reconsideration. The Authority's Order granting the Agency's motions for reconsideration requested the parties to submit statements of position addressing the "issue of the impact that the Debt Collection Act of 1982 has upon the negotiability of the proposals involved." The Authority finds that the Agency's statement raises issues in addition to that which the Authority's Order invited the parties to address. Accordingly, the Union's motion is granted, and the Authority will consider only those arguments which concern the impact of the Debt Collection Act upon the disputed proposals.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the Debt Collection Act of 1982 does not apply to these proposals.

The Union contends that the proposals are within the duty to bargain because the Debt Collection Act authorizes an agency to waive the collection of interest and late payment charges.

were decided have been superseded by the revised Federal Claims Collection Standards (hereinafter referred to as the revised FCCS) issued jointly by the General Accounting Office and the Department of Justice pursuant to the Debt Collection Act of 1982. The revised FCCS became effective April 9, 1984, and are codified at 4 CFR Parts 101-105.

IV. Analysis

A. Applicability of the Debt Collection Act

The major purpose of the Debt Collection Act was to facilitate collection procedures in the federal government by expanding the debt collection tools available to federal agencies.[2] The Agency contends that the Act covers only general debts owed the United States but does not apply to travel advances under 5 U.S.C. § 5705, which preceded the Act and authorizes repayment of delinquent unused travel advances through setoff against an employee's pay.[3] The legislative history of the Act shows that the Act's purpose was primarily to facilitate the collection of "general debts" owed the government, for example, by authorizing setoff against a federal employee's salary under 5 U.S.C. § 5514 for general debts such as student loans or overpayment of Veterans Administration (VA) benefits. However, contrary to the Agency's contentions, the coverage of the Act was not intended to be limited solely to such "general debts," but also to include those debts such as unused travel advances for which salary offset was already authorized. The Senate Report accompanying the Act states:

> The type of indebtedness that may be deducted would include, but is not necessarily limited

[3] 5 U.S.C. § 5705 provides:

> An agency may advance, through the proper disbursing official, to an employee entitled to per diem or mileage allowances under this subchapter, a sum considered advisable with regard to the character and probable duration of the travel to be performed. A sum advanced and not used for allowable travel expenses is recoverable from the employee or his estate by--
> (1) setoff against accrued pay, retirement credit, or other amount due the employee;
> (2) deduction from an amount due from the United States; and
> (3) such other method as is provided by law.

> to, erroneous payments made to the employees, overpayments of benefits, salary or other allowances, travel allowances, federal loans or guaranteed or insured loans, or other indebtedness resulting from stolen property.[4/] [Emphasis added.]

Furthermore, while subsection (c) of section 5514 provides that the salary offset provisions of the Act do not modify existing statutes which provide for salary offset, that subsection does not prevent the remaining provisions of the Act from being applied to debts covered by the existing statutes. The Authority concludes that the Debt Collection Act applies to the repayment of unused travel allowances.

B. Agency Discretion to Waive Interest Under the Act

The section of the Act most relevant to the proposals in dispute, 31 U.S.C. § 3717, requires an agency to charge interest and late payment penalties on outstanding debts owed to the United States Government. Subsections (a) and (e) of section 3717 provide in relevant part:

> (a)(1) The head of an executive or legislative agency shall charge a minimum annual rate of interest on an outstanding debt on a United States Government claim owed by a person[.]
> . . . . . .
> (e) The head of an executive or legislative agency shall assess on a claim owed by a person--
> (1) a charge to cover the cost of processing and handling a delinquent claim; and
> (2) a penalty charge of not more than 6 percent a year for failure to pay a part of a debt more than 90 days past due.

The word "shall" in subsections (a) and (e) was intended by Congress to be mandatory and imperative,[5] leaving agencies without discretion to waive interest and penalty charges absent express exception. The mandatory nature of the interest and penalty provisions is consistent with the numerous references in the legislative history of the Act concerning the importance of the interest provisions to the overall purpose of the Act. For example, the Senate Report accompanying the Act found the sizeable amount of delinquent debt owed the United States Government "disturbing." It cited the failure of agencies to regularly charge interest and assess late payment penalties among the reasons for this large delinquent debt.[6] In discussing the requirement that agencies assess interest and late payment charges, the Report states that:

> Generally, there is either no assessment for interest and penalties on debts owed the government or, if there is, the assessment is at rates that are considerably below market rates. This is in spite of the joint GAO/Justice Department regulations issued in the Federal Claims Collection Standards in April 1979 and subsequent Treasury regulations which require agencies to charge debtors interest on overdue payments. These include Agriculture, Labor, HUD, Interior, Defense,Health and Human Services, Veterans, and Treasury (except IRS). Other departments and agencies, such as Energy, assess interest but lack uniform department policies and procedures for doing so.
> In the absence of interest charges for delinquent payments, debtors have little or no incentive to make timely payments. Also, debtors are likely to pay their private sector debts first and their government debts last. The Committee has concluded that this factor > is a major contributor to the growing amount of delinquent debt owed the government.[7]

5/ Detailed Explanation Prepared by the Office of Law Revision Counsel, accompanying Revision of Title 31, U.S.C.A., Pub. L. No. 97-452, 96 Stat. 2467, 128 Cong. Rec. H9528 (1982), reprinted in 1982 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 4301, 4302.

Thus, the legislative history of the Debt Collection Act indicates that Congress considered the uniform assessment of interest and late payment charges by federal agencies to be a central feature of its program to improve the government's debt collection procedures.

The Union contends that subsection (g) of section 3717,[8] which provides that the interest requirement of the Act does not apply where a "contract" prohibits the charging of interest or assessment of late payment charges, authorizes an agency to enter into a collective bargaining agreement which contains a provision waiving the application of the required interest and penalty charges. The legislative history of the Debt Collection Act does not address the question of whether the term "contract" includes a collective bargaining agreement. Section 3717(g)(1) must, therefore, be read in light of the "provisions of the whole law, and . . . its object and policy." Mastro Plastics Corp. v. NLRB, 350 U.S. 270, 285 (1956) (quoting United States v. Boisdore's Heirs, 8 How. 113, 122). In view of the importance attached by Congress to the interest and penalty requirements of the Act, any exceptions to section 3717 should be narrowly construed so as not to frustrate the Congressional purpose. If section 3717(g)(1) were read to authorize an agency to negotiate with an exclusive representative concerning the waiver of interest and penalty charges, this would result in the application of such charges on a bargaining unit-by-bargaining unit basis contrary to the Congressional intent that agencies uniformly assess interest and late payment charges on delinquent debts.

[7] S. Rep. 97-378 at 17, 1982 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News at 3393. In addition to the Report, testimony before Congress indicated that the government loses a substantial amount of revenue because of the failure of agencies to charge interest on delinquent debts. See, e.g., Debt Collection Act of 1981: Hearings on S. 1249 Before the Senate Comm. on Governmental Affairs, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. (1981) (hereinafter Debt Collection Act), at 50 (statement of David A. Stockman, Director, OMB), and 83-84 (statement of Milton J. Socolar, Acting Comptroller General, GAO); Statement of Charles A. Bowsher, Comptroller General, Concerning Federal Departments and Agencies Failure to Collect Audit-Related Debts, before the House Comm. on Governmental Operations, Subcomm. on Legislation and National Security, at 4-5 (Feb. 24, 1982).

[8] 31 U.S.C. § 3717(g)(1) provides in relevant part:

> (1) if a statute, regulation required by statute, loan agreement, or contract prohibits charging interest or assessing charges or explicitly fixes the interest or charges[.]

Additionally, the legislative history indicates that Congress intended provisions such as 3717(g)(1) to apply where the waiver of interest and penalty charges would further the social objectives of government programs being administered by an agency. The Senate Report accompanying the Act states in its discussion of section 3717:

> These provisions will generate an incentive for the debtor to pay while protecting the debtor and the social objective of the government programs by allowing flexibility in the assessment of the interest and penalty charges.9/

the types of government programs most often discussed in the legislative history of the Act are those involving loans administered by agencies such as the Department of Education, Veterans Administration, Small Business Administration, and Housing and Urban Development,10/ in which the "contracts" executed by the agencies are specifically concerned with the terms governing the repayment of money to the United States. The Authority finds that the term "contract" in 31 U.S.C. § 3717(g)(1) refers to those contracts which specifically concern the payment or repayment of money pursuant to a particular government program, and not to contracts in the general sense, such as collective bargaining agreements.11/ Accordingly, the Authority concludes that 31 U.S.C. § 3717(g)(1) does not authorize an agency to enter into a collective bargaining agreement which provides that the interest required by section 3717(a) and the late payment penalties required by section 3717(e) not be charged.

Furthermore, neither is this type of waiver authorized by 31 U.S.C. § 3717(h), which provides:

> (h) In conformity with standards prescribed jointly by the Attorney General and the Comptroller General, the head of an executive or legislative agency may prescribe regulations identifying circumstances appropriate to waiving collection of interest and charges under subsections (a) and (e) of this section. A waiver under the regulations is deemed to be compliance with this section.

The corresponding regulation, 4 CFR 102.13(g) of the revised FCCS,[12] provides in relevant part:

the Senate bill, which stated that "[s]ection 10 would revise procedures for interest calculations and require the assessment of other penalties on debt more than 90 days delinquent, unless specific . . . contract provisions prohibit such charges." [Emphasis added.] S. Rep. No. 287, 97th Cong., 1st Sess. 15. Additionally, in the legislative history, one example of the type of contract provision envisioned by section 3717(g)(1) makes reference to such a "specific contract." Milton J. Socolar, Acting Comptroller General, stated in his testimony before the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs that "we think [with respect to low interest rate loans] that some agencies should provide in the contracts that they execute for those loans, upon becoming delinquent, should revert at that point to an interest rate that is commensurate with the interest rate in the commercial market." [Emphasis added.] Debt Collection Act, supra note 9, at 69.

[12] Since the revised FCCS specify criteria for the application and waiver of interest charges rather than incorporate the provisions of the TFRM as in the superseded regulations, the TFRM is no longer relevant to the negotiability of these proposals.

> [A]n agency may waive, in whole or in part, the collection of interest, penalties, and/or administrative costs assessed under this section under the criteria specified in Part 103 of this chapter relating to the compromise of claims (without regard to the amount of the debt), or if the agency determines that collection of these charges would be against equity and good conscience or not in the best interests of the United States. Waiver . . . may be exercised only in accordance with regulations issued by the agency identifying the standards and appropriate circumstances for waiver. Examples of situations which agencies may consider including in their interest waiver regulations are: (1) Waiver of interest pending consideration of a request for reconsideration, administrative review, or waiver of the underlying debt under a permissive statute, and (2) waiver of interest where the agency has accepted an installment plan under § 102.11 of this Part, there is no indication of fault or lack of good faith on the part of the debtor, and the amount of interest is large enough in relation to the size of the installments that the debtor can reasonably afford to pay that the debt will never be repaid.

Thus, an agency may waive interest and penalty charges under this provision only if the collection of those amounts is against "equity and good conscience or not in the best interest of the United States."13/ The comments accompanying the regulation state that "'equity and good conscience' is generally satisfied where the indebtedness resulted from the agency's administrative error and there is no indication of fraud, misrepresentation, fault or lack of good faith on the part of the debtor."14/ The Authority finds that section 3717(h) and the implementing regulation were intended to permit an agency to waive interest and penalty charges in individual cases where the agency deemed such waiver to be appropriate in light of the standards set forth in the regulation, but were not intended to authorize a blanket waiver of these charges as contended by the Union. Accordingly, the Authority concludes that the waiver of interest and penalty charges on the delinquent repayment of unused travel advances would not be consistent with the standards for waiver set forth in the regulation as they were intended to be interpreted and applied by their promulgators.

Finally, when Congress did intend the provisions of the Debt Collection Act to interact with the collective bargaining process, it expressed that intent by making specific reference to the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). For example, section 5514(b)(2) provides that no regulation prescribed to carry out subsection (a)(2) of that section, which establishes procedures to be followed by an agency seeking to collect a debt through deductions from an employee's salary, shall be considered a Government-wide rule or regulation for purposes of section 7117(a) of the Statute. No similar reference to the Statute appears in 31 U.S.C. § 3717 that would indicate Congress' intent to allow the interest requirement of the Act to be subject to the collective bargaining process.

V. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, the Authority concludes that the proposals are inconsistent with the Debt Collection Act of 1982 and the implementing regulations in the revised FCCS. Since the Union proposals here are contrary to law and regulation, the Authority now finds it appropriate to vacate its prior decisions in U.S. Army Engineer District, Kansas City, 10 FLRA 550, and U.S. Army Garrison, Yongsan, Korea, 10 FLRA 560.

VI. Order

Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that the petitions for review in 10 FLRA 550 and 10 FLRA 560 be now, and they hereby are, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case is before the Authority because of an appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It raises issues concerning the negotiability of the underlined portions of the following provisions of a negotiated agreement disapproved by the Agency head under section 7114(c) of the Statute.

Provision 1

ARTICLE 7 REPRESENTATION

Section 1.

The parties acknowledge the right of bargaining unit members at all locations to have access to Union representation. The following sections provide the procedures for representation activities on official time other than bargaining and for the payment of travel expenses for Area Representatives meeting the criteria established in this Article. Employees will contact the Union representative nearest the employee's location unless the representative is not available. In that case, the Area Representative may be contacted.

Statement 3(B)

If travel is necessary, Area Representatives may request a reasonable amount of official time for representation duties from their supervisor. The request shall include the general nature of the representational duty, the names and location of the employee(s) involved, and the estimated time required. The requested time shall be approved unless the current work needs of the Agency cannot be met, in which case mutually agreeable arrangements will be made to approve the request as soon as possible. Each Union representative or unit employee authorized to be on official time for the representational activity shall record the item involved in the remarks section of their time card or similar document. Seventy-five hundred dollars ($7500) of travel expenses for representation duties shall be provided in accordance with applicable law and Government-wide regulations, provided that no more than $5,000 of the allocation may be expended during the first two years. Travel expenses necessary for a representative to present a case at an Arbitration or MSPB proceeding shall not be deducted from the allocation. In addition, travel expenses for participation in FLRA proceedings shall be authorized in accordance with 5 CFR 2429.13.

Provision 3

ARTICLE 14 ARBITRATION

Section 4.

Official time shall be granted to bargaining unit employees acting as the representative for employees or the Union. Official time shall be granted to bargaining unit employees who testify as witnesses. Official time for > witnesses shall be limited to the time needed to travel to and from the proceeding and testify. Official time, transportation costs, and per diem shall be provided by the Employer for Union representatives within the area involved and all witnesses deemed necessary by mutual agreement of the Parties. If the Parties cannot agree that a witness is necessary, the matter shall be submitted to the arbitrator, whose decision shall be final and binding. Witnesses determined to be necessary by the arbitrator shall be compensated pursuant to that expressed above. Travel time and expenses and official time are not authorized for expert advisors or observers.

II. Positions of the Parties

As explained by the Union, the provisions are not intended to conflict with any applicable law or regulation. Rather, they are limited to establishing the circumstances under which travel occurring in the context of union activities will be construed to be in the primary interest of the Government and, hence, official business for purposes of payment of incidental and otherwise proper travel expenses. The Union states that under the provisions the Agency can grant or deny requests for actual travel. Thus, the Agency retains the ability to make appropriate case by case determinations regarding specific travel and/or expenses.

The Agency contends that the provisions are not within the duty to bargain for the following reasons:

a. They do not concern conditions of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute because payment of travel expenses is specifically provided for by law;

b. they are inconsistent with Federal law and Government-wide regulation; and

c. they conflict with an agency regulation for which a compelling need exists.

III. Analysis

A. "Conditions of Employment"

The Agency involved in this case makes essentially the same "conditions of employment" argument as that made by the agency in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986). The Authority rejected that argument in Customs Service. It is rejected here for the same reasons as set forth in that case.

B. Inconsistent with Federal Law or Government-Wide Rules or Regulations

The Agency asserts that under the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701 et seq., and the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs), 41 CFR, Part 101-7, as interpreted by the Comptroller General, determinations that travel expenses incurred in the context of union activity are in the primary interest of the Government and that ensuing expenses are payable from agency funds must be made by management alone on a case by case basis.

In Customs Service, the Authority found that agencies have discretion, under the Travel Expense Act and implementing regulations, to determine whether and under what circumstances travel related to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for which employees may receive appropriate expenses from Federal funds. The exercise of that discretion was held to be subject to the negotiation process. The Agency here makes no specific argument that the provisions here concerning the circumstances under which otherwise appropriate travel expenses would be payable do not meet the statutory and regulatory standards discussed in Customs Service. Moreover, the provisions do not preclude case by case determinations as to the appropriateness of specific travel and expenses which are necessary and proper under law and governing regulation. Given these circumstances, and for the reasons expressed in Customs Service, the Agency's assertion that the provisions are inconsistent with law and Government-wide regulations must be rejected.

C. Inconsistent with an Agency Regulation for Which a Compelling Need Exists

The Agency regulation upon which the Agency relies was issued by the Department of Agriculture and purports to establish procedures for the payment of travel and per diem expenses to union representatives when official time has been granted under section 7131(a) and (d) of the Statute. The regulation provides that determinations on whether to pay travel and per diem may be made only on a case by case basis and solely by management. The Agency argues that the regulation is essential to comply with the Travel Expense Act and implementing regulations. In Customs Service the Authority has found that neither the Travel Expense Act nor the Federal Travel Regulations require that determinations as to whether travel related to labor-management relations activities is primarily in the interest of the United States be made unilaterally by management and only on a case by case basis. Therefore there is no support for the Agency's contention that its regulation is essential to compliance with the Travel Expense Act and implementing regulations. The Agency's argument that a compelling need exists for its regulation is rejected.

IV. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, the Authority finds that the provisions concern a condition of employment and are not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. Nor are the provisions barred from negotiations because they are inconsistent with an agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. Therefore, they are within the duty to bargain.*/

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall rescind its disapproval of Provisions 1, 2 and 3 which were bargained on and agreed to by the parties at the local level.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of a single Union proposal.

II. Union Proposal

> Employees holding retained grade rights will be selected for any vacancy which is to be filled during the period of eligibility for retained grade if the vacancy is to be filled at or below the retained grade level and the qualification requirements are otherwise met.

A. Positions of the Parties

According to the Union, the proposal would apply to employees who are affected by reduction-in-force actions involving release from competitive levels but who are in a retained-grade status, and would require the Agency to select such employees for vacancies which the Agency has decided to fill during the period of retained-grade eligibility and for which the employees are qualified. The Union argues that the proposal constitutes an "appropriate arrangement", within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management's rights. In support of its position the Union cites the decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 702 F.2d 1183 (D.C. Cir. 1983), reversing and remanding American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 and Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 91 (1981). The Union also contends that the proposal does not in any way conflict with Government-wide regulations.

The record does not include any evidence of the position of the Agency. The Agency failed to respond to the Union's request for an allegation of nonnegotiability and its statement of position was untimely filed.[1/]

B. Analysis

The Authority agrees with the Union, that the proposal in this case has the same effect as the proposal at issue in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, 14 FLRA 801 (1984), and is dispositive of the issues presented here. In that case the Authority concluded that the proposal constituted a negotiable appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.[2/] However, the Authority also concluded in its Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 that

1/ The record indicates that the Agency in this case received a copy of the Union's petition for review on October 28, 1983, and that the Agency's statement of position was not received by the Authority until December 1, 1983. The record also indicates that the Agency requested, pursuant to section 2429.23(b) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, a waiver of the expired time limit. The Authority denied the Agency's request because it failed to demonstrate extraordinary circumstances. Consequently, pursuant to section 2424.6(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the Agency's statement of position was untimely filed and was not considered in this case.

2/ Subsequent to the filings in this case the Authority issued National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986), in which we specifically adopted the excessive interference test enunciated by the District of Columbia Circuit in AFGE, Local 2782, 702 F.2d 1183, as being applicable to all cases involving "appropriate arrangements" under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

the proposal was nevertheless outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute because it was inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation. Specifically, the proposal conflicted with Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM), which would permit agencies to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source. The proposal in this case would require the Agency to select only those employees who are affected by reduction-in-force actions involving release from competitive levels for vacancies which it has decided to fill during the period of retained-grade eligibility. By so doing, it would have the same effect as the proposal in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census and would prevent the Agency from making selections from any appropriate source. Thus, for the reasons stated more fully in our Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, the proposal in this case also violates Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the FPM, a Government-wide regulation, and is outside the duty to bargain.

C. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, the Authority finds that the proposal in this case conflicts with FPM, chapter 335, subchapter 1-4, and, therefore, is nonnegotiable under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute even though the proposal, absent such a conflict, would constitute an appropriate arrangement and be negotiated pursuant to section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

III. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Jesse Simons filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The parties submitted to arbitration the issue of whether management was justified under the parties' collective bargaining agreement or under applicable law or regulation in refusing to pay travel and per diem expenses of the local union president in the amount of $116.00 for a one-day trip to Washington, D.C., to visit officials of the National Union and Congress. The Arbitrator sustained the grievance finding that the Activity's refusal to pay travel and per diem was wholly untenable under the provisions of the parties' agreement and was not supportable under any cited law or regulation. Accordingly, as his award, the Arbitrator ruled that the refusal of management to pay the disputed expenses was violative of the parties' agreement and that the refusal was not mandated by any law or regulation, and he therefore directed management to pay the local union president the sum of $116.00.

III. FIRST, SECOND, AND THIRD EXCEPTIONS

A. Contentions

In its initial exceptions, the Agency contends that the award is based on a nonfact and fails to draw its essence from the collective bargaining agreement and that the Arbitrator exceeded his authority. The Agency's arguments in support of these exceptions are essentially the same. The Agency essentially argues that the award is deficient in these respects because the Arbitrator erroneously interpreted the parties' collective bargaining agreement as providing a basis on which to award the payment of travel and per diem. The Agency's position is that the Arbitrator could not properly have interpreted the provisions of the parties' agreement to find that the Agency violated the agreement in refusing to pay the disputed travel and per diem expenses.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that these exceptions constitute nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's interpretation and application of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Arbitrator clearly interpreted the parties' agreement to encompass travel and per diem payments. Thus, the Agency in these exceptions is clearly seeking to have its own interpretation of the parties' collective bargaining agreement substituted for that of the Arbitrator and the Authority has uniformly held that such exceptions provide no basis for finding an arbitration award deficient. E.g., National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1418 and U.S. International Communication Agency, Voice of America, 9 FLRA 980 (1982). Accordingly, these exceptions are denied.

IV. FINAL EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its final exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to the Statute. Specifically, the Agency maintains that the award is contrary to management's right to determine the mission and budget of the agency under section 7106(a) and is contrary to the official time provisions of section 7131. However, the sole argument of the Agency in support of this exception is again that the Arbitrator has erroneously interpreted the parties' collective bargaining agreement as providing a basis on which to award the payment of travel and per diem.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that this exception fails to establish that the award is deficient as alleged by the Agency. In National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), the Authority found the following proposal to be within the duty to bargain:

> The employer agrees to pay the travel expenses incurred by employees while using official time available under the terms of this agreement.

In finding the proposal to be within the duty to bargain, the Authority stated that the Statute is silent on whether travel expenses incurred in the conduct of labor-management relations activity are payable from federal funds and that the proposal did not conflict with the right of the agency to determine its budget under section 7106 because there was no substantial demonstration that the proposal would result in a significant and unavoidable increase in costs. Id. at 3, 7-8. In this case, the Authority similarly concludes that the Arbitrator's interpretation of the parties' agreement to find management's refusal to pay the disputed travel and per diem expenses to be unjustified has not been shown to be contrary to the right of the Agency to determine its mission or budget under section 7106 or to be contrary to the official time provisions of section 7131. Moreover, other than its bare assertion, the Agency has made no showing that the award interferes in any way with the Agency's right to determine its mission. Rather, in arguing that the Arbitrator erroneously interpreted the parties' agreement, the Agency is again clearly disagreeing with the Arbitrator's interpretation and application of that agreement which provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

Additionally, in finding the proposal in U.S. Customs Service to be within the duty to bargain, the Authority concluded that the proposal would not require the agency to authorize the payment of expenses which do not comport with regulatory requirements and restrictions. Id. at 6. The Authority based its conclusion upon the union's acknowledgment that payment of any travel expenses flowing from the proposal, if agreed upon, would be subject to the provisions of the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs).*/ In this case, the Arbitrator in directing the payment of travel and per diem expenses in the amount of $116.00 has not expressly provided for agency determinations regarding the propriety under the FTRs of travel and per diem expenses in that amount. Consequently, the Authority must modify the award to assure that it is consistent with the requirements of the FTRs.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2425.4 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and for the reasons stated above, that portion of the award directing the payment of $116.00 is modified to provide as follows:

*/ The FTRs, 41 CFR part 101-7, have been held to be Government-wide rules or regulations within the meaning of the Statute. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 and U.S. Army Engineer District, Kansas City, Missouri, 13 FLRA 23, 24 (1983).

> The local union president is entitled to payment of his travel and per diem expenses for his representational activities in question insofar as consistent with applicable requirements of the Federal Travel Regulations.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Thomas Angelo filed by the Agency pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The substantive issue submitted to arbitration was whether the Agency violated section 7131(d) of the Statute and Article 27, Section 10 of the parties' negotiated agreement by failing to pay the travel and per diem expenses of the Union's Regional Vice President when he performed certain representational activities on official time. Article 27, Section 10 provided that travel would be paid in accordance with the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute. The Arbitrator found that the parties had agreed in that provision that union representatives engaged in the activities set forth elsewhere in the parties' agreement (Article 6, which pertained to official time) were entitled to reimbursement for related travel and per diem expenses. In his award, the Arbitrator determined that the Agency was obligated under Article 27, Section 10 of the parties' agreement to pay the individual representative in this case reasonable and necessary travel and per diem expenses in connection with the representational activities involved. As a remedy, the Arbitrator directed the Agency to reimburse the representative "in the same manner and to the same extent it would otherwise reimburse employees engaged in official Agency travel, upon presentation of appropriate documentation with respect to his expenses."

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contention

In its first exception, the Agency contends that the Arbitrator's award fails to draw its essence from the parties' collective bargaining agreement. In support of this contention, the Agency argues that it did not agree to pay travel and per diem expenses for union representatives on official time, but merely agreed to abide by any obligation it might have under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute to pay such expenses.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

It is well-established that in order for an award to be found deficient as failing to draw its essence from the parties' agreement, the party making the allegation must demonstrate that the award cannot in any rational way be derived from the agreement; or that the award is so unfounded in reason and fact, so unconnected with the wording and purpose of the agreement, as to manifest an infidelity to the obligation of the arbitrator; or that the award evidences a manifest disregard for the agreement; or that the award does not represent a plausible interpretation of the agreement. E.g., American Federation of Government Employees, National Border Patrol Council and U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, Southern Region, Dallas, Texas, 3 FLRA 540, 543 (1980). In this case, the Authority finds that the Agency has failed to demonstrate that the Arbitrator's award does not draw its essence from the parties' agreement under any of the tests described in INS, Southern Region. Rather, the exception merely constitutes disagreement with the Arbitrator's interpretation of the agreement and therefore does not provide any basis for finding the award deficient. E.g., The Philadelphia Regional Office, District Office Operations, Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employee Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3186, 15 FLRA 211 (1984).

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contention

In its second exception, the Agency in effect contends that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to section 7131 of the Statute because, as interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983), the Agency is not obligated to pay travel and per diem expenses for union representatives on official time under that provision.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

As indicated above, the Arbitrator in this case interpreted Article 27, Section 10 of the parties' agreement as requiring the Agency to pay the travel and per diem expenses of union representatives performing covered labor-management relations activities on official time. The Authority therefore finds that while the Agency is correct in stating that section 7131 of the Statute does not require agencies to pay travel and per diem to union representatives on official time, in this case, as determined by the Arbitrator, the Agency negotiated an agreement provision requiring it to pay such expenses. Further in that regard, the provision involved, Article 27, Section 10, is essentially to the same effect as the proposal found by the Authority to be within the duty to bargain in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986). The proposal in that case provided:

> The employer agrees to pay the travel expenses incurred by employees while using official time available under the terms of this agreement.

In finding the proposal to be within the duty to bargain, the Authority stated that the Statute is silent on whether travel expenses incurred in the conduct of labor-management relations activities are payable from Federal funds. Id. at 3. In this case, the Authority concludes that the Arbitrator's award based upon his interpretation of the parties' agreement is not contrary to section 7131 of the Statute as alleged by the Agency in its exception.

V. THIRD EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its third exception, the Agency contends that the Arbitrator's award is deficient because travel and per diem is a subject outside the duty to bargain under the Statute. More specifically, the Agency argues that as interpreted by the Arbitrator the pertinent provision in the parties' agreement is nonnegotiable as inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5701 et seq., since it requires payment of travel and per diem expenses without the mandatory agency head determination that the employee was traveling on official business and that the travel was in the primary interest of the Government.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

As indicated above in the analysis and conclusion concerning the Agency's second exception, the Authority expressly found in U.S. Customs Service that a proposal essentially to the same effect as the agreement provision here involved was within the duty to bargain under the Statute. Moreover, the Authority further found that the proposal was not inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act because that Act does not prohibit an agency from exercising, through negotiations, its discretion to determine whether travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for purposes of reimbursement of related travel expenses. Id. at 6. In this case, the Arbitrator determined that the Agency agreed to pay the travel and per diem expenses related to the labor-management relations activities covered by the official time provision of the parties' agreement. The Authority finds that the Arbitrator's determination effectively constitutes, in terms of U.S. Customs Service, a finding that the Agency had exercised its discretion under the Travel Expense Act through negotiations and had determined that the covered activities were sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business.

Additionally, in finding the proposal in U.S. Customs Service to be within the duty to bargain, the Authority concluded that the disputed proposal would not require the agency to authorize the payment of expenses which did not comport with regulatory requirements and restrictions. Id. at 6. The Authority based its conclusion on the union's acknowledgment that the payment of any travel expenses flowing from the proposal, if agreed upon by the parties, would be subject to the provisions of the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs).*/ In this case, the Arbitrator in directing the payment of travel and per diem expenses in connection with the covered activities expressly provided for the Agency to reimburse the employee representative here involved "in the same manner and to the same extent it would otherwise reimburse employees engaged in official Agency travel, upon presentation of approporiate documentation with respect to his expenses." Thus, the Arbitrator effectively directed the payment of travel and per diem expenses only to the extent the expenses are consistent with the FTRs. Accordingly, the Authority concludes that the Agency has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient as alleged in this exception.

VI. DECISION

Based on the foregoing analysis and conclusions, the Agency's exceptions are denied.

DIGEST NOTES

In separate concurring opinions, the Members of the Authority set forth standards to be considered in making and/or reviewing attorney fee determinations under the Back Pay Act [5 U.S.C. § 5596] and applicable provisions of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 [5 U.S.C. § 7710(g)]. Once an award of backpay has been properly made under the Back Pay Act for the correction of an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action, the following criteria must be met in order for a party to be eligible for an award of attorney fees in unfair labor practice cases and in grievance arbitration awards: (1) Fees must have been incurred for services of an attorney; (2) Fees may be sought only by the prevailing party; (3) The award of fees must be warranted "in the interest of justice"; (4) The amount claimed for attorney fees must be reasonable; (5) The award of fees must be set out in a fully articulated, reasoned decision. The separate concurring opinions of both Members discussed in detail the above criteria and its application.

An arbitrator's reference to one party's brief as support for a finding of attorney fees, or a cursory statement that the arbitrator considered the necessary elements of analysis does not meet the requirement under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g) for a fully articulated, reasoned decision. An arbitrator's award of attorney fees must draw its essence from a demonstrable, pragmatic analysis of the factors set out in the applicable statutes.

The grievance at issue in this case concerned entitlement to environmental differential pay and involved questions of health and safety related to asbestos exposure. In a supplemental award, the arbitrator, among other things, approved the union counsel's request for attorney fees. Thereafter, the Authority, responding to the agency's exceptions, remanded (14 FLRA 782 (1984)) the award of attorney fees to the parties. The parties were directed to submit to the arbitrator the award for the limited purpose of clarifying and interpreting his award of attorney fees in order to articulate fully specific findings on all pertinent statutory provisions. The remand cited a then recent Authority decision (14 FLRA 680) in which the Authority ruled that an award of attorney fees under the Back Pay Act (5 U.S.C. § 5596) must be made "in accordance with standards established under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)." In his clarification, the arbitrator found that attorney fees were payable in the case under the Back Pay Act and the Civil Service Reform Act [5 U.S.C. § 7701(b)]; that the amount of the attorney fees was "reasonable"; the award of attorney fees was "in the interest of justice". As support, however, the arbitrator primarily referred to the union's brief. In its exceptions to the arbitrator's award as clarified, the agency contended that the award was deficient as contrary to the Back Pay Act and not in accordance with the governing standards under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g) because the arbitrator failed to provide a fully articulated, reasoned decision setting forth the specific findings supporting the determination on each pertinent statutory requirement, including the basis on which the reasonableness of the amount was determined. In separate concurring opinions, the Members of the Authority set forth standards to be considered in making and/or reviewing attorney fee determinations. Based on these separate concurring opinions, the Authority denied the agency's exceptions and modified the award of attorney fees by striking from the amount awarded all compensation for photocopying expenses.

DIGEST NOTES

In all future cases, consistent with its general practice concerning deficient arbitration awards, if the the Authority finds that an award granting attorney fees is deficient because it is not fully supported as required, the Authority will set aside or modify the award as appropriate.

A threshold requirement for entitlement to attorney fees under the Back Pay Act is a finding that the grievant had been affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action which has resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of the grievant's pay, allowances, or differentials. Further the Act indicates that an award of attorney fees must be in conjunction with an award of backpay to the grievant on correction of the unwarranted or unjustified personnel action. The award of attorney fees must be reasonable and related to the personnel action, and in accordance with the standards established under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g). Section 7701(g) prescribes that for an employee to be eligible for an award of attorney fees, the employee must be the prevailing party. Section 7701(g)(1), applicable to all cases except those of discrimination, requires that and award of attorney fees must be warranted "in the interest of justice," that the amount must be reasonable, and that the fees must have been incurred by the employee. The standards established under § 7701(g) further require a fully articulated, reasoned decision setting forth the specific findings supporting the determination on each pertinent statutory requirement, including the basis upon which the reasonableness of the amount was determined when fees are awarded.

A request was filed seeking reconsideration of the Authority's decision setting aside an arbitrator's award of attorney fees. The arbitrator determined that there was not just cause to suspend the grievant and awarded him backpay and benefits for the period of the suspension. The grievant subsequently requested and was granted an award of attorney fees. The Authority, however, found that the the Arbitrator failed to provide a fully articulated, reasoned decision setting forth his specific findings supporting the determination on each pertinent statutory requirement (see 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)) including the bases on which he had determined the the amount of the award was a reasonable amount of attorney fees. The Authority concluded that the award of attorney fees was deficient as contrary to the Back Pay Act and therefore set aside the award.

In its request for reconsideration, the union contended, on legal and equitable grounds, that rather than set the award aside the Authority should have remanded the case to the parties and directed them to seek a fully articulated determination from the arbitrator as to his basis for the award. The union's request was consistent with the Authority's decision in 14 FLRA 680 (1984) (which sets out the statutory requirements regarding awards of attorney fees). In considering the request for reconsideration of this case, the Authority noted that it did not explicitly announce in 14 FLRA 680 that deficient awards of attorney fees issued thereafter despite the benefit of the guidance of that case, would be set aside rather than remanded. The Authority therefore found that the Arbitrator and parties in this case, were not explicitly apprised by the FLRA in any of its decisions that it would set aside an award of attorney fees that was not fully supported as required. Nor were the parties fully apprised by the Authority of their responsibility and interest in ensuring that arbitrators make the requisite determinations. The Authority therefore concluded that reconsideration was warranted and that this case should be remanded to the parties for the purpose of having the arbitrator clarify the award.

DIGEST NOTES

The issue submitted to arbitration was whether the agency had violated the parties collective bargaining agreement and § 7131(a) and (d) of the Statute by denying payment of travel for union representatives negotiating term and/or mid-term agreements and performing other representational functions. Provisions in the parties' agreement provided that official time would be provided employees for representational activity and that travel would be provided in accordance with the Statute. The arbitrator found that by agreeing to the provisions, the agency had agreed to pay travel and per diem expenses for employees on official time for labor-management relations activity. His award sustained the grievance and directed the agency to pay travel and per diem expenses.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

In its exceptions the agency contended that the award was contrary to law and that it was not obligated under § 7131 to pay travel and per diem expenses for union representatives on official time and that the award was not authorized under the Travel Expense Act. The Authority held, relying on 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), that while § 7131 does not require agencies to pay travel and per diem expenses, the agency negotiated and agreed to a provision requiring it to pay. Further, the Travel Expense Act does not prohibit an agency from exercising, through negotiations, its discretion to determine whether travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for purposes of reimbursement of related travel expenses. The Authority found that the arbitrator's determination effectively constitutes a finding that the agency had exercised its discretion under the Act through negotiations and had thereby determined that the covered activities were sufficiently within the interest to the United States so as to constitute official business.

The arbitrator's award directing the payment of travel and per diem expenses in connection with the labor-management relations activities was modified to expressly provide that the agency determine the propriety of particular travel and per diem expenses under the Federal Travel Regulations.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal requiring that the agency's performance appraisal system recognize applicable provisions of law, regulation and the parties' agreement was negotiable where the agency failed to identify the specific provision of internal agency rule or regulation for which it asserted a compelling need and compelling need was the sole reason for alleging that the proposal was nonnegotiable. The compelling need provisions of the Statute are meant to insure that otherwise negotiable bargaining proposals are taken outside the duty to bargain only if the agency involved demonstrates and justifies an overriding need for the policies reflected in the rules or regulations to be uniformly applied throughout the agency. An agency must (1) identify a specific agency-wide regulation; (2) show that there is a conflict between its regulation and the proposal; and (3) demonstrate that its regulation is supported by a compelling need with reference to the Authority's standards set forth in § 2424.11 of its regulations. (proposal 1)

A proposal incorporating specific restrictions from a Government-wide regulation directly interferes with a management right because it imposes the provisions of the regulation as substantive contractual limitations without regard to the regulation's possible subsequent revision or elimination.

Proposals requiring the use of a negotiated performance evaluation form were negotiable. There was no compelling need for an agency's regulatory requirement that there be uniform agency-wide use of its performance evaluation form. An agency must demonstrate that the rule or regulation upon which it relies is "essential as distinguished from helpful or desirable" to achieve certain ends.The agency's contention that its requirement to use a standard form was essential to the accomplishment of its mission or execution of its functions in a manner consistent with the requirements of an effective and efficient government could not be sustained since the negotiated performance evaluation form would contain essentially the same information as the agency's own form. (proposals 2 and 3)

Proposals requiring the use of a negotiated performance evaluation form are not inconsistent with management's right to direct employees and assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and B). Nothing in the disputed language of the proposals nor in the union's statements in the record lends support to the agency's contention that the proposal's requirement that a negotiated performance evaluation form be used amounts to negotiation on the definitions of its performance standards. Since the union is not attempting to negotiate on those definitions, the agency's argument that definitions are nonnegotiable is inapplicable to bar negotiations. (proposals 2 and 3)

Proposals which are otherwise consistent with law and regulation and relate only to particular aspects of performance appraisal systems, apart from the identification of critical elements and the establishment of performance standards, are within the duty to bargain. Similarly, proposals which establish procedures for the development and implementation of performance standards and critical elements, or which establish appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the application of performance standards and critical elements to them, are within the duty to bargain under § 7106(b)(2) and (3).

Proposals prescribing periodic appraisal of employees on an annual basis were consistent with law and Government-wide rules and regulations and within the duty to bargain. The union did not intend to require anything other than annual performance appraisals and did not link the term "annually" in the proposals to any specific month when the annual appraisals should occur. The Authority concluded that the proposals did not conflict with the Agency's Instruction requiring that annual performance appraisals occur in January or October of each year. (proposals 4 and 5)

A proposal which required the agency to reassign an employee prior to terminating or demoting that employee substantially interfered to an excessive degree with management's rights under § 7106(a)(2)(A) to remove employees or reduce them in grade or pay. Additionally, the term "should" in the proposal did not make the proposal discretionary rather than mandatory. Instead the plain language of the proposal would require the the agency in virtually all instances to reassign an employee prior to terminating or demoting that employee for unacceptable performance. (proposal 6)

Under § 7117(c) of the Statute and § 2424.2 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations a negotiability appeal must be filed by an exclusive representative. Nothing in either the Regulations or the Statute precludes the exclusive representative from designating an agent to file an appeal on its behalf. The designation of a representative for purpose of an appeal is strictly for the union to decide.

DIGEST NOTES

The issue in the grievances were whether the agency violated law, regulation, or the parties collective bargaining agreement by requiring the grievants to share a room and by terminating their details when they refused to do so. The Arbitrator determined that 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e), which prohibits requiring an employee to stay in rental quarters unless certain conditions are met, also precludes requiring employees to share hotel rooms unless the same conditions are met. The Arbitrator found that hotel rooms contracted for or reserved by an agency are considered to be Government-furnished quarters and therefore that provision applies to such rooms as well. He further concluded that the intent of the provision was to afford employees in a temporary or travel duty status some degree of freedom to choose their own accomodations and to protect them against being forced into inadequate quarters. The provisions of § 5911(e) require that an employee exercise the same care in incurring expenses that a prudent person would exercise if traveling on personal business and subject also to the conditions set forth in § 5911(e). The Arbitrator found that the grievant's had not acted imprudently and that the conditions in § 5911(e), which might have permitted the employer to require the grievants to share a room in certain circumstances, had not been met in this case. The arbitrator, therefore determined that the agency acted improperly when it attempted to require the grievants to share a room and that their refusal to double up was not a legitimate reason for terminating their details. He determined the agency could not require the employees to double up in hotel rooms while in travel status unless the requirements of 5 U.S.C. 5911(e) are met. He also awarded one grievant backpay for 41 hours of overtime he estimated the grievant would have worked if his detail had not been terminated.

In its first exception the agency alleged that the award was contrary to law because the arbitrator misapplied 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e). The Authority found that the agency did not establish that the arbitrator erred by applying 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e) or that the award is contrary to that the provision. The agency was merely disagreeing with the arbitrator's reasoning and conclusions which was no basis for finding the award deficient.

In its second third and and fourth exceptions the agency contended respectively: that the arbitrator's award failed to draw its essence from the parties' agreement because the arbitrator did not expressly find that management violated the parties' agreement; that the arbitrator exceeded his authority by deciding an issue that was not raised in the grievance or by the parties; and that the award was based on a nonfact because even assuming that 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e) applies, the arbitrator erroneously concluded that portions of that provision, which coul have warranted requiring the employees to share a room had not been met. The Authority held that the exceptions constituted nothing more than disagreement with the arbitrator's reasoning and conclusions in resolving the dispute which was no basis for finding the arbitrator's award deficient.

In its fifth exception the agency alleged that the award of 41 hours retroactive overtime pay to one of the grievants was contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. 5596. The Authority found that the arbitrator determined that the agency acted improperly when it attempted to require the grievants to share a room and terminated their detail when they refused. However, the arbitrator also found that overtime was not certain. He did not expressly find both that the unjustified termination of the detail directly resulted in the loss of overtime pay and that but for this unjustified action the grievant would have received such pay. The Authority therefore found that there was insufficient legal basis for an award of backpay and the award of overtime pay was contrary to the Back Pay Act.

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award, as clarified, of Arbitrator Peter Florey filed by the Department of the Navy (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Based on the separate concurring opinions below, the Agency's exception to the Arbitrator's award, as clarified, is denied and the award of attorney fees is modified by striking from the amount awarded all compensation for photocopying expenses.

FEDERAL LABOR RELATIONS AUTHORITY

OPINION OF CHAIRMAN CALHOUN:

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case presents the question of the propriety of the Arbitrator's award of attorney fees pursuant to the Back Pay Act (5 U.S.C. § 5596) and requires an articulation of the standards arbitrators should apply in rendering a decision to grant or deny attorney fees and in determining the amount of fees to be granted where warranted.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance at issue concerned entitlement to environmental differential pay and involved questions of health and safety related to asbestos exposure. The Arbitrator issued his original Opinion and Award in the underlying matter on July 1, 1982. He found the grievance arbitrable; compliance with the Agency's regulation concerning asbestos hazards "generally satisfactory . . . but not uniformly implemented,"; and returned the case to the parties for computation of backpay. In a Supplemental Award dated March 15, 1983, the Arbitrator selected a computation of backpay favorable to the Union's position and approved the Union counsel's submission requesting payment of his attorney fees. The Agency timely filed an exception contesting only the award of attorney fees. In reviewing that exception, the Authority concluded in 14 FLRA 782 (1984) that remand was appropriate and ordered:

> [T]he award is remanded to the parties with the direction that they request, jointly or separately, that the Arbitrator clarify the award. The submission to the Arbitrator is for the limited purpose of having the Arbitrator clarify and interpret his award of attorney fees to articulate fully specific findings on all pertinent statutory provisions.

This short remand decision cited the Authority's decision in International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and United States Army Support Command, Hawaii, 14 FLRA 680 (1984). In that case the Authority ruled that an award of attorney fees under the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596 (see Appendix), must be made "in accordance with the standards established under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)." The Authority cited with approval existing decisional precedent of the U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB)[1] and held that in ruling on an attorney fee request, the arbitrator must issue a "fully articulated, reasoned decision setting forth the specific findings supporting the determination." Id. at 684.

In his clarification, the Arbitrator in the present case found that "[a]ttorney fees are payable in this case under the Back Pay Act [5 U.S.C. § 5596] and the Civil Service Reform Act [5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)]" and that the amount of attorney fees was "reasonable." In support of these findings, the Arbitrator noted that the Union's grievance concerning entitlement to an environmental pay differential for exposure to asbestos involved the health and safety of a number of employees; was of the highest priority; and was sincerely pursued by the Union with considerable justification. He affirmatively found that the Activity knew of asbestos exposure exceeding the standards of the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health and that such knowledge required "greater attention" by Agency officials. The Arbitrator concluded that the matter involved a continuing struggle for safety in the workplace under conditions endangering the health of employees and constituted a situation warranting an award of attorney fees "in the interest of justice."[2]

III. POSITIONS OF THE PARTIES

The Agency contends that the award of attorney fees is deficient as contrary to the Back Pay Act, as amended. Specifically, it maintains that the award is not in accordance with the governing standards established under section 7701(g) because the Arbitrator failed to provide a fully articulated, reasoned decision setting forth the specific findings supporting the determination on each pertinent statutory requirement, including the basis on which the reasonableness of the amount was determined.

In its opposition to the Agency's exception, the Union argues that the award of attorney fees is warranted "in the interest of justice" because of the complex health and safety issues involved; that the Activity's unwillingness to grant any portion of the remedy resulted in the expensive arbitration proceeding; and that considerations of the Union's duty of fair representation and lack of resources warrant the award of fees. The Union further maintains that the circumstances of this case support the award of attorney fees under the standards identified by the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) in Allen v. U.S. Postal Service, 2 MSPB 582 (1980).

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

A. Relevant Precedents and Statutory Provisions

In its earlier decisions, the Authority determined that a review of an arbitrator's award of fees must be within its original subject matter jurisdiction[3] and that the arbitrator must possess the statutory authority to award attorney fees.[4] Attorney fees may be awarded by arbitrators in a variety of unjustified and unwarranted personnel actions, including, but not limited to, actions subject to the negotiated grievance procedure or relating to an unfair labor practice.[5] In addition, the broad category of personnel actions covered by the Back Pay Act includes the omission or failure to take an action or confer a benefit.[6]

Further, as set forth in Army Support Command, Hawaii, the Back Pay Act requires that the award of fees be in conjunction with an award of backpay to the grievant on correction of the unwarranted personnel action,[7] that the award of fees must be reasonable and related to the personnel action, and that the award of attorney fees must be in accordance with the standards established under section 7701(g).

Subsection (1) of section 7701(g), which applies to all cases except those involving complaints of discrimination,[8] requires that the employee must be the prevailing party, that the fees must have been incurred by the employee, that the award of attorney fees must be warranted "in the interest of justice," and that the amount must be reasonable.

While the MSPB has had numerous cases in which to address fee awards for attorneys under the applicable provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g), to date there has been a paucity of opportunities for the Authority to review appeals of arbitration awards contesting attorney fee findings. The jurisdiction of arbitrators (as well as other "appropriate authorities") under the Back Pay Act, however, extends to a significantly wider range of matters than those within the jurisdiction of the MSPB. As in the instant case, many questions heard by arbitrators involve situations where an employee or group of employees affirmatively initiate the grievance procedure to seek a benefit allegedly improperly withheld by management.[9]

[7] See also Audie L. Murphy VA Hospital, San Antonio, Texas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local No. 3511, 16 FLRA 1079 (1984).

[8] Section 7701(g)(2), pertaining to cases of discrimination prohibited by 5 U.S.C. § 2302(b)(1), requires as to such cases that the award of attorney fees must be in accordance with the standards prescribed under section 706(k) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(k).

[9] See Simmons v. MSPB, 768 F.2d 323 (Fed. Cir. 1985) and Scarborough v. OPM, 723 F.2d 801 (11th Cir. 1984) (attorney fees awarded in connection with disability retirement applications under 5 U.S.C. § 8347).

Because of the experience of the MSPB in this area and the many similarities between the two agencies with respect to the types of matters that come before them, the Authority has in the past reviewed MSPB attorney fee standards and, where applicable, has adopted MSPB rationale. This inclination by the Authority to cite Board precedents should not, however, in my judgment, be interpreted by parties to future proceedings as an absolute adoption by the Authority of MSPB case law. Likewise, I would not limit or restrict the Authority or arbitrators to awarding attorney fees only in those cases that are analogous to MSPB appeals.

In this opinion, it is my intent to provide further guidance to advocates and arbitrators with regard to the standards to be considered in making attorney fee determinations under 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1).

B. The Analytical Framework

As stated above, five distinct requirements must be met for an arbitrator's award of attorney fees to be supportable under the provisions of section 7701(g)(1):

1. Fees must be incurred for the services of an attorney.

2. Fees may be sought only by the prevailing party.

3. The award of fees must be warranted "in the interest of justice."

4. The amount claimed for attorney fees must be reasonable.

5. The award of fees must be set out in a fully articulated, reasoned decision.

A detailed analysis of each of these requirements follows.

1. Incurrence of Attorney Fees: An attorney - client relationship must exist and the attorney must have rendered legal services on behalf of the appellant. O'Donnell v. Department of Interior, 2 MSPB 604 (1980).

2. Prevailing Party: An appellant is the prevailing party for the purposes of a fee award if he or she has obtained all or a significant part of the relief sought. Sterner v. Department of the Army, 711 F.2d 1563, 1566-67 (Fed. Cir. 1983). The party need not prevail on all issues; rather, it is sufficient to prevail on a significant, separable claim on the merits. Hanrahan v. Hampton, 446 U.S. 754 (1980); Bradley v. Richmond School Board, 416 U.S. 696 (1974). In reviewing a request for attorney fees one should look to the "substance of the litigation" to determine whether a party has substantially prevailed in its position, and not merely to the "technical disposition of the case or motion." Devine v. Sutermeister, 733 F.2d 892 (Fed. Cir. 1984).

3. Interest of Justice: The MSPB in Allen held that the interest of justice standard includes, but is not limited to, cases involving prohibited personnel practices, agency actions clearly without merit, agency actions taken in bad faith to harass or exert improper pressure on an employee, agency gross procedural error which prolonged the proceeding or severely prejudiced the employee, and cases where the agency knew or should have known it would not prevail on the merits when it brought the proceeding. I believe that in defining and applying the parameters of the "interest of justice" standard, arbitrators should consider these factors as further clarified and augmented below. This compilation of factors, however, is not intended to be all-inclusive; rather, additional considerations should be applied where relevant and appropriate to individual cases and arbitrators are to be guided by both equity and logic. Illustrative examples gleaned from MSPB and court cases are as follows:

a. Instances where the agency presents little or no evidence to support its actions or demonstrates either a lack of or negligent preparation of the case.10/ This includes instances where the agency's action lacks substantial justification or is totally unfounded and clearly without merit. For example, a situation where the agency's careful reading of the relevant statutes and regulations would have promptly shown that its interpretation was erroneous.

10/ Compton v. Department of Energy, 9 MSPB 91 (1982); Trowell v. United States Postal Service, 3 MSPB 117 (1980).

b. Instances where agency ill will, or negligence, tainted the action against the employee to an unconscionable degree. This may be inferred from agency action or inaction throughout the proceedings.[11]

c. Instances where the agency initiated action against an employee in disregard of prevailing law, regulations, or negotiated agreement provisions on federal policy. Examples include actions based on improper denial of overtime, environmental differential pay, shift differentials, hazardous duty pay, annual leave, administrative leave, or official time for representational functions.

d. Instances where the employee is ultimately found to be substantially innocent of the charges brought by the agency. This determination is made on the basis of the result of the appeal rather than on the evidence and information available to the agency at the time the agency effected the action.[12] This standard is not met, however, where the employee believes that he or she is substantially innocent, can prove his or her innocence, and deliberately does not communicate all of the facts to the agency deciding official where the employee's disclosure would reasonably have caused the agency official to modify or overturn the action. Such an employee deliberately and improperly prolongs the agency's legal proceedings and cannot be regarded as an innocent victim who is entitled to attorney fees in the interest of justice.[13]

e. Instances where the agency fails to inquire into facts presented by the employee or fails to conduct a prudent inquiry into the employee's contradictory evidence.[14] For example, had an agency inquired into the facts presented by the employee, the agency would or should have ascertained at the outset that the charges against the employee were without merit or that the grievance should have been sustained.

f. Instances where there is either a service rendered to the federal work force or there is a benefit to the public derived from maintaining the action.[15] For example, situations where an employee's grievance leads to correction of workplace problems affecting a segment of the workforce, as in the instant case.

4. Reasonableness of the fee: The reasonableness of the fee is to be considered after entitlement has been established.[16] In calculating what constitutes a reasonable fee, courts have applied a variety of methods and multifactor analyses. An example of a method of computation acceptable to administrative adjudicatory bodies and most courts is the "lodestar" concept, wherein the attorney's customary hourly billing rate is multiplied by the number of hours reasonably devoted to the case. Careful review of the hourly rate and the number of hours claimed to have been expended is required prior to computing the lodestar. See Mitchell v. Department of Health and Human Services, 19 MSPR 206 (1984). Reduction of the hourly rate or the number of hours must, however, be justified by detailed findings. See Crumbaker v. MSPB, No. 85-1982 (Fed. Cir. Jan. 28, 1986), slip op. at 3-9.

The lodestar figure becomes the starting point for the setting of the fee and may be adjusted upward or downward for factors including, but not limited to, contingency fee arrangements where there was a risk of nonpayment or partial payment, extreme difficulty of the case, and extensive expertise of counsel which is not reflected in the hourly rate. The burden of justifying any adjustment to the lodestar figure falls on the party proposing the change. Copeland v. Marshall, 641 F.2d 800 (D.C. Cir. 1980); Lindy Bros. Builders, Inc. v. American Radiator and Standard Sanitary Corp., 540 F.2d 102 (3d Cir. 1976); Mitchell, 19 MSPR 206. An award of attorney fees should not, however, be reduced simply because a party failed to prevail on every contention raised. See Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424 (1983); Boese v. Department of the Air Force, No. 85-2357 (Fed. Cir. February 19, 1986), slip op. at 7.

The computation of reasonable attorney fees differs where the award will ultimately be received by a union rather than a law firm. In such cases, the fee must be computed based upon actual expenses rather than the market value of the services rendered. Further, a legal fund created by the union for fees does not alter the limitation to actual expenses for union attorneys. Goodrich v. Department of the Navy, 733 F.2d 1578 (Fed. Cir. 1984), cert. denied 105 S. Ct. 958 (1985); NTEU v. Department of Treasury, 656 F.2d 848 (D.C. Cir. 1981).

5. Fully articulated, reasoned decision for fees: In the application of the standards set out under 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g), the arbitrator is to provide a fully articulated, reasoned decision granting or denying the request for attorney fees. Army Support Command, Hawaii, at 684. The decision must contain independent and specific analysis, findings, and conclusions on each pertinent statutory requirement including the reasonableness of the amount of fees when fees are awarded.

An arbitrator's reference to one party's brief as support for a finding of attorney fees, or a cursory statement that the arbitrator considered the necessary elements of analysis does not meet this test. Rather, such defects create an analytical void which serves to confuse the parties, the public and the reviewing bodies. As an arbitrator's award must draw its essence from the parties' collective bargaining agreement,[17] so too must an arbitrator's award of attorney fees draw its essence from a demonstrable, pragmatic analysis of the factors set out in the applicable statutes.[18]

V. THE ANALYTIC FRAMEWORK APPLIED TO THIS CASE

Having clarified the analytic framework I believe should be applied in attorney fee cases under the Back Pay Act, the question to be addressed is whether the award of attorney fees in the instant case is consistent with the requirements of the Back Pay Act. Based upon the following analysis, I conclude as follows:

1. Incurrence of Fees: The record shows that an obligation to pay attorney fees was incurred by the Union on the employees' behalf.

2. Prevailing Party: There is no dispute that the employees in this case were prevailing parties.

3. Interest of Justice: A careful review of the initial decision by Arbitrator Florey establishing rights and remedies under the collective bargaining agreement, and his subsequent Report to the Authority, supports a finding that the award of attorney fees is in the "interest of justice." The Arbitrator specifically found that "in an installation striving for zero asbestos exposure, forty full days each year of exposure exceeding NIOSH standards (in the case of pipefitters) reflected hazardous conditions requiring greater attention" on the part of the Agency. Further, he noted the "complexity and magnitude" of the case and the "feigned cooperation" of the Agency. He specifically noted that the asbestos problem is clear cut and thoroughly documented and presents a continuing struggle for safety in the workplace"; and that the "health and safety of the employees . . . was pursued by the Union . . . as reflected in the decision, with considerable justification." Finally, the Arbitrator concluded that "the case presented by the Union in the present proceedings, particularly the evidence of pipefitters and other craftsmen, contained . . . elements damning justifiably the professed sincerity, competence and good faith of operating supervisors below the Command Level".19/ These statements by the Arbitrator are construed to be tantamount to a finding that the Agency should have known of the hazard and should have taken affirmative action to remedy the hazard. It is further concluded that the record supports findings that the magnitude of the injustice done to the employees in exposing them to asbestos and the public benefit derived from maintaining the action are substantial.

[17] E.g., American Federation of Government Employees, National Border Patrol Council and U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, Southern Region, Dallas, Texas, 3 FLRA 540 (1980).

[18] I note the Authority's concurrent action in rescinding its decision setting aside the award of attorney fees in 20 FLRA No. 87 and remanding the case to the parties with direction that they request the arbitrator to clarify his award by providing the requisite fully articulated, reasoned decision setting forth specific findings on all pertinent statutory requirements.

4. Reasonableness of the Amount of the Award:

The hourly billing rate of $65 requested by the Union's attorney is well within the range routinely approved by MSPB and the courts and is not challenged by the Agency. It is less than the rather conservative rate allowed under the Equal Access to Justice Act, 5 U.S.C. § 504. The detailed time records submitted to the Arbitrator conform to the requirements of MSPB decisions and established practice in personnel cases. See, e.g., Mitchell, 19 MSPR 206. One necessary adjustment must be made, however. Counsel's fee statement includes photocopying expenses. MSPB and the courts no longer permit photocopying expenses to be awarded as attorney fees under section 7701(g)(1). Bennett v. Department of the Navy, 699 F.2d 1140, 1144 (Fed. Cir. 1983); Koch v. Department of Commerce, MSPB Docket No. DC03518110733ADD (Jan. 25, 1984).

19/ Arbitrator's Report to the Authority, December 5, 1984, at 3-7.

5. Fully articulated, reasoned decision: The Arbitrator's clarification was rendered pursuant to the Authority's order that he "articulate fully specific findings on all pertinent statutory provisions." The Arbitrator's decision primarily incorporates by reference the arguments of the Union and does not meet the requirement for a fully articulated and reasoned decision containing independent analysis, findings and conclusions. Because of the extended proceedings in this matter and because the record adequately permits resolution of the Agency's exception, the decision in this case is not to remand for further proceedings. This decision, however, in no manner sanctions the practice of incorporation of a party's arguments by reference as a means of setting forth the specific findings supporting the determination of attorney fees as required by 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g).

Dated, Washington, D.C., March 25, 1986

Jerry L. Calhoun, Chairman

MEMBER FRAZIER CONCURRING:

I concur in the Chairman's decision that the arbitrator's award of attorney fees herein meets the basic statutory requirements under the Back Pay Act[20] and I agree with his conclusion that the amount of fees must be modified for the reasons he gives.

However, I feel that it is incumbent upon me to explain the manner in which I reached my conclusion that the arbitrator's award of attorney fees in this case meets the requirement for a "fully articulated, reasoned decision" setting forth the specific findings supporting the determination on each pertinent statutory requirement for an award of attorney fees and hence is not deficient in this regard. Further, I believe it is necessary to explicate the manner in which I have reached my conclusion that the arbitrator's award establishes that an award of attorney fees in this case is "warranted in the interest of justice" and hence is not deficient in this regard.

I. BACKGROUND AND SUMMARY OF THE ARBITRATION AWARD

The arbitrator, in his initial opinion and award in this case, stated that the grievance was filed on behalf of pipefitters who were alleged to be "assigned duties which expose them to a Category 16 hazard as set forth in Appendix 'J' of the FPM Supplement 532-1, i.e., Asbestos Dust and Article XVIII, Section 'G' of the Negotiated Agreement . . . ." Management had denied the requested 8% payment because, as stated by the arbitrator in his initial opinion and award, "[m]anagement was providing protective equipment and that, in Management's opinion, the protective equipment was practically eliminating the potential for personal illness and injury." The reference to the elimination of the potential for personal illness and injury was a reference to the provisions of FPM Supplement 532-1, Appendix J, which provides for a differential pay rate of 8% to employees "[w]orking in an area where airborne concentrations of asbestos fibers may expose employees to potential illness or injury and protective devices or safety measures have not practically eliminated the potential for such personal illness or injury."

The arbitrator went on to say in his initial opinion and award, that:

> . . . the parties have incorporated Navy regulations into their negotiated agreement with respect to the payment of Appendix J hazard allowances, and OPNAVINST 6260 deals specifically with the control of asbestos exposure. The wording of the contract does not permit an inquiry into the reasonableness of the regulation in the grievance procedure, but the Center's compliance with the regulation is at issue and determines its liability for payment of the asbestos allowance.

Award at 9. The arbitrator further stated:

> [T]he question of the concentration of asbestos which exposes employees to potential illness has been pre-empted by Naval regulations which the parties have incorporated in their negotiated agreement. The Center itself has stated without reservation that it will apply safety procedures to asbestos levels below the limits set by OSHA: "Realizing that working with asbestos may be hazardous, Ref (b) [unspecified document] was written which promulgated specific procedures and equipment requirements when employees worked with asbestos exposures equal to or greater than two fibers per cubic centimeter. NADC has gone a step further in requiring these safety precautions to be taken whenever working with asbestos no matter what the airborne concentration of asbestos and these procedures are in strict compliance with Ref (b) and all equipment utilized conforms to NIOSH standards."
> . . . [T]he issue in this case narrows to the question of the safety precautions taken by the Center to avoid exposure to asbestos.

Award at 15-16. [Emphasis added.]

The arbitrator found that "[t]o protect the health of its employees effectively against the asbestos hazard, all the procedures mandated by OPNAVINST 6260 have to be followed." [Emphasis in original.] He also found that:

> [i]n theory, the Center has set up an admirable procedure for the protection of its employees against the asbestos hazard following the directive of OPNAVINST 6260. . . . However, the affected employees related at the hearing > that, in practice, they encountered considerable difficulties and shortcomings such as poorly fitting respirators, ripping suits and considerable deficiency in the instructional programs.

Award at 16. The arbitrator found that "[t]his state of affairs is reflected in the NIOSH report" which he attached to his opinion and award. The arbitrator found that this report had "labeled several practical protective measures, including the wearing of respirators, as 'not at all satisfactory.'" He "stressed that providing protective gear, in and by itself, does not constitute a complete safety measure within the meaning of Article [sic] J." Award at 16. The arbitrator concluded that:

> . . . it can be reasonably expected that the parties themselves will work out the type of practical implementation of OPNAVINST 6260.1B which will eliminate the asbestos hazard within reasonable limits and, thereby, the need to pay the hazard differential. It should be noted that institution of an effective asbestos control program was treated as the terminal point of back pay in most of the cited arbitration decisions.

Award at 17. The arbitrator then made the following award: that the Center's program for coping with asbestos hazards was generally in satisfactory compliance with OPNAVINST 6260 but not uniformly implemented as a practical matter; that the case was returned to the parties for further proceedings in the light of the arbitrator's decision and for the computation of backpay; and that payment of the Union attorney fees by the Center would be triggered by retroactive payments made under the award. With respect to the award of attorney fees, the arbitrator noted that the grievance:

> . . . was pursued by the Union sincerely and, as reflected in the decision, with considerable justification. Preparation for a case of this complexity and magnitude requires considerable time and reflection, and the situation is clearly one to which the enabling legislation is addressed by awarding attorney's fees as "warranted by the interests of justice," as long as back pay becomes payable.

Award at 8.

The parties were unable to reach agreement on how to implement the initial award, and the matter was referred once more to the arbitrator. Thereafter, the arbitrator issued a Supplemental Award. In this Supplemental Award, the arbitrator made the following findings and award:

> After careful review, it appears that the positions of the parties are not far apart, but that the approach taken by the Union comes closer to effectuating the findings of the July 1, 1982 award than the proposal by the Center.
> For this reason, backpay shall be computed and paid as outlined in the Union's letter of December 15, 1982, and counsel fees should be adjusted accordingly.

Thereafter, pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the Agency filed an exception to the award of the arbitrator with the Authority. Specifically, the Agency excepted to the award of attorney fees, arguing that the award of attorney fees was contrary to the provisions of the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596, and the standards established under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g), which govern the award of attorney fees under the Back Pay Act.

The Authority, in Naval Air Development Center, Department of the Navy and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1928, AFL-CIO, 14 FLRA 782 (1984), concluded that the arbitrator's award of attorney fees in this case was not in accordance with the applicable standards and statutory requirements of the Back Pay Act and remanded the case to the parties. The remand included direction that the parties, jointly or separately, request the arbitrator to clarify and interpret his award of attorney fees so as to articulate fully specific findings on all pertinent statutory provisions. The Authority decided to remand the case because, as the Authority then pointed out, the award of attorney fees herein was issued on a date prior to the issuance by the Authority of its decision in International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and United States Army Support Command, Hawaii, 14 FLRA 680 (1984) and hence, "the Arbitrator's determination was made without the benefit of the instruction and guidance provided by United States Army Support Command, Hawaii." [Emphasis added.]

In Army Support Command, Hawaii, the Authority for the first time, had addressed in detail the statutory requirements regarding awards of attorney fees. In that case, the Authority said, in pertinent part:

> As previously recognized by the Authority, a threshold requirement for entitlement to attorney fees under the Back Pay Act is a finding that the grievant had been affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action which has resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of the grievant's pay, allowances, or differentials. Department of Defense Dependents Schools and Overseas Education Association, 3 FLRA 259, 263 (1980). Further, a reading of the Back Pay Act indicates that an award of attorney fees must be in conjunction with an award of backpay to the grievant on correction of the personnel action, that the award of attorney fees must be reasonable and related to the personnel action, and that the award of attorney fees must be in accordance with the standards established under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g). Section 7701(g) prescribes that for an employee to be eligible for an award of attorney fees, the employee must be the prevailing party. Section 7701(g)(1), which applies to all cases except those of discrimination, requires that an award of attorney fees must be warranted "in the interest of justice," that the amount must be reasonable, and that the fees must have been incurred by the employee. . . .
> The standards established under section 7701(g) further require a fully articulated, reasoned decision setting forth the specific findings supporting the determination on each pertinent statutory requirement, including the basis upon which the reasonableness of the amount was determined when fees are awarded. See, e.g., Allen v. U.S. Postal Service, 2 MSPB 582 (1980); Kling v. Department of Justice, 2 MSPB 620 (1980); see also 5 CFR § 550.806 (1983).

Therefore, to summarize, because in this case the award was issued on a date prior to the issuance of Army Support Command, Hawaii, and thus without the benefit of the instruction and guidance provided by Army Support Command, Hawaii, it was determined to remand for the purpose of allowing the arbitrator to clarify and interpret his award in the light of the standards articulated by the Authority therein.[21] In the remand the attention of the parties and the arbitrator was directed to the guidance in Army Support Command, Hawaii, by a specific citation to the case.

Thereafter, the arbitrator issued a clarification and interpretation of his award of attorney fees, stating that such "fees are payable in this case under the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. Para. 5596, and the Civil Service Reform Act, 5 U.S.C. Para. 7701(g) as fully explained in the Union's brief which is incorporated into this decision" and that the attorney fees being sought "are reasonable and shall be paid forthwith." [Emphasis added.] In this clarification and interpretation of his award of attorney fees the arbitrator found that "[a]ny reasonable person would agree that even one dollar of 8% Hazardous Duty Payment for asbestos exposure cries out for Attorney Fees in the interest of justice. . . ." Clarification at 5. In reaching this conclusion, in his clarification and interpretation, the arbitrator noted, inter alia:

> Initially, I was not prepared to defend or explain my prior decision in this case. The Union has done it brilliantly and extensively in its brief which I am incorporating into this Report as a part thereof. As [the Union's counsel's] brief points out, there is not a single standard for the payment of Attorney Fees that is not reflected in my decisions.

> [t]he case presented by the Union in the present proceedings, particularly the evidence of pipefitters and other craftsmen, contained . . . elements damning justifiably the professed sincerity, competence and good faith of operating supervisors below the Command Level. . . .

[21] In contrast, an award of attorney fees issued more than one year subsequent to the issuance of Army Support Command, Hawaii, and thus with the benefit of the instruction and guidance provided therein, which did not provide a fully articulated, reasoned decision, was found deficient by the Authority and the award was set aside. See National Association of Air Traffic Specialists and Federal Aviation Administration, Washington Flight Service Station, 20 FLRA No. 87 (1985). However, on this date the Authority has issued an

> It [the Agency] knew that, in an installation striving for zero asbestos exposure, forty full days each year of exposure exceeding NIOSH standards (in the case of pipefitters) reflected hazardous conditions requiring greater attention. . . .
> The asbestos problem is clear cut and thoroughly documented and presents a continuing struggle for safety in the work place.

Clarification at 6-7.

The arbitrator found that the policies of top management were not followed diligently by subordinate supervisors, leading to unwarranted exposure to asbestos hazards on the part of the employees involved in the arbitration. As noted above, the arbitrator incorporated the brief filed by the Union counsel into his report of clarification and interpretation, adopting that analysis as his own. The arbitrator affirmed the award of attorney fees.

The Agency has filed an exception to the arbitrator's award as interpreted and clarified. The Agency, in essence, again contends that the award of attorney fees is contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596, and more specifically that it is not made in accordance with the standards established under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g). In the latter regard the Agency contends that the arbitrator did not provide a fully articulated, reasoned decision setting forth specific findings that support the determination to award attorney fees. Accordingly, the issue presented to the Authority by the exceptions filed by the Agency is whether or not the award of attorney fees by the arbitrator is contrary to law.

II. ATTORNEY FEES UNDER THE CIVIL SERVICE REFORM ACT

Under the "American Rule," attorney fees are not ordinarily recoverable by the prevailing litigant in federal litigation

Order Granting Request for Reconsideration in that case because the arbitrator and the parties were not explicitly apprised that the Authority would set aside an award of attorney fees that was not fully supported as required. In that Order parties and arbitrators were put on explicit notice that deficient awards of attorney fees issued hereafter will be set aside (or modified as appropriate) rather than being remanded.

absent statutory authorization to award such fees. Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. v. Wilderness Society, 421 U.S. 240, 247 (1975). Morever, an award of attorney fees against an agency of the United States Government is not permitted unless there is an explicit statutory provision authorizing such an award which may serve as a waiver of traditional sovereign immunity enjoyed by the United States. Scarborough v. Office of Personnel Management, 723 F.2d 801, 808 (11th Cir. 1984); Spencer v. NLRB, 712 F.2d 539, 543-44 (D.C. Cir. 1983). Accordingly, a careful review of an award of attorney fees against the United States is necessary to assure that it is made within the explicit terms of the statute which authorizes such award.

The Back Pay Act authorizes an appropriate authority such as the Federal Labor Relations Authority or an arbitrator to award attorney fees to an employee under certain specific circumstances.[22] Specifically, the Act requires that in order to be eligible for attorney fees, the employee must be found by appropriate authority under applicable law, rule, regulation or collective bargaining agreement, to have been affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action which resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of the employee's pay, allowances, or differentials. Additionally, the fee award must be in conjunction with an award of backpay on the correction of the unjustified or unwarranted personnel action; the fee award must be reasonable and related to the personnel action; and, the fee award must be in accordance with the standards established under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g).[23]

Section 7701(g) provides that for an employee to be eligible for an award of attorney fees in a case which does not involve discrimination, the employee must be the prevailing party; that the award must be warranted "in the interest of justice"; the amount must be reasonable and the fees must be incurred by the employee. In addition, it has been held that the standards established under section 7701(g) further require a fully articulated, reasoned decision setting forth the specific findings supporting the determination on each pertinent statutory requirement, including the basis upon which the reasonableness of the amount was determined when fees are awarded.[24] Thus, it is clear that in determining whether to award attorney fees under the Back Pay Act, an arbitrator must be careful to conform to the standards established under the Civil Service Reform Act (CSRA) authorizing such awards.

In resolving exceptions to awards of attorney fees, as in this case, it falls to the Authority to assure that the award is not contrary to law and hence is not deficient. In order for the Authority to properly perform its role in resolving exceptions to such awards, it is necessary to review the award under the Back Pay Act to assure that it meets the statutory requirements.

The provisions of the Back Pay Act which allow awards of attorney fees in certain specified circumstances were produced as the result of legislative compromise. The legislative history of those provisions can be instructive in their interpretation and application to the facts of the case.

S.2640, the version of the CSRA passed by the Senate, contained amendments to the Back Pay Act but made no provision for the payment of attorney fees therein. However, section 7701(j) of S.2640, respecting the appellate procedures of the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB), provided, for cases not involving discrimination, that the MSPB:[25]

> . . . may require payment by the agency which is the losing party to a proceeding before the Board, of reasonable attorney fees incurred by an employee, if the employee is the prevailing party and the deciding official or officials determine that payment by the agency is warranted on the grounds that the agency's action was taken in bad faith. . . .

Section 7105 of H.R. 11280 which described the powers and duties of the Federal Labor Relations Authority would have assigned the Authority some degree of discretion in establishing the standards to be applied in determining when attorney fees should be awarded in unfair labor practice cases and grievance arbitration awards. Section 7105(h), provided as follows:27/

> The Authority shall, by regulation, establish standards which shall be applied in determining the amount and circumstances in which reasonable attorney fees and reasonable costs and expenses of litigation may be awarded under section 7118(a)(6)(C) or 5596(b)(1)(B) of this title in connection with any unfair labor practice or any grievance processed under a procedure negotiated in accordance with this chapter.

The section of H.R. 11280 concerning MSPB pertinently provided, for cases not involving discrimination, that the Board may require:28/

> . . . payment by the agency involved of reasonable attorney fees incurred by an employee or applicant for employment if the employee or applicant is the prevailing party and the Board, administrative law judge, or other employee as the case may be, determines that payment by the agency is warranted.

The Conference Committee resolved these conflicting versions by a series of compromises. As one compromise, section 7105(h) in H.R. 11280 was dropped, thereby eliminating the provision which would have allowed the Authority to fashion standards to be applied in determining the amount and circumstances in which attorney fees may be awarded in unfair labor practice cases and grievance arbitration cases. Instead, the Conference Committee decided to permit the award of attorney fees in unfair labor practice cases and arbitration cases only where backpay is awarded and only under the standards set forth in 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g). Thus, at the meeting of the Conference Committee on September 18, 1978, Congressman Udall stated:29/

> My proposal is a compromise. It would adopt the Senate provision eliminating attorney's fees in the unfair labor practice area. It would allow the appropriate authority--FLRA or the arbitrator or whoever in any grievance decision--to award fees in conformity with standards to be applied in the MSPB cases. Those standards would be a middle ground between the Senate's bad faith. It would be pretty hard to prove bad faith, we think, in most cases, and the House's very loose standard which is simply "as warranted"; and when the employee wins the case on the merits and the Board finds that the fees are warranted in the interest of fairness and justice and so on.

29/ As reported at page 404 of the transcript of proceedings of the House-Senate Conference on S. 2640, the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978.

The final compromise as to attorney fees for cases not involving discrimination is reflected in the Conference Report on the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, H.R. 95-1717, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. (1978), which stated at p. 142:[30]

> The Senate bill authorizes attorneys' fees to be awarded in appeals cases by a hearing officer whenever the employee prevails and the officer determines that the agency's action was taken in bad faith . . . .
> The House amendment authorizes attorneys' fees in any case where the officer determines that payment "is warranted" . . . .
> The conference substitute (section 7701(g) and 5596(b)(1)(A)(ii)) authorizes attorneys' fees in cases where [an] employee prevails on the merits and the deciding official determines that attorneys' fees are warranted in the interest of justice, including a case involving a prohibited personnel practice or where the agency's action was clearly without merit. The reference to these two types of cases is illustrative only and does not limit the official from awarding attorneys' fees in other kinds of cases.

In light of this legislative history, it is clear that under the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, the Federal Labor Relations Authority and arbitrators issuing awards under the provisions of section 7121 of the Statute may award attorney fees, but only in the limited, specified circumstances outlined above. Thus, in order to be eligible for the award of attorney fees in unfair labor practice cases and in grievance arbitration awards, it is not sufficient merely to be the prevailing party. There must also be an award of backpay. In an earlier case, Department of Defense, Dependents Schools and Overseas Education Association, Inc., 3 FLRA 259 (1980), the Authority denied a union's exceptions to an arbitrator's denial of its request for attorney fees on the ground that in that case there had been "no determination that an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action had resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of the grievant's pay, a necessary threshold determination for entitlement to attorney fees under the Back Pay Act, as amended." 3 FLRA at 263.

Moreover, in cases where discrimination is not involved, prevailing in an arbitration award which calls for backpay, even the retroactive payment of environmental differentials, is not, standing alone, a sufficient basis for an award of attorney fees. It is only the first step in meeting the requirements under the Back Pay Act. The award of attorney fees must also meet the applicable requirements of 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g) and the standards established thereunder.

In Sterner v. Department of the Army, 711 F.2d 1563, 1571 (Fed. Cir. 1983), the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit summarized the prerequisites to an award of attorney fees under section 7701(g)(1) of CSRA as follows:

> To summarize, there are two prerequisites to an award of attorney's fees under section 7701(g)(1) which the board must address in each case: whether the employee is the prevailing party and whether an award is warranted in the interest of justice. Determination of prevailing party should be a simple task of deciding whether the employee succeeded in obtaining all or a significant part of the relief sought. The question of substantial innocence is not germane to this initial inquiry. . . .
> The board has considerable discretion in determining when an award is warranted in the interest of justice. The non-exclusive guidelines [established by the MSPB in its decision in Allen which is discussed infra] are a valid starting point. The board may also consider the extent of the employee's success. Economic hardship per se is not a proper consideration as it would tend to undermine the statutory intent, but the board may wish to consider extraordinary hardships in appropriate cases. . . .

Clearly then, in the context of the present case, the mere conclusions that an environmental differential is payable, and is payable retroactively, are not sufficient to "trigger" an award of attorney fees, or to support the award in the face of a challenge that the award is contrary to law. Rather, as pointed out above, it must be shown, among other things, that such award is in the interest of justice in accordance with standards established under section 7701(g).

Moreover, the Authority is without discretion to ignore this requirement, or to fashion its own standards upon which an award of attorney fees may be made. Indeed, as noted in the above discussion of the legislative history, the Authority would have had a great deal of discretion had the provisions of H.R. 11280, including especially section 7105(h), been adopted by the Congress and enacted into law. However, under the CSRA as enacted, the Authority is constrained to apply the requirements set forth in 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g), including the standards established under section 7701(g), in determining whether an award of attorney fees by an arbitrator is contrary to law.

The MSPB in Allen v. U.S. Postal Service, 2 MSPB 582 (1980), developed standards for ascertaining when an award of attorney fees "is warranted in the interest of justice" as well as other standards for such an award under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1). The Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has confirmed the validity of MSPB's standards for determining whether attorney fees are warranted in the interest of justice.[31] As the court stated in Sterner, 711 F.2d at 1570:

> The Allen guidelines are reasonable and are firmly based in the statute and the legislative history; we therefore have no basis for altering the Allen guidelines, noting that all they are is a set of guidelines and that Allen itself emphasized that the examples given were "not exhaustive."

As to the guidelines, the court stated in Yorkshire, 746 F.2d at 1456:

> The parties correctly cite Allen v. U.S. Postal Service, 2 M.S.P.B. 582 (1980), as embodying the MSPB's prevailing standard for interpretation of the "warranted in the interest of justice" part of § 7701(g)(1). Allen began with the proposition that the two examples in the statute concerning when an award would be warranted in the interest of justice are illustrative and not exclusive. Id. at 587. The Board then reviewed the legislative history of the statute to glean other instances in which an award would be appropriate.

[31] Sterner v. Department of the Army, 711 F.2d 1563, 1570 (Fed. Cir. 1983); Sims v. Department of the Navy, 711 F.2d 1578, 1581 (Fed. Cir. 1983); Yorkshire v. Merit Systems Protection Board, 746 F.2d 1454, 1456 (Fed. Cir. 1984).

The Board in Allen found very illuminating the comments of Senator Mathias, author of the "interest of justice" language and member of the Reform Act's conference committee. Senator Mathias described four situations in which the Board might appropriately award attorney's fees:

> [W]here he [the employee] is substantially innocent of the charges that are leveled against him, or where the agency acted in bad faith, or where there was some gross procedural error, or where the agency knew or should have known that it couldn't prevail on the merits when it brought the proceeding.

Id. at 589, quoting Transcript of Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs' Mark-up Session on S. 2640, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 124-25 (1978). With the statutory examples and Senator Mathias' illustrations as a base, the Board developed a set of five broad categories of cases in which an award of attorney's fees fits within the statutory framework:

> 1. Where the agency engaged in a "prohibited personnel practice" (§ 7701(g)(1));
> 2. Where the agency's action was "clearly without merit" (§ 7701(g)(1)), or was "wholly unfounded," or the employee is "substantially innocent" of the charges brought by the agency;
> 3. Where the agency initiated the action against the employee in "bad faith," including:
> a. Where the agency's action was brought to "harass" the employee;
> b. Where the agency's action was brought to "exert improper pressure on the employee to act in certain ways";
> 4. Where the agency committed a "gross procedural error" which "prolonged the proceeding" or "severely prejudiced" the employee;
> 5. Where the agency "knew or should have known that it would not prevail on the merits" when it brought the proceeding.

Id. at 593 [footnotes omitted]. The Board dubbed these headings "directional markers toward 'the interest of justice'" rather than conclusive or fixed definitions. Id. We confirmed the validity of the Allen guidelines in Sterner, supra, 711 F.2d at 1570.

Thus, in determining whether an award of attorney fees is within the explicit terms of the provisions of the CSRA, both the requirements of the Back Pay Act and section 7701(g) must be assessed. To summarize, in order for an award of attorney fees to be authorized, the award of fees must be in conjunction with an award of backpay to the grievant on the correction of the unjustified or unwarranted personnel action, must be reasonable and related to the personnel action, and must be in accordance with the standards established under section 7701(g). That section prescribes that the employee must be the prevailing party and section 7701(g)(1), which applies to all cases except those of discrimination, prescribes that the award of fees must be warranted in the interest of justice, that the amount must be reasonable and that the fees must have been incurred by the employee. With respect to the interest of justice standard, the requirements and guidelines established by the Merit Systems Protection Board in the Allen case and approved by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit are the starting point in determining when an award of fees is warranted in the interest of justice. Finally, there must be a "fully articulated, reasoned decision" setting forth the specific findings supporting the determination on each pertinent statutory requirement. It is the role of the Authority here to determine whether the arbitrator's award of attorney fees meets the statutory requirements noted above.

I wish to emphasize here that the Authority's function under the Statute generally is to review the awards of the arbitrators to insure that they are not deficient on the grounds described in section 7122(a). Under the Statute, grievance arbitration awards are final and binding so long as they are not contrary to law, rule, or regulation or are otherwise deficient on grounds applied by federal courts in private sector labor-management relations. The Authority does not judge the merits of the dispute before the arbitrator. Thus, with respect to exceptions to awards of attorney fees, the Authority's role is to insure that the arbitrator has met the statutory requirements. It is not the role of the Authority to substitute its judgment for that of the arbitrator.

III. APPLICATION OF THE STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS IN THIS CASE

As I indicated in the introduction to this concurring opinion, I wish to discuss my conclusions regarding two of the requirements in this case--the requirement for a fully articulated, reasoned decision and the requirement that an award of attorney fees be warranted in the interest of justice.

I will first address the Agency's contentions that the arbitrator has failed and refused to provide the parties and the Authority with a fully articulated, reasoned decision setting forth the specific findings supporting the determinations on each pertinent statutory requirement. As noted in Part I of this concurring opinion, the arbitrator, in his clarification and interpretation of the award of attorney fees, found that they were payable "as fully explained in the Union's brief which is incorporated into this decision." I cannot endorse this practice, especially where the requirements under section 7701(g) as described by the Authority in Army Support Command, Hawaii, call for "a fully articulated, reasoned decision setting forth the specific findings supporting the determinations on each pertinent statutory requirement, including the basis upon which the reasonableness of the amount was determined when fees are awarded."

After the matter was remanded by the Authority, the counsel for the Union submitted to the arbitrator a 28-page, double-spaced typewritten brief on the issue of attorney fees. The Agency submitted a 12-page, single-spaced typewritten brief with 17 attachments. As Judge J. Skelly Wright has noted in connection with a somewhat similar circumstance, "[t]hese lawyers and properly so, in their zeal and advocacy and their enthusiasm are going to state the case for their side . . . as strongly as they possibly can."32/ Moreover, where attorneys contest points of law and offer persuasive arguments on both sides of an issue, it falls to the decisionmaker to resolve those points of law and those issues. In the circumstances here, a fully articulated, reasoned decision setting forth the specific findings supporting the determination on each pertinent statutory requirement for an award of attorney fees calls for an analysis of the parties' differing positions and an independent, objective explanation for the arbitrator's conclusions. To instead adopt in toto the brief of one side and to incorporate that brief into his decision, and to describe the brief of the opposing side simply as "a lengthy citation of authorities which are largely inappropriate and irrelevant" comes perilously close to an abdication of this responsibility. The arbitrator said in his clarification and interpretation that "I know how to spell out justification for attorney fees, when needed." He should have done so in this case.

As the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit recently said in addressing a somewhat similar problem:33/

> . . . [W]e wish to make clear that we cannot endorse the District Judge's action in extensively copying the proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law prepared by counsel for [one of the parties]. As the Supreme Court noted in El Paso Natural Gas Co., this practice "is an abandonment of the duty and the trust that has been placed in the judge." 376 U.S. at 657 n. 4, 84 S. Ct. at 1047 n. 4 (quoting J. Skelly Wright, Seminars for Newly Appointed United States District Judges 166 (1963)). As the present case illustrates, the parties, the public and the reviewing court can never be certain that the judge actually decided the case on the grounds given in the copied Memorandum Opinion. Confidence in the integrity of the judicial process inevitably suffers when judges succumb wholesale to this practice.

Similarly, I cannot endorse the action of the arbitrator here in merely incorporating the contentions and arguments of counsel representing one of the parties before him. A fully articulated, reasoned opinion is required by the Authority in these cases because it is a requirement for authorizing attorney fees under the Back Pay Act. If the arbitrator fails to perform his function in this regard, he fails his duty under law and fails to meet his obligation to the parties who selected him to resolve their grievance.

33/ Southern Pacific Communication Co. v. American Telephone and Telegraph Co., 740 F.2d 980, 995 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. denied 105 S.Ct. 1359 (1985).

Certainly, therefore, it would have been far preferable had the arbitrator not succumbed to the temptation of incorporating one side's position and instead spelled out the justification for the award himself as he admits he knows how to do. Because such a fully articulated, reasoned justification is not expressly set forth by the arbitrator, in my opinion his entire award, as supplemented and later clarified, must be examined to determine whether sufficient findings can be gleaned which would support his conclusion that an award of attorney fees is warranted in the interest of justice. In my view, it is appropriate to adopt such a course of action in this case in light of the arbitrator's explicit references to his initial and supplemental awards in his clarification here under review. I wish again to underscore that in examining the entire award, I will not be placing myself in the arbitrator's shoes to judge the merits of the dispute the parties placed before him, i.e., whether attorney fees are warranted in this case. Instead, I will, consistent with the Authority's statutory function in arbitration cases, examine the arbitrator's entire award to see whether his decision to grant fees is supported by the specific findings required by law.

As an initial matter, I would observe that in Allen the MSPB was applying the provisions of section 7701(g)(1) in an adverse action appeal under 5 U.S.C. chapter 77. Consequently, most of the MSPB's Allen guidelines relate an award of attorney fees to some action taken by an agency against an employee, which action is being overturned or modified.

In the instant case we are not examining an award of attorney fees in similar circumstances. There has been no "adverse action" taken against an employee; clearly it is not a matter covered by 5 U.S.C. § 7512.34/ We are not dealing with an action based on unacceptable performance covered by 5 U.S.C. § 4303.35/ Instead, we are here faced with a grievance arbitration award wherein the arbitrator has found in effect that employees had been improperly denied a benefit, namely, environmental differential pay, and the question is whether an award of attorney fees is warranted in the interest of justice in these circumstances.

Even though these circumstances differ from those in Allen, some of the Allen guidelines could apply to a situation wherein agency management has improperly denied benefits to an employee, e.g., where the agency's action was "clearly without merit" or where the agency "knew or should have known that it would not prevail on the merits."

(D) a reduction in grade or removal under section 4303 of this title, or
(E) an action initiated under section 1206 or 7521 of this title.

35/ As to the types of actions covered, 5 U.S.C. § 4303 provides in pertinent part:

Furthermore, the MSPB and the courts have been faced with a somewhat analogous situation, in a case in which employees' applications for disability retirement have been denied. In Scarborough v. Office of Personnel Management, 723 F.2d 801 (11th Cir. 1984), the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit noted that section 7701(g) provides that it applies to "any case in which a prohibited personnel practice was engaged in by the agency or in any case in which the agency's action was clearly without merit." In concluding that the underlined words created a "second classification" of cases in which an award of attorney fees would be warranted in the interest of justice, the court stated: "An unreasonable denial of retirement benefits could easily be encompassed under this second classification."36/ For the reasons similar to those articulated in this respect in Scarborough, I would conclude under the Back Pay Act that a denial of environmental

(1) the reduction to the grade previously held of a supervisor or manager who has not completed the probationary period under section 3321(a)(2) of this title, differential pay "could easily be encompassed" under the same classification, i.e., a case in which the agency's action was clearly without merit, if such denial of environmental differential pay were found to be "unreasonable."

Therefore, in this case, in order to decide whether the award of attorney fees is warranted in the interest of justice, I believe it is necessary to examine the arbitrator's findings to see whether there is a sufficient basis to conclude that the Agency knew or should have known it would not prevail on the merits or that the Agency's denial of environmental differential pay was unreasonable and thus clearly without merit. My analysis is thus based on relevant Allen factors and on the related approach taken in this respect in Scarborough. Since the Allen factors are guidelines and not intended to be exhaustive, I see no need to apply the other factors set forth in Allen.

I have concluded that the arbitrator's findings support a determination that management's denial of the environmental differential pay in the circumstances of this case was unreasonable and that management should have known that it would not prevail on the merits of the grievance. Therefore, the arbitrator's award of attorney fees as being warranted in the interest of justice is supported and must stand. As noted in Part I of this concurring opinion, the arbitrator found in pertinent part that:

> (A) Management had stated without reservation that it would apply safety procedures to asbestos levels below the limits set by OSHA.
> (B) Management had gone a step further in requiring these safety precautions to be taken whenever working with asbestos no matter what the airborne concentration of asbestos and that all equipment utilized must conform to NIOSH standards.
> (C) While the procedure which management had set up was, in theory, admirable for the protection of employees against the hazard involved, a NIOSH report, introduced at the hearing and attached to the arbitrator's initial award, "labeled several practical protective measures, including the wearing of respirators, as 'not at all satisfactory.'"

> (D) Management knew that, in an installation striving for zero asbestos exposure, forty full days each year of exposure exceeding NIOSH standards (in the case of pipefitters) reflected hazardous conditions requiring greater attention.

Therefore, the arbitrator rejected management's contention that it was providing protective equipment which was practically eliminating the potential for personal illness and injury. As a result the affected employees were awarded environmental differential pay for "[w]orking in an area where airborne concentrations of asbestos fibers may expose employees to potential illness or injury and protective devices or safety measures have not practically eliminated the potential for such personal illness or injury."

In light of the arbitrator's findings concerning the high standards that management had set for itself, the documented failure to meet those standards and to provide satisfactory practical protective measures, and management's knowledge of forty full days each year of employee exposure exceeding NIOSH standards, it was unreasonable for management to take the position that it was providing protective equipment which was practically eliminating the potential for personal illness and injury and for that reason to deny the employees the benefit of environmental differential pay. Furthermore, because management knew that its measures did not provide satisfactory protection and because it knew that it had failed to meet the standards which it set for itself, management should have known that it would not prevail on the merits in this grievance. Therefore, I conclude that the arbitrator made sufficient findings to support the conclusion that attorney fees were warranted in the interest of justice.

In summary on this point, in these circumstances, in my opinion, it is clear that the arbitrator's award contains a sufficient basis to conclude that the Agency's denial of the environmental differential pay was unreasonable and hence without merit and that the Agency knew or should have known they would not prevail on the merits of the grievance/arbitration proceeding, and that the award of attorney fees in this case therefore is "warranted in the interest of justice."

APPENDIX

5 U.S.C. § 5596 (1982) pertinently provides:

> (b)(1) An employee of an agency who, on the basis of a timely appeal or an administrative determination (including a decision relating to an unfair labor practice or a grievance) is found by appropriate authority under applicable law, rule, regulation, or collective bargaining agreement, to have been affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action which has resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of all or part of the pay, allowances, or differentials of the employee--
> (A) is entitled, on correction of the personnel action, to receive for the period for which the personnel action was in effect--
> (i) an amount equal to all or any part of the pay, allowances, or differentials, as applicable which the employee normally would have earned or received during the period if the personnel action had not occurred, less any amounts earned by the employee through other employment during that period; and
> (ii) reasonable attorney fees related to the personnel action which, with respect to any decision relating to an unfair labor practice or a grievance processed under a procedure negotiated in accordance with chapter 71 of this title, or under chapter 11 of title 1 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980, shall be awarded in accordance with standards established under section 7701(g) of this title[.]

5 U.S.C. § 7701(g) (1982) provides:

> (1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of his subsection, the Board, or an administrative law judge or other employee of the Board designated to hear a case, may require payment by the agency involved of reasonable attorney fees incurred by an employee or applicant for employment if the employee or applicant is the prevailing party and the Board, administrative law judge, or other employee (as case may be) determines that payment by the agency is warranted in the interest of justice, including any case in which a prohibited personnel practice was engaged in by the agency or any case in which the agency's action was clearly without merit.
> (2) If an employee or applicant for employment is the prevailing party and the decision is based on a finding of discrimination prohibited under section 2302(b)(1) of this title, the payment of attorney fees shall be in accordance with the standards prescribed under section 706(k) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e-5(k)).

ORDER GRANTING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on a request filed by the Union seeking reconsideration of the Authority's decision of November 25, 1985, setting aside the Arbitrator's award of attorney fees.

II. BACKGROUND

The Arbitrator determined that there was not just cause to suspend the grievant and awarded him backpay and benefits for the period of the suspension. The grievant subsequently requested an award of attorney fees and the Arbitrator, after quoting the relevant provisions of the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596, summarily concluded that application of the statutory requirements resulted in a determination that the grievant was entitled to the fees requested. The Arbitrator therefore awarded the grievant attorney fees in the amount of $6,790. In its exceptions to the award of attorney fees, the Agency contended, among other things, that the award was contrary to the Back Pay Act because it was not in accordance with the standards established under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g). Specifically, the Agency argued on the basis of the Authority's decision in _International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and United States Army Support Command, Hawaii_, 14 FLRA 680 (1984), that the Arbitrator failed to provide a fully articulated, reasoned decision as required. The Authority agreed with the Agency. The Authority found that the Arbitrator's decision and award of fees was not in accordance with the standards established under section 7701(g) as expressly required by the Back Pay Act. The Authority found that the Arbitrator failed to provide a fully articulated, reasoned decision setting forth his specific findings supporting the determination on each pertinent statutory requirement, including the bases on which he had determined that $6,790 was a reasonable amount of attorney fees. Accordingly, the Authority concluded that the award of attorney fees was deficient as contrary to the Back Pay Act and therefore set aside the award. The Authority also found that it was not necessary to address the Agency's other exceptions to the attorney fees award.

III. REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

In its request for reconsideration, the Union essentially contends, on legal and equitable grounds, that rather than set the award aside the Authority should have remanded the case to the parties and directed them to seek a fully articulated determination from the Arbitrator as to the basis for his award. In support of its contention that a remand order was appropriate, the Union argues that in Army Support Command, Hawaii, where the Authority also found that the award of attorney fees was not properly supported, the Authority remanded that case to the parties. The Union further argues that while the Arbitrator's award of attorney fees in this case was rendered subsequent to the Army Support Command decision, that fact alone does not provide a sufficient basis for a different result in the essentially similar circumstances of this case. The Agency filed an opposition to the Union's request for reconsideration, contending that the Union had not demonstrated extraordinary circumstances.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations permits a party that can establish "extraordinary circumstances" to move for reconsideration of a final decision of the Authority. Upon careful consideration of the Union's request and the Agency's opposition, the Authority concludes that reconsideration is warranted.

In Army Support Command, Hawaii, the Authority, for the first time, had addressed in detail the statutory requirements regarding awards of attorney fees. In that case, the Authority said, in pertinent part:

> As previously recognized by the Authority, a threshold requirement for entitlement to attorney fees under the Back Pay Act is a finding that the grievant had been affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action which has resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of the grievant's pay, allowances, or differentials. Department of Defense Dependents Schools and Overseas Education Association, 3 FLRA 259, 263 (1980). Further, a reading of the Back Pay Act indicates that an award of attorney fees must be in conjunction with an award of backpay to the grievant on correction of the personnel action, that the award of attorney fees must be reasonable and related to the personnel action, and the award of attorney fees must be in accordance with the standards established under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g). Section 7701(g) prescribes that for an employee to be eligible for an award of attorney fees, the employee must be the prevailing party. Section 7701(g)(1), which applies to all cases except those of discrimination, requires that an award of attorney fees must be warranted "in the interest of justice," that the amount must be reasonable, and that the fees must have been incurred by the employee. . . .
> The standards established under section 7701(g) further require a fully articulated, reasoned decision setting forth the specific findings supporting the determination on each pertinent statutory requirement, including the basis upon which the reasonableness of the amount was determined when fees are awarded. See, e.g., Allen v. U.S. Postal Service, 2 MSPB 582 (1980); Kling v. Department of Justice, 2 MSPB 620 (1980); see also 5 CFR § 550.806 (1983).

The Authority found that the arbitrator in Army Support Command, Hawaii had failed to provide such an articulated decision and remanded the award to the parties with the direction that they request, jointly or separately, that the arbitrator clarify and interpret his award and to articulate fully specific findings on all pertinent statutory provisions. Likewise, in several subsequent decisions in which the Authority found that the arbitrator's determinations were not properly supported, tne Authority remanded the cases to the parties and in each case directed them to request the arbitrator to articulate fully specific findings on all pertinent statutory requirements. E.g., Naval Air Development Center, Department of the Navy and American Federation of Goverment Employees, Local 1928, AFL-CIO, 14 FLRA 782 (1984); Audie L. Murphy Veterans Administration Hospital, San Antonio, Texas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local No. 3511, 15 FLRA 276 (1984); American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2667 and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, 15 FLRA 281 (1984); U.S. Army Missile Readiness Command and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1858, 15 FLRA 286 (1984).

In each of those cases the award had been issued on a date prior to the issuance of Army Support Command, Hawaii, and as specifically noted in each decision "without the benefit of the instruction and guidance provided by Army Support Command, Hawaii." For that reason, the Authority remanded each of those awards to the parties for the limited purpose of having the arbitrator clarify and interpret his award regarding attorney fees to articulate fully specific findings on all pertinent statutory provisions relating thereto.

In contrast, the award of attorney fees in this case was issued more than one year subsequent to the issuance of Army Support Command, Hawaii, and thus with the benefit of the instruction and guidance provided therein. Since it did not provide a fully articulated, reasoned decision, it was found deficient by the Authority and the award was set aside. In considering the request for reconsideration of this case, we note that the Authority did not explicitly announce in Army Support Command, Hawaii, or in the subsequent remands of awards of attorney fees which were issued prior to Army

Support Command, Hawaii, that deficient awards of attorney fees issued thereafter despite the benefit of that guidance would be set aside rather than remanded. The Authority finds that arbitrators and parties, including the Arbitrator and parties in this case, were not explicitly apprised by the Authority in any of its published decisions that the Authority would set aside an award of attorney fees that was not fully supported as required. Nor were parties fully apprised by the Authority of their responsibility and interest in ensuring that arbitrators make the requisite determinations. In these specific circumstances, the Authority has concluded that reconsideration of the decision of November 25, 1985, in this case is warranted and that this case should also be remanded to the parties for the purpose of having the arbitrator clarify his award.

In the future, however, consistent with our general practice concerning deficient arbitration awards, if the Authority finds that an award granting attorney fees is deficient because it is not fully supported as required, the Authority will set aside or modify the award as appropriate.

V. ORDER

Accordingly, for the reasons set forth above, the Union's request for reconsideration is granted. The Authority's decision of November 25, 1985, setting aside the Arbitrator's award of attorney fees is therefore rescinded. The case is hereby remanded to the parties and they are directed to request, jointly or separately, the Arbitrator to clarify and interpret his award of attorney fees to articulate fully specific findings on all pertinent statutory requirements. It should be noted that this Order is without prejudice to the Agency to renew any of the arguments it previously raised in its exceptions to the Arbitrator's award which were not considered by the Authority. Such arguments may be renewed before the Arbitrator or in any duly filed exceptions to the Arbitrator's interpretation and clarification of his award pursuant to this Order.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Louis Aronin under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The issues submitted to arbitration essentially were whether the Agency violated Article 6, Sections 3A and 3B and Article 27, Section 10 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement and section 7131(a) and (d) of the Statute by denying payment of travel and per diem expenses for union representatives negotiating term and/or mid-term agreements and performing other representational functions. Article 6, Sections 3A and 3B provided that union representatives would be granted official time for various labor-management relations activities and Article 27, Section 10 provided that travel would be provided in accordance with the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute. The Arbitrator found that by agreeing to the provisions involved, the Agency had agreed to pay travel and per diem expenses for employees on official time for the labor-management relations activities set forth in the agreement. Accordingly, as his award, the Arbitrator sustained the grievance and directed the Agency to pay travel and per diem expenses to employees who perform the representational functions set forth in the agreement.

III. EXCEPTIONS

In its exceptions, the Agency contends that the award is contrary to law. In support of its exceptions, the Agency argues, in effect, that the Agency is not obligated under section 7131 of the Statute to pay travel and per diem expenses for union representatives on official time and that the award is not authorized under the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701, et seq.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSION

The Arbitrator found that by agreeing to Article 27, Section 10, the Agency had agreed to pay travel and per diem expenses for employees on official time for the covered activities. Therefore, while the Agency is correct in stating that section 7131 of the Statute does not require agencies to pay such expenses, the Agency in this case, as determined by the Arbitrator, negotiated and agreed to a provision requiring it to pay. Article 27, Section 10 of the parties' agreement, as interpreted by the Arbitrator to require the payment of travel and per diem expenses for union representatives performing the labor-management relations activities set forth in Article 6, Section 3 pertaining to official time, is essentially to the same effect as the proposal found by the Authority to be within the duty to bargain in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986). The proposal in that case provided:

> The employer agrees to pay the travel expenses incurred by employees while using official time available under the terms of this agreement.

In finding the proposal to be within the duty to bargain, the Authority stated that the Statute is silent on whether travel expenses incurred in the conduct of labor-management relations activities are payable from Federal funds. Id. at 3. In this case, the Authority concludes that the Arbitrator's award based upon his interpretation of the parties' agreement is not contrary to section 7131(a) and (d) of the Statute as alleged by the Agency in its exceptions.

Moreover, the Authority also ruled in U.S. Customs Service that the proposal in dispute was not inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act because that Act does not prohibit an agency from exercising, through negotiations, its discretion to determine whether travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for purposes of reimbursement of related travel expenses. Id. at 6. In this case, the Arbitrator determined that the Agency agreed to pay the travel and per diem expenses related to the labor-management relations activities covered by the official time provision of the parties' agreement. The Authority finds that the Arbitrator's determination effectively constitutes, in terms of U.S. Customs Service, a finding that the Agency had exercised its discretion under the Travel Expense Act through negotiations and had thereby determined that the covered activities were sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business.

However, in U.S. Customs Service, the Authority concluded that the disputed proposal would not require the agency to authorize the payment of expenses which do not comport with regulatory requirements and restrictions. Id. at 6. The Authority based its conclusion on the union's acknowledgment that payment of any travel expenses flowing from the proposal, if agreed upon by the parties, would be subject to the provisions of the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs).*/ In this case, the Arbitrator in directing the payment of travel and per diem expenses in connection with the covered activities did not expressly provide for the Agency to determine the propriety of particular travel and per diem expenses under the FTRs. Consequently, the Authority must modify the award to assure that it is consistent with requirements of the FTRs.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2425.4 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and for the reasons stated above, that portion of the award directing the payment of travel and per diem expenses is modified to provide as follows:

*/ The FTRs, 41 CFR part 101-7, have been held to be Government-wide rules or regulations within the meaning of the Statute. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 and U.S. Army Engineer District, Kansas City, Missouri, 13 FLRA 23, 24 (1983).

> The Employer shall pay travel and per diem pursuant to Article 27, Section 10, to employees who perform the representational functions on "official time" as set forth in Article 6, Sections 3A and 3B of the parties' agreement insofar as consistent with applicable requirements of the Federal Travel Regulations.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of six Union proposals.[1] The proposals concern various aspects of performance appraisal systems.

II. Procedural Issue

The Agency moved that the Union's petition be dismissed because it was filed by the national office of the Union (AFGE) and not by a representative of the local Union (AFGE, Local 1923). Under section 7117(c) of the Statute and section 2424.2 of the Authority's Regulations a negotiability appeal must be filed by an exclusive representative. Nothing in either the Authority's Regulations or the Statute precludes the exclusive representative from designating an agent to file an appeal on its behalf. The designation of a representative for purpose of appeal to the Authority is strictly a matter for the Union to decide. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3028 and Department of Health and Human Services, Public Health Service, Alaska Area Native Health Service, 13 FLRA 697 (1984). The Agency's motion to dismiss is denied.

[1] This case originally involved eight proposals. The Union has withdrawn its petition for review as to one, proposed section 7.C, and the parties have reached agreement as to a second, proposed section 8.2. These proposals will not be considered further here.

III. Union Proposal 1

Section 2.A

> The Administration has the right to establish critical elements, non-critical elements, and performance standards, subject to law, regulation and this Agreement.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that Union Proposal 1 is outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(2) of the Statute because the Authority has not determined that there is no compelling need for a conflicting agency regulation.

The Union contends that the proposal merely establishes that the Agency's performance appraisal system will recognize applicable provisions of the parties' agreement, and does not conflict with internal agency regulations for which there is a compelling need.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

As a general matter, the Authority has consistently held that general provisions requiring management to exercise its statutory rights under section 7106 in compliance with law are within the duty to bargain. See National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1497 and Department of the Air Force, Lowry Air Force Base, Colo., 9 FLRA 151 (1982) (Union Proposal 2). See also American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of EEOC Locals and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, 10 FLRA 3 (1982) (Union Proposal 1), enforced sub nom. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 744 F.2d 842 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. granted, 105 S.Ct. 3497 (1985). The Authority has also held that management's identification of critical elements and the establishment of performance standards constitute exercises of the rights to direct employees and assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769 (1980), aff'd sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982). Further, the Authority has held that a proposal incorporating specific restrictions from a Government-wide regulation directly interfered with a management right because it imposed the provisions of the regulation as substantive contractual limitations without regard to the regulation's possible subsequent revision or elimination. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1167 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 31st Combat Support Group (TAC), Homestead Air Force Base, Florida, 6 FLRA 574 (1981) (Proposal 2), affirmed as to other matters sub nom. NFFE, Local 1167 v. FLRA, 681 F.2d 886 (D.C. Cir. 1982). However, this proposal would not limit management or impose substantive contractual limitations but would only require the Agency to adhere to any requirements which are in effect at the time the Agency identifies critical elements and establishes performance standards.

The Agency's sole contention is that the duty to bargain in good faith extends to matters like this one covered by Department-level rule or regulation only if the Authority has determined that no compelling need exists for the rule or regulation. The compelling need provisions of the Statute are meant to insure that otherwise negotiable bargaining proposals are taken outside the duty to bargain only if the agency involved demonstrates and justifies an overriding need for the policies reflected in the rules or regulations to be uniformly applied throughout the agency. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Chicago Region, Illinois, 7 FLRA 217, 220 (1981). Therefore, an agency must (1) identify a specific agency-wide regulation; (2) show that there is a conflict between its regulation and the proposal; and (3) demonstrate that its regulation is supported by a compelling need with reference to the Authority's standards set forth in section 2424.11 of its Regulations. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1928 and Department of the Navy, Naval Air Development Center, Warminster, Pennsylvania, 2 FLRA 450, 454 (1980).

The Agency here has failed to identify or submit to the Authority the specific provision of internal agency rule or regulation upon which it relies. It contends only that its Personnel Manual generally bars negotiation over this proposal. The Authority finds that the Agency has failed to support its implicit allegation that the Union's proposal is barred from negotiations because it conflicts with an internal agency rule or regulation for which a compelling need exists. Id. at 454-55. The Authority concludes that Union Proposal 1 is within the duty to bargain.

IV. Union Proposals 2 & 3

Union Proposal 2: Section 2.B, Step 5

The critical and non-critical elements and individual performance standards will be communicated to bargaining unit employees on the negotiated performance evaluation form, prior to the appraisal period.

Union Proposal 3: Section 4.C

In addition to assessing the employee's performance on individual elements, as in "A" above, the supervisor will evaluate the employee's overall job performance by summarizing the performance on the negotiated form, using one of the following five summary ratings:

1. Unsatisfactory. This appraisal applies if the employee failed to meet one or more critical job elements regardless of performance on non-critical job elements.

2. Minimally Satisfactory. This appraisal applies if the employee only partially met one or more critical job elements or if the employee fully met all critical job elements but failed to fully meet a substantial number of non-critical job elements.

3. Fully Satisfactory. This appraisal applies if the employee, at a minimum, fully met all critical job elements and virtually all non-critical job elements or if the employee exceeded all of the critical job elements and fully met a substantial number of non-critical job elements.

> 4. Excellent. This summary appraisal applies if the employee exceeded all of the critical elements and virtually all of the non-critical job elements or if the employee substantially exceeded all critical job elements and fully met a substantial number of non-critical job elements.
> 5. Outstanding. This summary appraisal applies if the employee substantially exceeded all critical job elements and virtually all non-critical job elements.

[All of Proposal 2 and the underscored portion of Proposal 3 are in dispute.]

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that Union Proposals 2 and 3 conflict with an internal agency regulation which requires the use of a standard form by requiring the use of a negotiated performance evaluation form instead. It argues that a compelling need exists for this regulation and that the proposals are, therefore, outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(2) of the Statute. In addition, the Agency contends that by requiring a "negotiated form" the proposals in essence require negotiation on performance standards and are outside the duty to bargain for that reason also.

The Union contends that Proposals 2 and 3 constitute negotiable procedures that do not conflict with the Agency's regulation. It further argues that even if there was a conflict the Agency has not established a compelling need for its regulation.

B. Analysis

1. Compelling Need

The Agency bears the burden of demonstrating a compelling need for its regulatory requirement that there be uniform Agency-wide use of its evaluation form. See discussion of Union Proposal 1. The Authority's illustrative standard for determining compelling need in section 2424.11(a) of its Regulations requires an agency to demonstrate that the rule or regulation upon which it relies is "essential as distinguished from helpful or desirable" to achieve certain ends. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2875 and Department of Commerce, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, National Marine Fisheries Service, Southeast Fisheries Center, Miami Laboratory, Florida, 5 FLRA 441 (1981).

The Agency asserts that its requirement to use a standard form is essential to accomplishment of its mission or execution of its functions in a manner consistent with the requirements of an effective and efficient government. Its arguments in this regard all relate to its need to maintain control of the content and format of performance evaluation forms. It claims this control can only be achieved through uniform use of the form designated as 430-4-B set forth in HHS Instruction 430-4. The Union states that the information claimed by the Agency to be necessary is to be included on any negotiated appraisal form. Union Reply Brief at 4. The Agency itself indicates that the negotiated form would not be substantively different from and would contain the "same information" as its own form. Agency Statement of Position at 3. Since the negotiated performance evaluation form will contain essentially the same information as the Agency's own form, the Agency's assertion that use of its form is essential cannot be sustained.

2. Management Rights

Turning to the Agency's argument that the proposals violate management rights because they would in essence require bargaining on performance standards, the Authority has held as a general matter that proposals which are otherwise consistent with law and regulation and relate only to particular aspects of performance appraisal systems, apart from the identification of critical elements and the establishment of performance standards, are within the duty to bargain. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769, 780 (1980), aff'd sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982). Similarly, proposals which establish procedures for the development and implementation of performance standards and critical elements, or which establish appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the application of performance standards and critical elements to them, are within the duty to bargain under section 7106(b)(2) and (3) of the Statute. Id.

If the Union proposals did require the Agency to negotiate concerning the definitions of its performance standards they would, of course, be outside the duty to bargain under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. See discussion of Union Proposal 1. However, nothing in the disputed language of the proposals nor in Union statements in the record lends support to the Agency's contention that the proposal's requirement that a negotiated form be used amounts to negotiation on the definitions of its performance standards. The Union specifically states that the definitions contained in the Agency's form would not be affected by these proposals. Union Reply Brief at 4-5. Since the Union is not attempting to negotiate on those definitions, the Agency's argument that the definitions are nonnegotiable is inapplicable to bar negotiations on Union Proposals 2 and 3.

C. Conclusion

Because the Agency has not demonstrated that its regulation is supported by a compelling need, it does not bar negotiation on Union Proposals 2 and 3. Further, the disputed portions of these proposals are not inconsistent with management rights under section 7106(a)(2) of the Statute. Union Proposals 2 and 3 establish procedures relating to the implementation of performance standards and critical elements. They are within the duty to bargain under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute.

V. Union Proposals 4 & 5

Union Proposal 4: Section 6

> Performance appraisals will whenever possible be prepared annually based on employee performance expectations established for the 12 preceding months.

Union Proposal 5: Section 6.B

> Appraisals are generally due on a regular schedule annually but may be postponed under [certain] circumstances[.]

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that Union Proposals 4 and 5 are inconsistent with an Agency regulation which provides for performance appraisals to occur in January or October of each year and for which a compelling need exists.

The Union contends that its proposals do not conflict with the cited regulation.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Authority has held that prescribing periodic appraisal of employees on an annual basis is consistent with law and Government-wide rules or regulations and within the duty to bargain. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1968 and Department of Transportation, Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, Massena, New York, 5 FLRA 70 (1981) (Proposal 2), affirmed as to other matters sub nom. AFGE, Local 1968 v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 565 (D.C. Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 926 (1983). The Union here clearly did not intend to require anything other than annual performance appraisals and did not link the term "annually" in the proposal to any specific month when the annual appraisals should occur. Union Reply Brief at 6. The Authority concludes that the proposals do not conflict with the Agency's Instruction requiring that annual performance appraisals occur in January or October of each year. In the absence of a conflict between the proposals and the Instruction, it is unnecessary to decide whether the Agency has demonstrated a compelling need for its regulation. See discussion of Union Proposal 1. The Authority finds that Union Proposals 4 and 5 are within the duty to bargain.

VI. Union Proposal 6

> Section 9.C
> Should remedial action fail and the employee's performance continue to be unacceptable after a reasonable opportunity to demonstrate improvement, the employee may be liable for adverse action under 5 U.S.C. 43. The appropriate personnel action will depend on the following considerations:
> 1. when the employee is capable of performing another position of the same grade, the supervisor should propose to reassign the employee to such a position;
> 2. when the employee is not capable of performing a position at the same grade but is capable of performing a position at a lesser grade, the supervisor should propose a demotion to a position at the next lower grade;

3. a proposal of separation should only be proposed when the employee is determined to be incapable of the performance of any other position reasonably available.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that Union Proposal 6 would prohibit it from demoting an employee for unacceptable performance until he or she had been given a chance to perform in similar positions of equal grade or removing an employee for unacceptable performance until he or she had been given a chance to perform in similar positions of a lower grade. The Agency argues that the Union's proposal is contrary to management's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute, including the rights to remove or reduce in grade or pay employees in the Agency.

The Union argues that the proposal preserves the Agency's discretion to exercise its rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A). It contends that the proposal is a procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute which management will observe in exercising those rights and an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management's right to take adverse action against employees for unacceptable performance.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Authority finds that Union Proposal 6 is substantially identical to the proposal which the Authority held to be outside the duty to bargain in National Labor Relations Board Union and National Labor Relations Board, Office of the General Counsel, 18 FLRA No. 42 (1985). In the NLRB case, the Authority found that a proposal which similarly would have required the agency to reassign an employee prior to terminating or demoting that employee substantively interfered to an excessive degree with management's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) to remove employees or reduce them in grade or pay.[2]

Additionally, the use of the term "should" in Proposal 6 does not make the proposal discretionary rather than mandatory. Instead, the plain language of the proposal would require the Agency in virtually all instances to reassign an employee prior to terminating or demoting that employee for unacceptable performance contrary to management's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3483 and Federal Home Loan Bank Board, New York District Office, 13 FLRA 446, 450-52 (1983) (rejecting union's contention that the phrase "to the extent practicable" removes substantive limitation that proposal would have placed on agency's right to identify critical elements) and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Border Patrol Council and Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service, 16 FLRA 251, 252 (1984) (rejecting union's contention that the phrase "to the maximum extent possible" leaves the agency with discretion to exercise its right to assign work "without inhibition").

The Authority finds that the Agency has provided insufficient support in the record to decide whether Union Proposal 6 violates additional management rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. However, for the reasons set forth in the NLRB case, we find that Union Proposal 6 is contrary to the Agency's right under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute to remove employees or reduce them in grade or pay for unacceptable performance. We further find that the proposal constitutes neither a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) nor an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Proposals 1-5.[3] IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Union's petition for review as to Union Proposal 6 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Charles Feigenbaum filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievants in this case, two Park Police officers, volunteered for a temporary detail to New York City. In its request for volunteers, the Agency had informed interested officers that Government-furnished lodging would be provided and that two officers would be assigned to each room. The grievants indicated that they would stay in lodging provided by the Agency. They also received travel authorizations which authorized payment of expenses not to exceed $75 per day. The grievants testified that when they arrived at the designated hotel in New York they were informed that no rooms had been reserved for the Park Police. The grievants then made their own separate arrangements for single occupancy rooms at $39 per day for each room because the single room rate was within the limit set by their travel authorizations. However, the double occupancy rate would have been about half the single occupancy rate for each of the grievants.

When supervisory personnel became aware of the grievants' arrangements, they were informed that while they might be technically in compliance with their travel authorizations, they could not continue to stay in single rooms but had to double up. The grievants refused, their details were terminated and they filed the grievances which were eventually submitted to the Arbitrator. The grievants were, however, also reimbursed for their hotel expenses at the single room rate.

The Arbitrator framed the issue in the grievances as whether the Agency violated law, regulation, or the parties' collective bargaining agreement by requiring the grievants to share a room and by terminating their details when they refused to do so. He determined that there did not appear to be any authority which addressed the question of the number of employees that can be assigned to a hotel room. The Arbitrator found, however, that 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e), which prohibits requiring an employee to stay in rental quarters unless certain conditions are met,*/ also precludes requiring employees to share hotel rooms unless the same conditions are met. The Arbitrator found that it was reasonable to conclude that hotel rooms contracted for or reserved by an agency are considered to be Government-furnished quarters and therefore that the provision applies to such rooms as well. He further concluded that the intent of that provision was to afford employees in a temporary duty or travel status some degree of freedom to choose their own accommodations and to protect them against being forced into inadequate quarters. The Arbitrator added that the benefits of § 5911(e) were subject to a requirement that an employee must exercise the same care in incurring expenses that a prudent person would exercise if traveling on personal business and subject also to the conditions set forth in 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e). The Arbitrator found that the grievants had not acted imprudently and that the conditions in 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e), which might have permitted the employer to require the grievants to share a room in certain circumstances, had not been met in this case. The Arbitrator therefore determined that the Agency acted improperly when it attempted to require the grievants to share a room and that their refusal to double up was not a legitimate reason for terminating their details. He held that the Agency could not require employees to double up in hotel rooms while in travel status unless the requirements of 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e) are met. He also awarded one grievant backpay for 41 hours of overtime he estimated the grievant would have worked if his detail had not been terminated.

*/ 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e) provides:

> (e) The head of an agency may not require an employee or member of a uniformed service to occupy quarters on a rental basis, unless the agency head determines that necessary service cannot be rendered, or that property of the Government cannot adequately be protected, otherwise.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contention

In its first exception, the Agency alleges that the award is contrary to law because the Arbitrator misapplied 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e). The Agency argues that the Arbitrator erred by equating hotel rooms reserved by the Agency with "quarters" as used in 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e) and by failing to recognize that the grievants were not required to stay at the hotel but had the option to stay elsewhere or to stay in single rooms in the hotel and pay the extra cost. The Agency further argues that requiring employees to share rooms is not the same as requiring them to stay at a specific place and that there was no basis for the Arbitrator to determine that the lodgings were inadequate when employees were required to double up as there was no testimony or evidence in the record to support such a determination.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Authority finds that the Agency has not established that the Arbitrator erred by applying 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e) or that his award is contrary to that statutory provision. Rather, the Agency is merely disagreeing with the Arbitrator's reasoning and conclusions. In the absence of a showing that the award is contrary to law, this exception provides no basis for finding the award deficient. Southeastern Program Service Center, Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2206, 7 FLRA 418 (1981).

The Authority notes that the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs), which govern official travel, require that an employee traveling on official business is expected to exercise the same care in incurring expenses that a prudent person would exercise if traveling on personal business. FTR Chap. 1-1.3a. The FTRs also provide that heads of agencies are responsible for ensuring that expenses incurred by travelers are allowable subsistence expenses that were necessarily incurred in connection with the specific travel assignment. FTR Chap. 1-8.3b. The grievants were authorized a maximum actual expense subsistence of $75 per day. Their expense claims did not exceed that amount with single occupancy rooms. The Agency was responsible under the FTRs for determining whether the grievants' expenses were allowable and necessary and whether the grievants acted prudently in incurring those expenses. The Agency's determination is reflected in the fact that the grievants were reimbursed for their single room expenses. Such action further supports the conclusion that the Arbitrator's determination is not inconsistent with authorities governing employee travel on official business.

IV. SECOND, THIRD AND FOURTH EXCEPTIONS

A. Contentions

In its second, third and fourth exceptions, the Agency contends respectively: that the Arbitrator's award fails to draw its essence from the parties' agreement because the Arbitrator did not expressly find that management violated the parties' agreement; that the Arbitrator exceeded his authority by deciding an issue that was not raised in the grievance or by the parties; and that the award is based on a nonfact because even assuming that 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e) applies, the Arbitrator erroneously concluded that portions of that provision, which could have warranted requiring the employees to share a room, had not been met.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

As already noted it is well-established that exceptions which constitute nothing more than disagreement with an arbitrator's reasoning and conclusions in resolving a dispute do not provide a basis for finding an award deficient under the Statute. E.g., Defense Logistics Agency, Defense Depot Memphis, Memphis, Tennessee and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2501, 13 FLRA 5 (1983); U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, New Orleans District and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local No. 1124, 13 FLRA 70, 71 (1983). The Authority finds that the Agency's contentions in support of its second, third and fourth exceptions constitute nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's reasoning and conclusions in resolving the dispute before him. Consequently, the Authority concludes that these exceptions provide no basis for finding the Arbitrator's award deficient.

V. FIFTH EXCEPTION

A. Contention

In its fifth exception, the Agency principally alleges the award of 41 hours retroactive overtime pay to one of the grievants is contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Authority has held that the Back Pay Act requires that for an award of backpay to be authorized, the arbitrator must find that an agency personnel action was unjustified or unwarranted, that the personnel action directly resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of the grievant's pay, allowances, or differentials, and that but for such action, the grievant otherwise would not have suffered such withdrawal or reduction. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3553, AFL-CIO and Veterans Administration Medical Center, New Orleans, Louisiana, 18 FLRA No. 65 (1985).

The Arbitrator determined that the Agency acted improperly when it attempted to require the grievants to share a room and terminated their detail when they refused. However, the Arbitrator also found that "overtime was not certain." The Arbitrator did not expressly find both that the unjustified termination of the detail directly resulted in the loss of overtime pay and that but for this unjustified action the grievant would have received such pay. The Authority, therefore, finds that there is an insufficient legal basis for an award of backpay in this case and that the Arbitrator's award of overtime pay is contrary to the Back Pay Act.

VI. DECISION

Based on the foregoing, the Agency's exceptions numbered one through four are denied, and the award is modified by striking the award of backpay.

DIGEST NOTES

A failure to comply with an arbitration award to which no timely exceptions had been filed under § 7122(a) constituted a violation of § 7116(a)(1) and (8). Retention of jurisdiction by the arbitrator did not serve to extend the statutory time limit [7122(b)] for filing exceptions to the award or render the award interlocutory. Thus when the agency refused to establish a joint asbestos safety committee; pay employees environmental differential pay; and take other actions required by an arbitration award, it violated the Statute.

The Authority modified the ALJ's recommended order regarding the determination of the amount of environmental differential pay (EDP) due certain employees. Because, in the Judge's view, the record did not clearly establish all periods of the agency's liability for payment of EDP, the Judge ordered the respondents to make available to the Authority or its agents, upon request, those records and documents necessary to analyze the amount of backpay to be awarded. In the Authority's view, an order which requires the respondents to fully comply with the arbitration award and pay EDP to the affected employees in accordance with the regulatory requirements pertaining to such payments contained in FPM Supplement 532-1, Appendix J, as referenced in both the parties' collective bargaining agreement and the arbitrator's award, would effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute. The determination as to which employees are eligible for such payment and for what periods of time is appropriately resolved through compliance procedures.

The acts and conduct of higher level agency management may constitute an unfair labor practice where such conduct prevents agency management at the level of exclusive recognition from fulfilling its obligation to comply with a final and binding arbitration award. (ALJ footnote 1)

Failure to comply with an arbitration award constitutes a continuing violation of the Statute; thus, the six month limitation in which to file a charge under the Statute cannot bar an action against an agency that continues to fail to comply with a final and binding arbitration award. DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would require that when an employee elects not to transfer to another district when his job function is transferred, the employee would be subject to RIF procedures within his current district. Under such a proposal, the employee would not be terminated at his current job location by adverse action procedures. Nor would the employee be subjected to RIF procedures in the district to which his job function is transferred. Applicable Government-wide rules and regulations require that before a RIF is conducted in connection with a transfer of function from one competitive area to another, each competing employee in a position identified with the transferring function shall be transferred to the continuing competitive area. 5 C.F.R. § 351.302(a). Employees who refuse to transfer with their position or function may be subject to separation through adverse action procedures. FPM, Chapter 351, Subchap. 5-3.c.(2). Under certain circumstances, however, the OPM regulations allow for use of RIF procedures for purposes of assigning or separating, as appropriate, employees who decline to transfer with their function. The regulations require, among other things, that there is agreement between the two areas that the movement of employees is not essential to the continuity and efficiency of the function. FPM, Chapter 351, Subchap.5-3.c.(3) The union proposal, however, would effectively require that RIF procedures be instituted in the losing competitive area based solely on an employee's desire not to transfer with the function and without any consideration being given to preserving the continuity and efficiency of the function. Thus the proposal is inconsistent with a Government-wide rule or regulation and is outside the duty to bargain under § 7117.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is nonnegotiable that limits an employee's liability for the loss, damage to or destruction of Government property to $150.00. The agency's applicable regulation provides a higher limit of one month's pay and, according to the agency, is intended to cause employees to exercise due care when dealing with Government property. The proposal violates the agency's right to establish its internal security practices under § 7106(a)(1). An agency's right to determine its internal security practices includes those policies and actions which are part of the agency's plan to secure or safeguard its physical property against internal or external risks, to prevent improper or unauthorized disclosure of information, or to prevent the disruption of the agency's activities. The union's argument that the agency's regulation is not effective is beside the point. It is not appropriate for the Authority to adjudge the relative merits of an agency's determination to adopt one practice from among various possible internal security practices, where the Statute vests the agency with authority to make that choice. However, the proposal is not inconsistent with the Federal Claims Collection Act of 1966 because the agency was vested with the existing authority to compromise, settle or close claims when the Claims Act was enacted. (proposal 1)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would require the agency to choose between holding an employee financially liable or imposing disciplinary action for loss, damage or destruction of property caused by the employee, but not both. The proposal would interfere with management's right under § 7106(a)(2)(A) to take disciplinary action against its employees by conditioning the exercise of this right upon the agency's relinquishment of its right to impose financial liability. Contrary to the union's contention, the proposal is not merely procedural in nature. Also, contrary to the agency's contention, the decision to hold an employee financially liable concerns only the application of the agency's internal security practices. It does not affect the determination of what the practices will be and would not directly interfere with management's right to determine its internal security practices under § 7106(a)(1). (proposal 2)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would give an employee the right to remain silent during any discussion with management in which the employee believes disciplinary action may be taken against him or her. The proposal would prevent management from acting at all with regard to its substantive rights under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) to take disciplinary action against employees and to direct employees and assign work by having employees account for their conduct and work performance. (proposal 3)

DIGEST NOTES

An employee had "reasonable belief" that disciplinary action might result from an investigatory interview despite the agency having granted him immunity, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia held in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2544 v. FLRA, 779 F.2d 219. The Authority, accepting the Court's opinion as the law of the case, held that the agency by denying the request of a unit employee for union representation at an investigatory interview, and by conducting the interview despite the denial of the employee's request, failed to comply with § 7114(a)(2)(B) and thus violated § 7116(a)(1) and (8).

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is nonnegotiable that establishes a standard different from the agency's standard for determining whether or not an employee will be "pecuniarily liable" for the loss, damage or destruction of Government property. The proposal would limit an employee's monetary liability to circumstances where an employee's displayed "gross" negligence rather than mere negligence, the standard in the agency's regulations. The proposal impinges on management's plan to prevent damage to or loss of agency property through the exercise of the agency's right under § 7106(a)(1) to determine its internal security practices. However, contrary to the agency's contention, the proposal does not concern the methods and means the Agency will use to carry out its internal security policy and, therefore, it is not inconsistent with § 7106(b)(2). (proposal 1)

A proposal is negotiable that would require that action against an employee because of loss, damage or destruction of Government property to be stayed until an arbitrator issues an award. The fact that a decision of the Secretary of the Air Force as to pecuniary liability is "final" as provided by 10 U.S.C. § 9835 is not sufficient to demonstrate that Air Force procedures are exclusive so as to preclude such disputes from the negotiated grievance procedures, including binding arbitration, provided by the Statute. While the proposal would delay disciplinary action, or a collection action in the case of an assessment action of pecuniary liability, until a final resolution of the employee's grievance, the proposal would not amount to interference with management's exercise of its rights. Rather, proposals to stay final agency action pending the outcome of the grievance procedure are negotiable procedures under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute because they do not prevent management from acting at all with respect to its reserved rights. (proposal 2)

The Authority will only decide negotiability issues which are before it under § 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E). Disputes as to whether a proposal conflicts with the parties' master agreement may be resolved under the procedures provided by that agreement.

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions to the attached Administrative Law Judge's Decision filed by the Respondents and the General Counsel. The Portsmouth Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO (Union) and the General Counsel filed oppositions to the Respondents' exceptions. The consolidated complaint alleged that the Department of the Navy and the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire (Shipyard) violated section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute by refusing to bargain in good faith with the Union and by failing and refusing to comply with the provisions of section 7122(b) of the Statute based upon noncompliance with an arbitration award.[1]

[1] The consolidated complaint was amended at the hearing to include the Department of the Navy as a named respondent.

II. Background

On July 28, 1983, Arbitrator John P. McCrory issued an award sustaining a grievance filed by the Union based on an asserted violation of the safety provisions of the collective bargaining agreement in effect between the Shipyard and the Union. As part of the award, the arbitrator outlined several corrective measures the Shipyard could employ to practically eliminate the potential for illness due to asbestos exposure by unit employees performing various functions on submarines. The arbitrator further directed the establishment of a Joint Asbestos Safety Committee within 30 days of the award. With respect to the Union's claim for the payment of Environmental Differential Pay (EDP) to unit employees exposed to asbestos, the arbitrator ordered such payment to the extent that the Shipyard failed to practically eliminate unnecessary exposure or unnecessary potential exposure to airborne asbestos. Finally, the arbitrator retained jurisdiction of the matter for a period of 90 days for the purpose of resolving any issues arising with respect to the award. Requests for clarification of the award were filed by the Respondents and the Union. Additionally, the Department of the Navy filed exceptions to the award pursuant to section 7122 of the Statute, which exceptions were found by the Authority to be untimely filed. Portsmouth Naval Shipyard and Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO, 15 FLRA 181 (1984).

III. Judge's Decision

The Judge found that the Respondents failed to comply with the arbitration award and thus violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. In reaching this result, the Judge looked to the language and intent of the award in determining that the Respondents had not taken sufficient measures to comply with it. The Judge further found it unnecessary to decide whether the Respondents' conduct also violated section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute. To remedy the unfair labor practice, the Judge ordered the Respondents to fully comply with the arbitration award and to make available to the Authority or its agents, upon request, copies of all documents necessary to determine the amount of backpay to be awarded.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent raised a number of arguments which amount to disagreement with the Judge's findings and conclusions. The findings and conclusions of the Judge are consistent with established precedent and thus the Authority finds no basis for reversing them. However, we do modify the Judge's recommended Order for the reasons indicated below, and also address an exception to the Judge's Decision filed by the General Counsel.

V. Analysis

It is a well-established principle that a failure to comply with an arbitration award to which no timely exceptions have been filed pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Statute constitutes a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.[2] See United States Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 15 FLRA 151 (1984), *aff'd sub nom. [2] Section 7122 of the Statute provides as follows:

> (a) Either party to arbitration under this chapter may file with the Authority an exception to any arbitrator's award pursuant to the arbitration (other than an award relating to a matter described in section 7121(f) of this title). If upon review the Authority finds that the award is deficient--
> (1) because it is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation; or
> (2) on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations;

Department of Justice, Bureau of Prisons (Washington, D.C.) and Federal Correctional Institution (Danbury, Connecticut), 20 FLRA No. 5 (1985), petition for review filed, No. 85-4167 (2nd Cir. Nov. 5, 1985); and U.S. Army Health Clinic, Fort Ritchie, Maryland, 9 FLRA 935 (1982). In this case, as previously noted, the Authority found that the exceptions filed by the Department of the Navy were not timely filed.[3] Accordingly, the award became final and binding pursuant to the provisions of section 7122(b) of the Statute and there was an obligation on the part of agency management to take the actions required by the award, which it failed to do.

VI. Remedy

To remedy the unfair labor practice conduct, the Judge ordered the Respondents to fully comply with the arbitration award. As to that portion of the award directing the prospective payment of EDP, the Judge found that, but for the Respondents' failure to implement the award, employees would have received such payment for those periods of time during which substandard asbestos conditions were maintained > the Authority may take such action and make such recommendations concerning the award as it considers necessary, consistent with applicable laws, rules, or regulations.

> (b) If no exception to an arbitrator's award is filed under subsection (a) of this section during the 30-day period beginning on the date the award is served on the party, the award shall be final and binding. An agency shall take the actions required by an arbitrator's final award. The award may include the payment of backpay (as provided in section 5596 of this title).

[3] The Authority also found in Portsmouth Naval Shipyard and Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO, 15 FLRA 181 (1984), that retention of jurisdiction by an arbitrator, as here, does not serve to extend the statutory time limit for filing exceptions to an award under section 7122 of the Statute or render such award interlocutory.

on the various submarines involved. Because, in the Judge's view, the record did not clearly establish all periods of the Respondents' liability for payment of EDP, the Judge ordered the Respondents to make available to the Authority or its agents, upon request, those records and documents necessary to analyze the amount of backpay to be awarded in whatever manner is deemed appropriate for such determination. In the Authority's view, an order which will require the Respondents to fully comply with the arbitration award of July 28, 1983,4/ and pay EDP to the affected employees in accordance with the regulatory requirements pertaining to such payment contained in Federal Personnel Manual Supplement 532-1, Appendix J, as referenced in both the parties' collective bargaining agreement and the arbitrator's award,5/ will effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute. The determination as to which employees are eligible for such payment and for what periods of time is appropriately resolved through compliance procedures. See U.S. Army, U.S. Army Materiel Development and Readiness Command, Warren, Michigan, 8 FLRA 806, n. at 807 (1982).

4/ With respect to the General Counsel's exception to the Judge's failure to specifically pass on the Respondents' asserted noncompliance with that portion of the award directing the establishment of a Joint Asbestos Safety Committee, the Authority finds that the Judge's finding of a failure to comply with the award encompasses the failure to establish such a committee. Further, the Judge's order to fully comply with the award, which is here adopted, extends to the establishment of such a committee.

5/ Federal Personnel Manual Supplement 532-1 governing the Federal Wage System provides in Appendix J a schedule of environmental differentials to be paid for exposure to various degrees of hazards, physical hardships and working conditions of an unusual nature. Among them is Category 16 relating to asbestos exposure which provides an 8% differential for the following: "Working in an area where airborne concentrations of asbest fibers may expose employees to potential illness or injury and protective devices or safety measures have not practically eliminated the potential for such personal illness or injury."

VII. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision and the entire record in this case, adopts the Judge's findings and conclusions, and, with the modification noted above concerning the manner in which Environmental Differential Pay will be awarded to affected employees, adopts the Judge's recommended Order. Therefore, we find that the Respondents' failure to comply with the arbitration award violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.[6]

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is ordered that the Department of the Navy and the Department of the Navy, Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to fully comply with Arbitrator John P. McCrory's July 28, 1983 arbitration award.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Fully comply with Arbitrator John P. McCrory's July 28, 1983 arbitration award, including the payment of environmental differential pay to affected employees in accordance with law and regulation.

[6] The Authority finds, as did the Judge, that in view of the result reached above, it is unnecessary to decide whether the Respondents' conduct also violated section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute.

(b) Post at the Department of the Navy, Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commander, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region I, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with it.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 82 Stat. 1191, 5 U.S.C. § 7101 et seq. It was instituted by the issuance of a consolidated complaint on March 30, 1984. The complaint alleges that the Department of the Navy, Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, hereinafter called the "shipyard," has violated and continues to violate section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute by failing to comply with an arbitration award issued on July 28, 1983 and by refusing to bargain in good faith with the Portsmouth Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO, hereinafter called the "union." In its answer the shipyard denied the commission of any unfair labor practice. By notice dated August 7, 1984, the General Counsel notified the parties of its intent to move to amend the complaint at the hearing to include the Department of the Navy as a party respondent.[1]

A hearing was held in this matter on August 15, 16 and 17, 1984, in Portsmouth, New Hampshire. All parties were represented and afforded full opportunity to adduce evidence, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and argue orally. Briefs were filed by all parties.

Upon consideration of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommended order.

At all times material herein, respondents have been and are now agencies within the meaning of section 7103(a)(3) of the Statute. In addition, the shipyard and the union were parties to a collective bargaining agreement at all material times herein.

In October 1981, the union filed a grievance on behalf of certain employees performing overhaul operations on submarines, alleging unsafe working conditions due to asbestos exposure. As a remedy the union sought replacement of all asbestos and asbestos products on board the submarine, and payment of environmental differential pay (EDP) in accordance with Article 20 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement[2] and Appendix J of Supplement 532-1 of the Federal Personnel Manual.[3]

[1] The shipyard objects to the General Counsel's motion on the ground that section 7118(a)(4)(A) of the Statute applies to the pleading of new parties as well as issues or causes of action. The acts and conduct of higher level agency management may constitute an unfair labor practice where such conduct prevents agency management at the level of exclusive recognition from fulfilling its obligation to comply with a final and binding arbitration award. Department of Health and Human Services, Region II, 15 FLRA No. 139, 15 FLRA 710, 711, fn. 2 (1984). The record reveals that the Department of the Navy was instrumental in at least the delay in implementation of the Joint Asbestos Safety Committee. Further, the Department of the Navy filed the exceptions to the award. In view of its cognizance of the proceedings and active participation, the Navy will not be prejudiced by the General Counsel's motion. Furthermore, failure to comply with an arbitration award constitutes a continuing violation; thus, the six month statute of limitations cannot bar an action against the Department of the Navy. See Department of Defense, Department of the Air Force, 31st Combat Support Group, Homestead Air Force Base, 13 FLRA No. 41, 13 FLRA 239, 246, fn. 8 (1983). Hereinafter, the Department of the Navy and the shipyard will be known collectively as "respondents."

The above grievance concerned conditions existing after the "ripout" phase of the overhaul, that is, the extensive removal of equipment to be refurbished. During this phase, the submarine is also stripped of asbestos insulation and only Shop 64 employees, who wear protective equipment, including respirators, are allowed inside. After the ripout phase, asbestos exposure may result from damage to unremoved asbestos lagging and other asbestos materials, caused by contact with equipment, tools, and chains used to move equipment. In addition, employees crawl and stand on asbestos covered pipes in the course of their work. Asbestos dust also remains in inaccessible areas and may become airborne due to disturbances such as air turbulence, and movement by employees. The ripout phase is followed by reinstallation, and testing and finishing phases.

THE ARBITRATOR'S DECISION AND AWARD:

The matter was submitted to arbitration at which evidence was adduced, argument presented, and an on-site inspection made by the arbitrator. On July 28, 1983, Arbitrator John P. McCrory sustained the grievance, finding that the shipyard had not made every reasonable effort to provide and maintain safe working conditions and, thus, was in violation of Article 29, Section 1 of the agreement.[4] He found that asbestos dust, asbestos particles, broken lagging with exposed asbestos and similar potential sources of airborne asbestos were "routinely" in work areas aboard submarines. The shipyard was ordered to take appropriate corrective action with respect to all overhauls beginning after receipt of the award and "to the extent practicable" for overhauls already in progress.

[2] Article 20 provides in relevant part:

> Section 1. The Employer shall assign environmental pay to unit employees engaged in hazardous work or work involving difficult working conditions to the extent permitted and prescribed by applicable regulations.
> Section 3. Cognizant supervisors, when assigning employees to work for which environmental pay is indicated, shall so inform the employee. If at any time any employee believes that environmental pay is warranted, the employee should call the matter to the attention of his immediate supervisor who will make (or obtain) a determination and advise the employee. The employee may exercise his right to be represented by a Council steward when discussing environmental pay.

[3] FPM Supplement 532-1 Appendix J prescribes those working conditions for which environmental pay may be warranted. Category 16 (Asbestos) provides for payment of an 8% differential for:

> Working in an area where airborne concentrations of asbestos fibers may expose employees to potential illness or injury and protective devices or safety measures have not practically eliminated the potential for such personal illness or injury.

Arbitrator McCrory rejected the shipyard's contention that there is a safe level of exposure to asbestos. He stated:

> Establishing exposure "thresholds" on the assumption that there is a "safe" level of exposure demonstrates a philosophy which has caused employees to be victimized . . . The time has come to reverse the presumption and give the benefit of any doubts regarding the toxic nature of airborne asbestos to employees and their families.

Similarly, the arbitrator refused to base payment of environmental differential pay on the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) 2 fibers/cc standard. In November 1977, Arbitrator Robert L. Stutz issued an award in a dispute between the same parties relating to environmental pay for exposure to airborne asbestos fibers. Arbitrator Stutz based payment on the OSHA standard. Arbitrator McCrory did not consider himself bound by the Stutz award.

After finding the shipyard's safety precautions to be deficient, the arbitrator made the following recommendations:

> 1) Asbestos lagging which is not removed could be clearly marked so that employees would be aware of a potential hazard. Marking would also make surveillance efforts more efficient by reducing the need to test dust and particles each time it is suspected that asbestos is present.
> 2) More asbestos lagging could be removed during the ripout phase of an overhaul. The Agency has not explained why lagging which is sufficiently exposed to be damaged by employees working on an overhaul could not be removed, thus removing a potential source of airborne asbestos.

> Section 1. Each employee has the responsibility to work safely. The Employer will make every reasonable effort to provide and maintain safe working conditions. The Council will cooperate in these efforts and encourage employees to work in a safe manner.

> 3) A more durable and effective protective covering could be placed on unremoved asbestos lagging. The tape which is now used to seal lagging tends to peal off. The use of tough protective sleeves to cover and seal asbestos lagging which cannot be removed from work areas would reduce the incidence of damage and spills.
> 4) More frequent surveillances could be made of areas where the potential asbestos exposure is high. In view of the fact that the lagging is routinely damaged, weekly inspections may not be adequate. A system for marking asbestos would be helpful in identifying areas which require the most attention. The high percentage of cases in which corrective action was required after weekly surveillances suggest that exposure potential could be reduced by locating problems sooner.
> Finally, air monitoring techniques which are in general use leave something to be desired. Attempts should be made to develop and use procedures which can reliably detect levels of asbestos concentration below .1 fibers/cc and more attention should be given to the possible harmful effects of low levels of exposure.[5]

Addressing the environmental differential pay issue, the arbitrator construed the Federal Personnel Manual requirement to "practically eliminate[d] the potential for . . . personal illness or injury." He noted that employees who work in the confined interiors of submarines which contain asbestos are exposed to a concentration of airborne asbestos greater than that present in the outside environment. He concluded:

> This exposure can not practically be eliminated, except with the use of respirators, which both parties reject as an option in this case. I am not fully satisfied that some type of respirator program would not be helpful.
> The circumstances and conditions described in items 1 through 4 on page 23 above unnecessarily increase the potential for exposure to airborne asbestos, over that which is inherent due to the general presence of asbestos. They are a potential source of exposure which could be controlled by measures which would not place an unreasonable burden on the Agency. I do not propose an impossible burden of cleanliness, but rather measures designed to substantially reduce, but not totally eliminate, risk. As stated by Doctor Selikoff: It would be hoped that no avoidable asbestos exposure will occur in any circumstances . . . .

> For the foregoing reasons I find that the Agency has not consistently employed safety measures which would practically eliminate the potential for illness due to exposure to asbestos fibers.

Arbitrator McCrory did not order back pay because the shipyard had followed the less rigorous OSHA standard in accordance with the Stutz award. He described his new standard as focusing on the "efforts made by the Agency to eliminate unnecessary exposure, or unnecessary potential exposure, to airborne asbestos, without reference to an arbitrary threshold." Last, Arbitrator McCrory ordered the establishment of a Joint Asbestos Safety Committee within 30 days of the award:

> Unless otherwise agreed, the Committee shall consist of six members, three selected by each party. The parties may designate a neutral member, or members, if they so choose. It is anticipated that the Committee will meet regularly and conscientiously pursue its assigned task. Its deliberations may generate suggestions which can be implemented as part of the Shipyard's safety program or provide the basis for collective bargaining proposals. The Committee shall remain in existence at least until the termination of the current collective bargaining agreement.

REQUESTS FOR CLARIFICATION AND EXCEPTIONS TO THE AWARD:

Requests for clarification were filed by the union on September 14, 1983 and by the shipyard on August 26, and September 23, 1983. On October 21, 1983, the Department of the Navy filed exceptions to the award, stating: "Under the authority of 5 U.S.C. § 7122(b), the agency will not implement the arbitrator's final award until the exceptions to it discussed herein are ultimately resolved."

On October 25, 1983, Arbitrator McCrory addressed the shipyard's requests for clarification. In part, he stated that the Department of the Navy's labelling system for unremoved asbestos is ineffective and does not comply with the award. The Navy uses signs instructing employees to treat all insulation as asbestos unless marked otherwise. Additionally, he reiterated that no specific asbestos level will trigger environmental pay: "It is more compatible with the wording of Appendix J to focus on the unnecessary sources, or unnecessary potential sources, of exposure to airborne asbestos."

On October 20, 1983, Arbitrator McCrory responded to the union's request for clarification. The union had posited, in part, the following interpretations of the award:

> (1) All employees assigned to work on boats without respirators are entitled to Category 16, Environmental Pay, from July 28, 1983.

> (2) Category 16, Environmental Pay, will continue to be paid employees assigned to work on the boats without respirators until such time that the hazard no longer exists or a testing method is developed which can, shift by shift and hour by hour, clearly indicate the atmosphere in the boats [sic] as asbestos fiber free as the atmosphere outside the Shipyard.

The clarification stated:

> The statements in items (1) and (2) are not correct. The intent of the Award is that Category 16 environmental pay should be paid when circumstances or conditions which increase the potential for exposure to airborne asbestos, over that which is inherent due to the general presence of asbestos in submarines, are not corrected.
> The standard in Appendix J . . . does not require the total elimination of work place exposure to airborne asbestos. It does, however, specify a low threshold for environmental pay eligibility—when the potential for illness or injury is not "practically eliminated." This, I concluded, requires that employees receive environmental pay if they are exposed to conditions like those described on page 23 of the Award.
> The minimal increased exposure to airborne asbestos (over concentrations found in the general environment) which is caused solely by working in submarines which contain asbestos materials does not trigger entitlement to environmental pay. It is when this minimal level of exposure is jeopardized by circumstances or conditions which have the potential to increase actual exposure and the risk of illness that Category 16 environmental pay is required. The use of a respirator program, which might obviate other precautionary measures discussed in the Award, was not used as a determining factor because that option was rejected as impractical by both parties.

On July 27, 1984, the Authority found the exceptions filed by the Department of the Navy to be untimely.[6]

COMPLIANCE WITH THE AWARD:

A. REMOVAL OF ASBESTOS

1) 606 Submarine

Prior to the McCrory award, workers removed only as much asbestos insulation as necessary to facilitate the equipment overhaul. Between 20 and 40% of the asbestos was removed. Joseph Belmont, production superintendent, testified that the 606 submarine, which had just entered the shipyard at the time of the award, was stripped of nearly 100% of its accessible asbestos located in the engineering spaces. According to Belmont, respondents declined to remove some of the accessible asbestos where the likelihood of damage was small. The engineering spaces include the engine room, the auxiliary machinery (AMR 2) and the auxiliary machine spaces (AMS), and contain the vast majority of asbestos found on a ship.

Further, Belmont stated that accessible asbestos remains in other areas of a ship, such as the reactor compartment, and forward spaces, which contain mainly cold system asbestos. Department of Navy policy strictly controls work done in the reactor compartment, in order to minimize exposure to radiation. The policy forbids all unnecessary work in that area.

Cold system asbestos insulation is less susceptible to damage than hot system insulation. Hot systems are designed to retain heat and prevent electrical equipment from overheating. The asbestos lagging ranges from 1 1/2 to 5 inches thick and is covered with asbestos cloth. Amosite asbestos, the type which most easily becomes airborne, is sometimes used in these systems.

Cold system insulation prevents condensation in cooling water systems. Approximately 90% of cold systems designed within the past 20 years use rubber-type, asbestos-free insulation which is covered with 1/32 inch thick asbestos cloth. These materials are then covered with water base sealer and 8 to 10 coats of paint. Respondents conducted studies over two years and concluded that the probability of cold system asbestos becoming airborne is practically nill and that protective equipment is not even necessary for its removal.

Leo Mazzuchi, general foreman insulator of Shop 64, testified that respondents removed 95% of the accessible hot system insulation in the engine room and 100% in the AMS.[7] Thirty to 40% of the total asbestos content remains in the engine room, however, and 40 to 50% remains in the AMS, which contains more inaccessible areas. According to Belmont, about 10% of the total asbestos in a ship is inaccessible.

[7] George Weinert, an industrial hygienist, testified that almost all of the hot system asbestos in the entire submarine was removed.

In October 1983, the 606 submarine was the first ship to undergo a second ripout, in order to eliminate asbestos uncovered by equipment removal during the first ripout in July 1983. Respondents removed approximately 200 bags of insulation during the second ripout and approximately 1600 bags in total. The previous record for removal was 646 bags.

Joseph Mason, a labor-relations specialist, Paul Clark, former director of the shipyard's Office of Safety and Health, and Belmont conceded that damage continues to occur on the submarines. Union witnesses claim that damage occurs on a daily or weekly basis.

Steve Perry, chairman of the union Safety and Health Committee, examined the 606 boat in August or September 1983 and counted more than 18 areas of torn lagging and 25 exposed ends on asbestos covered pipes. At least five of the areas were pipes running directly across the footpath, and employees were kicking the loose asbestos. Perry testified: "We saw other areas where I could reach down and grab a whole handful of asbestos — chunks of asbestos fibers . . ." Perry also saw a large piece of equipment which had been removed from the 606 boat placed on the dockside for a week and a half in September or October 1983. The asbestos lagging around the equipment contained large holes and tears, apparently caused by cables used to transport it.

According to Belmont, Perry praised the condition of the 606 boat in November 1983. He allegedly stated that the removal was "the best he could imagine happening" and that "if all submarines in Portsmouth or any place they were ripped out were in that condition not only would we not have a problem with asbestos or exposure to employees but we would exceed the requirments of the McCrory award." Perry testified that Belmont asked him about the 606 boat and he responded that he was "happy that they had taken out a little more asbestos but . . . appalled at the condition . . ." Based on my observation of the witnesses' demeanor, I credit Perry.

Dennis Frost, union chief steward, toured the boat in August 1984 and observed 15 to 20 problem areas, including several exposed ends, cracked and damaged lagging, and taped ends.[8] He estimated that up to 100 feet of accessible, unremoved asbestos remained on the ship.

2) 631 Submarine

The 631 submarine entered the shipyard in January 1984. Mason testified that the asbestos removal from the 606 boat was used as a standard for subsequent overhauls. According to Mazzuchi, respondents removed from the 631 boat 95% of accessible hot system insulation, excluding very low traffic areas. In addition, respondents removed cold system insulation that was marked or in high traffic areas. About 1800 bags were removed. The configuration of the 631 boat did not necessitate a second ripout.

[8] John Froehling, union steward, concurred with this description.

Perry toured the 631 boat on August 14, 1984 with Frost, Froehling and Joseph Luvisi, former union chief steward. Perry observed 32 exposed ends, including one end within a foot of a worker's head, loose fibers adhering to the walls of the lithium bromide plant within inches of workers' faces, large chunks of almost pure asbestos on top of the lithium bromide plant, asbestos materials on the floor by the plant, employees sitting and standing on exposed asbestos, employees stepping on unprotected lagging, and a crushed pipe at foot level surrounded by white dust and powder.

Luvisi reported insulation that had been walked on or smashed during the ripout, large chunks of asbestos on the lithium bromide plant, asbestos fibers clinging to the side of the plant, and exposed ends.[9] Froehling described asbestos "all over the engine room, loose lagging, ripped ends, debris on the deck, et cetera." Workers were sitting and standing on the lagging and loose material and holding their hands on the pipes. He estimated that a couple hundred feet of protective sleeving would be necessary to cover the accessible, unremoved lagging.

After its tour of the 631 boat, the union called in the shipyard's Asbestos Recovery Control (ARC) Team, an emergency squad formed in December 1983 to repair damaged asbestos and survey the ships. Thirteen out of 15 samples taken by the team tested positive. The General Counsel entered into evidence 12 of the positive test results. All of the tests involved areas accessible to employees; though, in general, they were low traffic areas, such as crawl spaces.

The lithium bromide plant, from which four positive samples were taken, is 10 to 12 feet tall and located 10 feet from the middle passageway, a high traffic area. Lawrence Cooper, union president, testified that heavy machinery is often moved during the overhaul in the vicinity of the plant, causing it damage. Mazzuchi, who weighs 230 pounds, can get into the inboard area around the plant. Perry testified that employees using a nearby ladder hold onto pieces of the plant as they ascend and descend and brush their clothes against the plant in locations where the samples were taken.

Steve Herman, former chief steward, who worked on the 631 boat since February 1984, testified at the hearing that accessible asbestos lagging remains everywhere on the boat.

[9] Frost corroborated this testimony by Perry and Luvisi.

The General Counsel introduced into evidence random entries from the shipyard's spill log, dating from January to March 1984.

3) The 690 Submarine

The 690 is a new class submarine which is largely asbestos-free. Respondents tested the 690 boat, which arrived in June 1984, and found 6 or 7 samples containing asbestos, out of 1,000. All the asbestos in the non-nuclear areas was removed; any remaining asbestos is very minute.

4) The 605 and 678 Submarines

The 605 submarine has been in the shipyard since October 1982, and the 678 submarine since March 1983. The ripouts were completed before issuance of the McCrory award. The 605 boat began its testing phase on July 20, 1983 and the 678 boat on September 28, 1983. Sixty per cent fewer employees are on the ship during this phase as compared to earlier phases. The risk of damage to asbestos is greatest during the ripout phase.

Frost was on the 605 boat in August 1984 and found "various open ends of lagging, a few tears in some cloth, several areas crushed and damaged, a couple of holes, like a water injection type hole . . . ." He opined that relative to the other submarines in the shipyard, the 605 boat contains the most asbestos. According to union witnesses, at least hundreds of feet of accessible asbestos remain.

B. PROTECTIVE COVERINGS

By at least August 23, 1983, respondents began to use the mud-cloth method of repairing damage to insulation and sealing exposed ends. The exposed area is covered with cement and fiberglass cloth forming a "cap," and sealed with a water-based adhesive. Previously, respondents used cloth tape, which sometimes curled or lost its adhesiveness when exposed to heat, steam or paint. Further, asbestos material adhered to the tape when it was removed. The cement is hot and fuses into the insulation. Mazzuchi testified that the mud-cloth method "outweighs the tape a hundred times." A worker climbing on a pipe may dislodge the "cap," however.

Respondents' witnesses testified that protective coverings, such as sheet metal and plastic toboggans, have been installed on the submarines to protect unremoved asbestos insulation, particularly in the reactor compartments. Union witnesses testified that they have not seen protective coverings on the 606 boat, the 631 boat, nor the 678 boat. According to Frost and Luvisi, the 605 boat contains one piece of protective sleeving over insulation, approximately 3 or 4 feet long.

1) 606 Submarine

Respondents' witnesses claim that 500 small tags were posted on unremoved asbestos in the 606 submarine on or about September 13, 1983.[10] Some tags were removed along with asbestos during the October 1983 second ripout. In addition, on or about August 27, 1983, respondents posted large signs on the ship's four brows, the bridges which cross from the dry dock wall under the top of the submarine. The brow signs direct workers to treat all insulation as asbestos unless otherwise identified. Minutes in evidence of meetings between the shipyard and the union indicate that the 606 boat had been equipped with brow signs and small tags by the October 3, 1983 meeting.

Luvisi and Frost conceded that the 606 boat is substantially well marked. Frost opined that about fifty additional small tags are needed in the lower level. Perry contended, however, that in October 1983, the shipyard's agents told him that they had only equipped the boat with brow signs. I do not credit Perry's statement.

2) 631 Submarine

Respondents' witnesses attested to installation of small tags on the 631 submarine after its ripout phase. Weinert testified, however, that a week after ordering workers to tag the boat, he saw five tags in the engine room and none in the AMR-2.

The shipyard ordered two employees to tag the AMR-2 in the 631 boat on August 14, 1984 and the engineering spaces on August 15, 1984. Perry and Luvisi saw the employees during their tour of the boat on August 14: "They had a big box of signs — they were marking everything as fast as they could." One of these employees testified that she posted about fifty small tags at that time. She saw two tags already hanging in the AMR-2, and "a couple" tags in the engine room that were "dirty like they had been there for a while."

According to Perry and Luvisi, they saw no small tags in the engine room on August 14. Herman testified that he had worked on the boat since February 1984 and saw no small tags until August 16, 1984. Froehling testified that he saw no small tags in early August 1984 and estimated that more than one hundred were needed.

[10] Although Mason, Belmont and Weinert testified that the small tags were posted on or about August 29, 1983, I credit Mazzuchi on this point since he was held responsible by Belmont for the development and installation of the tags.

3) The 605 and 678 Submarines

According to respondents' witnesses, the 605 and 678 submarines were tagged in October or November 1983. Priority was given to the 606 boat, since damage was more likely to occur during the ripout phase. Frost testified that in August 1984 he saw a few small tags on the side of the 605 boat and none on the lower level. He saw three in the engine room which, in his opinion, needed several hundred, and none in the AMS, which needed 50 to 100. Luvisi was on the 605 boat on two occasions during the six months preceding the hearing and on the 678 boat within five weeks of the hearing, and claims he saw no small tags on either boat.

Tags which have been posted may be removed by painters or mechanics during the course of their work. Most of the painting occurs in between the reinstallation phase and testing phase, but some painting is completed after the ripout phase. The 631 submarine had not reached the testing phase at the time of the hearing. Mechanics are apt to work on a boat at any time after the ripout phase. Respondents attempt to replace tags that have been removed.

Some tags are also removed before sea trial during the finishing phase of the overhaul because they are not authorized by the Department of the Navy as permanent fixtures. The 605 and 678 boats have been in the finishing phase since May 1984. Employees represented by the union work on the submarines after the finishing phases.

Order forms in evidence show that respondents ordered 1,000 small tags in August 1983, 5,000 in September 1983 and 1,000 in February 1984 In addition, respondents introduced into evidence a memorandum dated February 21, 1984 in which Weinert ordered Shop 64 to tag the 631 boat.

D. SURVEILLANCE

Prior to the McCrory award, respondents surveyed work areas for asbestos damage on a weekly basis. Respondents increased surveillance to a daily basis in the spring of 1983 and to every shift, after issuance of the McCrory award. In addition, respondents attempted to involve supervisors and employees in surveillance efforts. Supervisors are required to make three surveillance tours per shift.

E. ADDITIONAL MEASURES

The Asbestos Recovery Control Team was instituted as part of the "As Low As Reasonably Achievable" (ALARA) program, the Department of the Navy program to minimize employee exposure to hazardous materials such as asbestos. ALARA was applied to asbestos in late 1980 or early 1981. After the McCrory award, the program became more formalized; for instance, in September 1983 Code 106, the shipyard Office of Health and Safety, hired a full-time manager for the asbestos ALARA program who secured a van for the ARC Team and established a hot-line. Two employees from Shop 64 are now assigned on a full-time basis to the team each month. The ARC Team needs seven to twelve minutes to respond to a call, whereas Code 106 formerly required one hour.

Employee awareness has also improved. In addition to supplying signs, posters and hard hat stickers advertising the ARC Team, respondents have presented slide shows and formal lectures. Respondents have also published several articles on the subject in the shipyard magazine. The number of reports of potential asbestos problems has increased by 400%.

Respondents developed a water-injection procedure which reduces the risk of asbestos particles remaining after a ripout.[11] Water combined with a solvent enhancing its wetting properties is injected into the insulation, thereby reducing airborne levels during the ripout.

In approximately February 1984, respondents introduced glove bags, vinyl or plastic bags used to isolate areas during "minor ripouts" conducted while unprotected workers are in the area. Last, respondents established a spill log to monitor asbestos problems.

F. AIR MONITORING TECHNIQUE

Rather than develop its own procedure for monitoring airborne asbestos, respondents requested the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) to conduct research and develop a new technique. Respondents decided that they lacked the credibility to develop a procedure which would be accepted by the community. Respondents are in the process of implementing a new method introduced by NIOSH in February 1984.

G. JOINT ASBESTOS SAFETY COMMITTEE

In approximately March 1983, the union established a Safety and Health Committee. Joe Diewicki, director of industrial relations, informed the union that respondent considered the new committee to be strictly internal union business and would not allow use of official time for its activities.

After issuance of the McCrory award, the shipyard initiated meetings with the union and employees to discuss health and safety issues. These meetings continued until January 1984. Clark told Perry that it was not the committee mandated by McCrory and that the Department of the Navy prohibited him from establishing such a committee. Captain J.F. Yurso, then shipyard commander, and Mason also told union officials that the shipyard was not allowed to establish the McCrory committee.

[11] At the end of a ripout, a ship is also vacuumed before employees outside Shop 64 are allowed to enter.

Masruchi solicited volunteers to participate in the meetings between the shipyard, the union and employees. Minutes in evidence indicate that attendance varied generally from five to seven persons. The union was permitted to select its representatives. There were no limitations on health and safety issues to be discussed. The shipyard's Office of Health and Safety had the authority to implement recommendations submitted by Clark as a result of these deliberations.

Clark testified: "When we established the meetings, we agreed it did not meet the letter of the McCrory award. I was not allowed to do that but our full intention was to do exactly what the McCrory award asked for." He conceded that respondents did not technically comply with the McCrory award.

On July 23, 1984, the parties entered into a Memorandum of Understanding establishing the McCrory committee.

H. ENVIRONMENTAL DIFFERENTIAL PAY

Respondents have paid environmental differential pay only in cases of actual exposure.[12] For instance, one recipient was struck by a chunk of asbestos weighing three to four pounds. Another recipient was installing a flange when asbestos spilled out of the pipe. In both cases, employees standing nearby also received payment. Some employees' claims have been denied because they could not provide airborne samples taken after actual exposure.

In order to collect, an employee must follow a procedure established in the parties' collective bargaining agreement.[13] The employee files a complaint with the supervisor, who may agree that environmental pay is warranted and annotate the employee's time card accordingly. This determination is reviewed by a labor-relations specialist. If the supervisor disagrees with the employee, the employee may grieve the decision. The union may also initiate a claim for environmental differential pay on behalf of an employee.

Perry testified that respondents could monitor, with difficulty, the whereabouts of its employees. It would have to secure information from every trade. Respondents attempt to identify for the medical action surveillance program all employees exposed to asbestos.

[12] Although Mason claimed that environmental differential pay had been paid for potential exposure, his testimony was contradicted by Perry, Luvisi, and Belmont, respondents' witness. In addition, Mason could not identify any employee who received such payment. On the basis of the entire record, I credit Perry, Luvisi and Belmont.

Prior to the McCrory award, respondents were obligated to pay the environmental differential when the airborne concentration exceeded 2 fibers/cc.

Discussion and Conclusions

The General Counsel has established by a preponderance of evidence that respondents have violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by failing to comply with a final and binding arbitration award, issued on July 28, 1983 by Arbitrator McCrory, directing the shipyard to improve asbestos conditions on the submarines and pay environmental pay until such steps have been taken.

As a threshold issue, respondents contend that the case should be dismissed on procedural error. It reasons that because the Authority did not rule on the October 21, 1983 exceptions to the award until June 27, 1984, the award was not "final and binding" within the meaning of section 7122 of the Statute when the General Counsel issued the consolidated complaint in this matter. The time for filing timely exceptions expired on August 31, 1983. Based on previous Authority actions when exceptions to an arbitrator's award were untimely filed, finding an agency's subsequent refusal to implement an award as violative of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute, the General Counsel's actions clearly were appropriate. Furthermore, Respondents' reliance on U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's Home, Washington, D.C., 15 FLRA No. 26, 15 FLRA 139 (1984), is misplaced. In that case, the agency had not failed to comply with an arbitration award because timely exceptions were pending before the Authority. In the instant case, exceptions filed by the Department of Navy were not timely.

Respondents also assert as a defense their good faith belief that the exceptions were timely, because the arbitrator retained jurisdiction for ninety days and because clarification requests were pending before the arbitrator. An agency acts at its own peril in disregarding the thirty-day deadline.[14] Section 7122 plainly states: "If no exception to an arbitrator's award is filed under subsection (a) of this section during the 30-day period beginning on the day of such award, the award shall be final and binding" (emphasis added).[15] The law in that area is abundantly clear; therefore, respondents' argument must be rejected.

[14] U.S. Department of the Interior, Bureau of Land Management, Eugene District Office, 6 FLRA No. 72, 6 FLRA 401 (1981), cited by respondents in support of their good faith belief, is inapposite in that it involved a response to a clarification request which gave rise to deficiencies asserted by the agency in its exceptions.

[15] In this regard, respondents' compliance with the award will be evaluated from October 26, 1983 when the arbitrator relinquished jurisdiction, rather than from June 27, 1984, as urged by the respondents.

In addition respondents contend that the arbitration award at issue is more appropriately interpreted through the negotiated grievance procedure. Although respondents state unequivocally that they complied with the award by August 31, 1983, they argue that the "amorphous 'steps management takes' standard" precludes evaluation of compliance in an unfair labor practice proceeding. While the arbitrator did not condition compliance upon a specific level of airborne concentration, neither did he leave the parties without guidance as to the safeguards to which employees working on submarines are entitled. It is my view that a reading of the award in its entirety dispels any notion of its ambiguity. Assuming, arguendo, that the award were ambiguous, I would still consider the unfair labor practice proceeding to be the proper forum for this matter as it stands. Any contention that an arbitrator's award is deficient because it is contrary to law, rule or regulation must be made by invoking the procedures established by Congress in section 7122(a) of the Statute. If a party fails to file exceptions to the arbitrator's award pursuant to section 7122(a), within the 30 day period established therein, the award becomes final and binding and "(a)n agency shall take the actions required by an arbitrator's final award"[16] Department of the Navy, Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, 17 FLRA No. 13, 17 FLRA 40 (1985); Department of Defense, Department of the Navy, U.S. Marine Corps, U.S. Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point, North Carolina, 15 FLRA No. 137, 15 FLRA 568 (1984). Similarly, if a party fails to assert the ambiguity of an arbitration award in timely exceptions pursuant to section 7122(a)(2),[17] or in a request to the arbitrator for clarification, it is in my opinion barred from later doing so in an unfair labor practice proceeding. A party should not benefit from its failure to invoke the procedures established in the Statute.

> (a) Either party to arbitration under this chapter may file with the Authority an exception to any arbitrator's award pursuant to the arbitration . . . If upon review the Authority finds that the award is deficient --
> . . . .
> (2) on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations;
> the Authority may take such action and make such recommendations concerning the award as it considers necessary, consistent with applicable laws, rules or regulations.

In the award at issue, Arbitrator McCrory clearly stated that "the circumstances and conditions described in items 1 through 4 on page 23 above unnecessarily increase the potential for exposure to airborne asbestos, over that which is inherent due to the general presence of asbestos. They are a potential source of exposure which could be controlled by measures which would not place an unreasonable burden on the Agency." On page 23 he recommended that respondent 1) mark unremoved asbestos, 2) remove more asbestos, 3) install more durable and effective protective coverings, and 4) institute more frequent surveillance. Arbitrator McCrory repeated references to "unnecessary exposure" and "unnecessary potential exposure" several times in the award and in the responses to the parties' requests for clarification. In the response to the union's request, he again stated: "This (the Federal Personnel Manual), I concluded, requires that employees receive environmental pay if they are exposed to conditions like those described on page 23 of the Award."18/

The parties read differently McCrory's directive to remove additional asbestos. On brief, respondents stated:

> General Counsel literally reads McCrory's language on page 23 to the extent he mentions lagging "which is sufficiently exposed to be damaged during the overhaul" yet concurrently overlooks other portions of the award and the overall context of the award itself. For example, on pages 22 and 23 McCrory limits his discussion to asbestos lagging left in work areas "where the risk of damage during the overhaul is substantial."

A reading in its entirety of the paragraph to which respondents refer militates against respondents' interpretation:

> The record also shows that asbestos lagging and other asbestos materials are exposed and routinely damaged while unprotected workers are engaged in the overhaul of submarines. According to Mr. Weinert, prior to a ripout, insulation is tested to determine what is and what is not asbestos. Yet, lagging which is found to be asbestos is not marked or labeled and exposed asbestos lagging is left (after a ripout) in work areas where the risk of damage

18/ The General Counsel asserts that the only conditions which trigger entitlement to environmental pay are the presence of free asbestos material and unremoved asbestos lagging. In view of McCrory's explicit reference to "items 1 through 4 on page 23," I am in agreement with the other parties that the triggering "conditions" include all four corrective actions listed on page 23 of the award.

> during the overhaul is substantial. Conceding the accuracy of Agency's statement that it would not be practical to remove all asbestos lagging, there is no apparent justification for not removing the lagging which is sufficiently exposed to be damaged during the overhaul, thereby causing a potential hazard in the work area. (emphasis added)

Arbitrator McCrory did not emphasize that the risk of damage must be substantial; rather, he emphasized the need to remove asbestos which is at least sufficiently exposed to be damaged. Further, McCrory reiterated in the award: "The Agency has not explained why lagging which is sufficiently exposed to be damaged by employees working in an overhaul could not be removed, thus removing a potential source of airborne asbestos."

Similarly, in his response to the union's request for clarification, McCrory made it plain that some quantity of asbestos greater than that found in the general environment would no doubt remain in the submarines. He was equally emphatic in the award, however, that all asbestos which is sufficiently exposed to be damaged is an unnecessary hazard. McCrory specifically rejected the assumption that there is a "safe" level of exposure. I cannot accept as a "differing and arguable" conclusion respondents' contention that accessible asbestos must be removed only from areas where risk of damage is substantial, that is, high traffic areas.

Testimony concerning unremoved asbestos on the 606 submarine is by no means conclusive. Perry attested to the poor condition of the boat in August or September 1983; however, the second ripout did not occur until October 1983. Further, although Frost estimated that 100 feet of accessible asbestos remained on the boat, he did not specify whether the material was hot or cold system asbestos. Mazzuchi conceded that a substantial percentage of asbestos remains in both the engine room and the AMS because it is inaccessible or because it is cold system asbestos. It is uncontroverted that cold system asbestos is generally innocuous.

Spill logs in evidence, however, indicate that the boat sustained asbestos damage on numerous occasions between January and March 1984. Two out of eight entries show damage to asbestos insulation in the engine room.[19] On brief, respondents claimed that the problems reported in the spill logs were "largely in areas above things, behind things, or below things". It is particularly irrelevant under these circumstances that they were low traffic areas since they were obviously sufficiently accessible to become damaged. Once exposed, any asbestos may become airborne through the daily motion in the submarine. The spill logs, maintained as part of the shipyard's day to day operations, show that accessible asbestos remained on the 606 boat in early 1984, and that actual damage indeed occurred. Respondents were, therefore, in violation of the arbitration award with respect to the 606 boat.[20/] [19] G.C. Exh. S-29 involves cold system asbestos; however, the record does not show that exposed cold system asbestos is completely safe. Cold system asbestos is less dangerous partially because it is less likely to become exposed.

The 631 submarine is also the subject of numerous spill log entries. In addition, I find testimony by witnesses for the General Counsel convincing that the boat was in substandard condition as late as August 1984. Credible accounts by Perry, Frost, Froehling and Luvisi of considerable employee exposure to loose asbestos materials caused by damaged insulation can only lead to the conclusion that respondents failed to remove enough insulation during the ripout. This testimony is corroborated by results in evidence of tests taken by the ARC Team on the 631 boat after the union's inspection. It is again irrelevant that respondents' witness characterized the locations of the damage as low traffic areas. The record is devoid of evidence that exposed asbestos in low traffic areas cannot become airborne and is not dangerous. In any case, the lithium bromide plant, targeted by the General Counsel's witnesses as a problem area, does not appear to be a low traffic area.

In addition, tagging on the 631 boat was deficient. The last minute tagging admittedly ordered by respondents around August 14 and 15, 1984 indicates respondents awareness of non-compliance in that area. That the employee assigned to tag the boat saw two tags already in the AMR-2 and "a couple" in the engine room does not excuse the need to hang at least fifty. Although the evidence shows that 1,000 tags were ordered on February 7, 1984, and it reveals that Weinert directed the tagging of the 631 boat on February 21, 1984, there is no showing that this tagging actually took place. Weinert admitted that when he checked up on his order a week later he saw only five tags in the engine room and none in the AMR. He did not testify that his employees ever corrected the situation. Herman testified that the boat had no tags from February to August 1984. I credit Herman where his testimony conflicts with that of Belmont and Mazzuchi on this point.

Having found violations of the award with respect to the 606 and 631 boats, I turn to the boats which entered the shipyard prior to issuance of the award. Arbitrator McCrory ordered compliance with the award "to the extent practicable" for overhauls already in progress. The General

[20/] The evidence is largely uncontroverted that the 606 boat was sufficiently marked. In addition, I find it unnecessary to make a credibility finding regarding the use of protective coverings on the 606 boat in view of the above conclusion.

Counsel did not attempt to prove that it would have been practicable to conduct second ripouts on the 605 and 678 boats in order to remove more asbestos insulation. The 678 was in its reinstallation phase and the 605 in its testing phase when the award was issued. To minimize risk, however, respondents were obligated to survey and tag the boats, and provide protective coverings. Respondents do not assert that these criteria are inapplicable to the 605 and 678 boats, but state that the risk of damage is minimal because fewer workers are in the boats and because damage is most likely to occur during the ripout. Nevertheless, spill log entries for these boats, recorded during their testing phases between January and March 1984, demonstrate that damage can and does occur after the ripout phase.

By respondents' own admission, the 605 and 678 boats had been devoid of tags since May 1984 because they were in the portion of the finishing stage during which unauthorized objects must be removed from the boats. Since employees work on the boats before and after the sea trial, respondents certainly are obligated in order to be in compliance with the McCrory award to provide the protections mandated by the award. Notwithstanding objections at this point, respondents did not raise this issue in timely exceptions and are, in my opinion, precluded from raising the Navy policy as a defense at this time. Department of the Defense, Department of the Navy, United States Marine Corps, United States Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point, North Carolina, 15 FLRA at 687. Thus, respondents were in violation of the award with respect to all four submarines at issue.[21]

The parties disagree over the method of payment of environmental differential pay. Respondents assert that individual employees must claim EDP under Article 20, Section 3 of the collective bargaining agreement and grieve if compensation is refused. The General Counsel claims that all employees working in proximity to conditions on the ship triggering EDP are automatically entitled to payment and that the onus is on respondent to make payment.

It appears illogical that the arbitrator would award EDP, but then prolong respondents' violation of the contract by having each employee apply separately. Involvement of the negotiated grievance procedure would further complicate rather than expedite the process. Moreover, pursuant to respondents' interpretation, the award does not afford a remedy; it merely triggers the remedy already provided by the collective bargaining agreement, thereby making the entire process up to this point a futile exercise which could not resolve the already existing different interpretations of the parties.

Respondents claim that this procedure is necessary to ensure that each recipient was exposed to the unsafe conditions. This solution actually creates more problems than it solves. Since employees are entitled to EDP for potential as well as actual exposure, it is unclear how often employees who work regularly in ships would have to reapply for payment. Potential exposure is a continuous state. In this respect, work done in proximity to asbestos is similar to work done at dangerous heights. Thus, the danger is always there and the employee is being paid for the potential rather than an actual hazard. Respondents assert that in the latter situation, the collective bargaining agreement allows supervisors to initiate assignment of EDP. I find that the award cannot be reasonably construed to require each employee to seek EDP individually. Nor can it reasonably be construed to require payment only when a supervisor initials requests for payment of EDP.

In light of all the foregoing, it is found that respondents have not fulfilled their obligation pursuant to section 7122 of the Statute and, thus, have violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.[22]

The Remedy

Having found that the respondents have engaged in certain unfair labor practices I will recommend that they cease and desist therefrom and to take affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Statute.

Section 7118(a)(7) of the Statute provides that backpay is an appropriate remedy where the unfair labor practice of an agency has resulted in loss of pay to its employee. Similarily, the Statute incorporates the backpay provisions at 5 U.S.C. 5596 which provides for backpay in instances where an employee has been adversely affected by an unfair labor practice. Under 5 U.S.C. 5596 the employee or employees must establish that "but for" the wrongful unilateral act of an agency, a loss of pay would not have occurred. The record in this case supports a finding that "but for" respondents unilateral act in not implementing the arbitrators award employees working on the various submarines involved would have received environmental differential pay during periods that substandard asbestos conditions were maintained aboard a particular submarine.

Although the matter has been extensively litigated, the record in my view, does not clearly establish all periods of potential liability for respondents. During the course of the hearing it was suggested that a backpay proceeding might be necessary in order to calculate the employees entitlement to environmental differential pay, if any. Preliminarily, it appears that certain employees may be entitled to compensation from October 26, 1983 until such time as respondents prove compliance with the arbitration award. If respondents are able to demonstrate compliance with the award for any submarine during any period of time after October 26, 1983, then liability should be diminished accordingly. Whether such a back pay hearing should be ordered should be left to those in charge of compliance of the instant Decision, the Authority's order or a court decree, as the case might be, to see how payment could best be carried out.

[22] In view of this conclusion, I find it unnecessary to determine whether respondents' conduct was also in violation of section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute.

At this juncture, I would recommend however, that respondents be ordered to preserve and upon request, make available to the Authority or its agents, for examination and copying all payroll records, time cards, personnel records and reports and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this order.[23]

It is recommended that the Authority adopt the following order:

ORDER

Pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 7118 and section 2423.26 of the Final Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority, U.S. Fed. Reg. 3482, 3510 (1980), its is hereby ordered that Department of the Navy and Department of the Navy, Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to comply with Arbitrator John P. McCrory's July 28, 1983 arbitration award by maintaining substandard asbestos conditions on submarines undergoing overhaul and by refusing to pay environmental differential pay.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute.

(a) Fully comply with Arbitrator John P. McCrory's July 28, 1983 arbitration award by conforming asbestos conditions on submarines undergoing overhaul to the standard established in the award, and by paying environmental differential pay until such steps have been taken.

[23] The respondent's uncontested motion to correct transcript is granted.

(b) Preserve and upon request, make available to the Authority or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, time cards, personnel record and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this order.

(c) Post at the Department of the Navy, Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix." Copies of said notice, to be furnished by the Regional Director for Region 1, after being signed by an authorized representative, shall be posted immediately upon receipt thereof, and thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by other material.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case comes before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and raises issues concerning the negotiability of the following Union proposal.

Union Proposal

> Utilize the reduction-in-force procedures for those employees who express a desire not to transfer with the function, in accordance with FPM 351.3 paragraph 3-5b.

The Union's proposal arose in the context of a decision by the Agency to achieve a reduction in its work force by transferring its Accounting, Examination and Disbursing (F&A) function to the Omaha District of the Corps of Engineers. The consolidation would require the abolishment of 29 full-time positions in the Kansas City District and establishment of 15 new full-time positions in the Omaha District.

II. Positions of the Parties

By its express terms and as explained by the parties, the proposal would require the Agency (Kansas City District, Corps of Engineers) to use reduction-in-force (RIF) procedures where employees choose not to transfer with their function. The proposal would effectively require that where an employee elects not to transfer to the Omaha District, he/she would be subject to RIF procedures within the Kansas City District. The employee would not be terminated at that location by adverse action procedures. Nor would the employee be subjected to RIF procedures in the Omaha District after the transfer of function has been effected, should a RIF then be necessary.

The Agency asserts that the proposal is nonnegotiable because it is inconsistent with its rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (C) of the Statute to layoff, retain, reduce-in-grade, assign and select employees. It also contends that the proposal conflicts with Government-wide rules and regulations and would determine conditions of employment for nonbargaining unit employees.

The Union maintains that the proposal constitutes an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute for employees adversely affected by management's action in instituting the transfer of function as well as a procedure within the meaning of section 7106(b)(2) and, as such, is within the duty to bargain. It disputes the Agency's assertion that the proposal would determine conditions of employment for nonunit employees, contending that the proposal would be limited to unit employees. The Union also disputes the Agency's assertion that a conflict exists between the proposal and applicable Government-wide regulations.

III. Analysis

A. Government-wide Rule or Regulation

The Government-wide rules and regulations referenced by the parties are issued by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) and are set forth at 5 CFR Part 351 and Chapter 351 of the Federal Personnel Manual. The parties do not dispute that these authorities constitute Government-wide rules and regulations within the meaning of the Statute. Under authority vested in OPM pursuant to 5 U.S.C. §3502, the provisions of 5 CFR Part 351 prescribe a system for reduction-in-force and transfer of function. Those provisions are generally applicable, with minor exceptions not relevant to this dispute, to employees in the executive branch of the Federal government. 5 CFR 351.202. Agencies are responsible for following and applying the regulations. 5 CFR 351.204.

Chapter 351 of the Federal Personnel Manual explains the system prescribed in the CFR, defining the components of the system and describing their use. Federal Personnel Manual, Chapter 351, Subchap. 1-1 and 5 CFR 351.205. The Authority agrees that the provisions of 5 CFR Part 351 and the implementing provisions of the Federal Personnel Manual are Government-wide rules and regulations. See American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1980, AFL-CIO and U.S. Department of Agriculture, Farmers Home Administration, 17 FLRA No. 112 (1985).

Those regulations address the use of RIF procedures in the context of a transfer of function. It is undisputed that the movement of the Kansas City District's F&A function to the Omaha District is, in fact, a transfer of function within the meaning of the regulations. The OPM regulations define a transfer of function as:

> [T]he transfer of the performance of a continuing function from one competitive area and its addition to one or more other competitive areas, except when the function involved is virtually identical to functions already being performed in the other competitive area(s) affected; or the movement of the competitive area in which the function is performed to another commuting area. [5 CFR 351.203 (1986).]

These regulations generally require that before a RIF is conducted in connection with a transfer of function from one competitive area to another, each competing employee in a position identified with the transferring function shall be transferred to the continuing competitive area. 5 CFR 351.302(a). Employees who refuse to transfer with their position or function may be subject to separation through adverse action procedures. Federal Personnel Manual, Chapter 351, Subchap. 5-3.c.(2). Under certain circumstances, however, the OPM regulations allow for use of RIF procedures for purposes of assigning or separating, as appropriate, employees who decline to transfer with their function. The regulations allow use of RIF procedures in the losing competitive area when the following two conditions are satisfied:

(1) There is a RIF in process or resulting from the transfer of function in either the gaining or losing competitive area; and

> (2) There is agreement between the two areas that the movement of employees is not essential to the continuity and efficiency of the function.

Federal Personnel Manual, Chapter 351, Subchap. 5-3.c.(3); see also Smith v. Department of Commerce, 19 MSPR 589 (1984).

Based on the record it appears that the Union Proposal may be consistent with the first factor listed above; that is, it appears that the transfer of function may necessitate a RIF in the gaining competitive area. However, it does not appear that the Union Proposal would allow for appropriate consideration of the second factor. The proposal would effectively require that RIF procedures be instituted in the losing competitive area based solely on an employee's desire not to transfer with the function and without any consideration being given to preserving the continuity and efficiency of the function. Inasmuch as the proposal provides for utilization of RIF procedures in the losing competitive area without regard to whether the circumstances present comport with the two conditions prescribed by OPM, it is inconsistent with a Government-wide rule or regulation. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 225 and Department of the Army, USARRADCOM, Dover, New Jersey, 15 FLRA 607 (1984), where the Authority similarly found a proposal nonnegotiable because it would require an agency to act without giving due consideration to specified factors which a Government-wide rule or regulation required be taken into account in making the type of decision addressed by the proposal.

IV. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, the Authority finds that the Union Proposal is inconsistent with a Government-wide rule or regulation. Therefore, pursuant to section 7117 of the Statute it is not within the duty to bargain. In view of this holding section 7106(b)(2) and (3) are inapplicable.*/ Further it is unnecessary to consider the effect of the proposal on nonbargaining unit employees.

Oct. 21, 1985) wherein the Authority held that section 7106(b)(2) and (3) are not applicable where a determination is made that a proposal conflicts with a Government-wide rule or regulation.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of three Union proposals.

II. Union Proposal 1

> The Employer recognizes that all employees have a statutorily created right to their pay, retirement fund and annuities derived therefrom. The Employer further recognizes that charges/allegations of pecuniary liability shall not be construed to be indebtedness or arrears to the United States until the affected employee has had the opportunity to fully exercise his/her rights of due process; wherein due process shall provide equal protection to all employees and shall require a hearing before an unbiased, unprejudiced and impartial tribunal, free from any command pressure or influence. All claims by the Government for pecuniary liability shall be capped at a maximum of $150.00. (Only the underlined portion is in dispute.)

A. Positions of the Parties

Union Proposal 1 would limit an employee's liability for the loss, damage to or destruction of government property to $150.00, whereas, under the Agency's existing regulations, an employee's liability is now limited to an employee's basic monthly pay. The Agency has refused to negotiate over the proposal contending that the proposal is inconsistent with the Federal Claims Collection Act of 1966 ("Claims Act"), Pub. L. No. 89-508, 80 Stat. 309 (1966) and violates its management right to determine its internal security practices pursuant to section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute.

The Union disputes the Agency's contentions.

B. Analysis

1. Management Rights

In agreement with the Agency, the Authority finds that the proposal violates the Agency's right to establish its internal security practices pursuant to section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute. An agency's right to determine its internal security practices includes those policies and actions which are part of the agency's plan to secure or safeguard its physical property against internal or external risks, to prevent improper or unauthorized disclosure of information, or to prevent the disruption of the agency's activities. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 14 FLRA 6 (1984) (Union Proposal 2), appeal docketed sub nom. Federal Labor Relations Authority v. Office of Personnel Management, No. 84-1325 (D.C. Cir. July 18, 1984). The Agency's plan as set forth in its regulation provides that an employee's pecuniary liability will be one month's pay or the amount of the loss to the Government, whichever is less. The Agency contends that this regulation acts as a deterrent and encourages employees to exercise due care when dealing with government property. Hence, it constitutes a management plan which is intended to eliminate or minimize risks to government property by making clear the consequences of property destruction, loss or damage, and is within the Agency's right to determine its internal security practices.[1]

Even if, as the Union argues, the Agency's plan is designed primarily as a means of recouping government loss, in the Authority's view the Agency's statutory authority includes determining that the plan has, also, the effect of minimizing the risk of the loss occurring in the first place. Similarily, the Union's argument that the Agency's plan is not an effective deterrent is beside the point. It is not appropriate for the Authority to adjudge the relative merits of the Agency's determination to adopt one from among various possible internal security practices, where the Statute vests the Agency with authority to make that choice. In this regard, the Union's contention that its proposal limiting liability to $150.00 is merely a procedural proposal under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute is not persuasive. The proposal directly impinges on management's right to establish its internal security practices.

2. Inconsistent with Federal Law

The Claims Act specifically states that the Act does not diminish the existing authority of a head of an agency to litigate, settle, compromise or close claims.[2] Pursuant to 10 U.S.C. § 4831, et seq., the Secretary of the Army was vested with the existing authority to compromise, settle or close claims when the Claims Act was enacted.[3] the Authority found that a regulation, which directly related to and was part of the agency's plan to prevent disruption, disclosure or property destruction at its facilities, concerned the internal security practices of the agency.

[2] Section 953 of the Federal Claims Collection Act provides as follows:

> § 953. Existing agency authority to litigate, settle, compromise, or close claims
> Nothing in this chapter shall increase or diminish the existing authority of the head of an agency to litigate claims, or diminish his existing authority to settle, compromise, or close claims.

There is no provision in 10 U.S.C. § 4831 which limits the Secretary's right to settle, compromise or close claims in fulfilling his responsibilities under the Act. We find that insofar as the Secretary has unrestricted authority to close, settle and compromise on claims for destroyed or damaged property, the Union's proposal is not inconsistent with the Claims Act.

C. Conclusion

Based on the arguments of the parties, the Authority finds that Union Proposal 1 violates section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute and, thus, is outside the duty to bargain. We also find that the proposal is not inconsistent with the Federal Claims Collection Act.

III. Union Proposal 2

> When the Employer determines it is necessary to hold an employee(s) liable for loss, damage, or destruction of property, the Employer may take appropriate disciplinary action or charge the employee pecuniarily liable, but not both. Under either action, the Agency's allegation will only be sustained if the Agency proves its charge with a preponderance of evidence. Any disciplinary action taken will be in accordance with applicable laws and higher authority regulation and the negotiated Agreement. If the Employer decides to hold the employee pecuniarily liable, the Employer will provide the employee a hearing before an arbitrator. (Only the underlined portion is in dispute.)

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal violates management's right to discipline employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and/or management's right to determine its internal security practices under section 7106(a)(1).

> § 4832. Property accountability: regulations
> The Secretary of the Army may prescribe regulations for the accounting for Army property and the fixing of responsibility for that property.

The Union disputes the Agency's contentions, arguing that the proposal is a procedure.

B. Analysis

This proposal would require the Agency to choose between holding an employee financially liable or imposing disciplinary action for loss, damage or destruction of property caused by the employee, but not both. The proposal therefore expressly would condition management's right to discipline an employee upon its decision not to hold an employee financially liable. Pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute, management has the right to take disciplinary action against its employees. The disputed proposal would interfere with this right by conditioning the Agency's exercise of this right upon the Agency's relinquishment of its right to impose financial liability. Contrary to the Union's contention that this proposal is procedural in nature, the Authority finds that the proposal instead concerns the substantive exercise of management's rights. Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization and Federal Aviation Administration, 5 FLRA 763 (1981). See also National Labor Relations Board Union, Local 19 and National Labor Relations Board, Region 19, 2 FLRA 775 (1980) (proposal establishing a condition upon management's ability to assign specified duties to an identified employee is inconsistent with the agency's right "to assign work").

We also find that the decision to hold an employee financially liable concerns only the application of the Agency's internal security practices. It does not affect the determination of what those practices will be. The proposal would not also directly interfere with management's right to determine its internal security practices under section 7106(a)(1).

C. Conclusion

Union Proposal 2 directly interferes with management's right to discipline employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and is outside the Agency's duty to bargain. Because it would infringe on the substance of the right it is not a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2). The proposal would not be nonnegotiable under section 7106(a)(1).

IV. Union Proposal 3

> In any event, the Employer will apprise the employee(s), in writing, prior to the Employer's > formal investigation, of any instance requiring a report of survey, of his/her rights. At a minimum, the Employer will inform the employee(s) of his/her right to have a representative present during the investigation, the right to remain silent, and in the event a recommendation is made to hold the employee liable, the right to review any and all evidence and statements relative to the report, and the right to an impartial hearing. The procedures for selecting an arbitrator shall be similar to those contained in the negotiated Agreement and all fees and expenses will be borne by the employer. (Only the underlined portion is in dispute.)

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal violates management's rights to discipline employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B).

The Union disputes the Agency's contentions.

B. Analysis

In agreement with the parties, the Authority finds that the issue raised by Union Proposal 3 is essentially the same as that presented in International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, Local 1186 and Navy Public Works Center, Honolulu, Hawaii, 4 FLRA 217 (1980), enforcement denied sub nom. Navy Public Works Center, Pearl Harbor, Honolulu, Hawaii v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 678 F.2d 97 (9th Cir. 1982). See also Tidewater Virginia Federal Employees Metal Trades Council and Navy Public Works Center, Norfolk, Virginia, 15 FLRA No. 73 (1984). In the Tidewater case, the Authority, in agreement with the 1982 decision of the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals in Navy Public Works Center, Honolulu, Hawaii, found that a proposed contract provision concerning an employee's right to remain silent during any discussion with management in which the employee believed disciplinary action may be taken against him or her was outside the duty to bargain, as the provision prevented management from acting at all with regard to its substantive rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute to take disciplinary action against employees and to direct employees and assign work by having employees account for their conduct and work performance.

C. Conclusion

Based upon our decision in the Tidewater case, we find that Union Proposal 3 directly interferes with management's rights to direct and discipline employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B).

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON REMAND

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority pursuant to a remand from the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, which directs the Authority to issue an appropriate order directing the Respondent agency to cease and desist from certain unfair labor practices.

II. History of the Case

A. The Authority's Decision

On July 24, 1984, the Authority issued its Decision and Order in U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, San Diego, California, 15 FLRA 383 (1984), adopting the Decision of its Administrative Law Judge that the Respondent had not violated the Statute by denying the request of Gregory Reed, a unit employee, for union representation at an investigatory interview, or by conducting the interview despite the denial of Reed's request. As stated by the Judge, and adopted by the Authority, the grant of immunity to Reed by the Respondent was sufficient to dispel any reasonable fear of disciplinary action.

B. The Court's Opinion

On December 24, 1985, the Court issued its opinion in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2544 v. FLRA, 779 F.2d 719 (Judge Starr dissenting). The Court, while accepting the Authority's standard for determining "reasonable belief," found that the record evidence failed to support the conclusion adopted by the Authority that the employee could not reasonably have believed that disciplinary action might result from the interview. Thus, the Court reversed the Authority's conclusion and remanded the case for the issuance of an appropriate order.

III. Conclusion

The Authority accepts the Court's opinion as the law of the case and, consistent with that opinion, finds that the Respondent, by denying the request of unit employee Gregory Reed for union representation at an investigatory interview of the employee on April 9, 1981, and by conducting the interview despite the denial of employee Reed's request, failed to comply with section 7114(a)(2)(B) of the Statute and thus violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. Accordingly, we now issue the following order:

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, San Diego, California, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Requiring any bargaining unit employee to take part in an examination in connection with an investigation (investigatory interview) or conducting such an examination or interview, without representation by the employee's exclusive bargaining representative, if such representation has been requested by the employee, and if the employee reasonably believes that the examination or investigatory interview may result in disciplinary action against such employee.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Post at all facilities of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, San Diego, California, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Regional Commissioner responsible for such facilities, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region VIII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of two Union proposals.[1]

II. Union Proposal 1

> All AFLC employees may be held pecuniarily liable for the loss, damage, or destruction of Air Force property when it results from gross negligence, willful misconduct, or deliberate unauthorized use. If doubt exists, the individual is not held liable. [Only the underscored language is in dispute.]

[1] The Union's appeal originally involved ten proposals. In its Reply to the Agency's Statement of Position, the Union requested that eight proposals be withdrawn from its appeal. We grant the Union's request and those proposals will not be considered in this case.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that Union Proposal 1 violates its right to determine its internal security practices under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute. The Agency also argues that the proposal is inconsistent with its right to decide the methods and means it will use to carry out its internal security policy under section 7106(b)(1).

The Union argues that the proposal does not violate management's rights, but is a procedure governing the exercise of those rights under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute.

B. Analysis

The Union's proposal would establish the standard to be used in determining whether an employee will be required to pay, that is, be held "pecuniarily liable," for the loss, damage, or destruction of Air Force property. The Union is proposing that an employee be required to pay only when the loss, damage, or destruction of property resulted from the employee's "gross" negligence. The Agency has adopted a regulation providing that the employee will be liable where the loss results from any negligence.

In National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 and Department of the Army, Kansas City District, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City, Missouri, 21 FLRA No. 32 (1986), the Authority considered a proposal which would have required an employee to pay no more than $150.00 when it was determined that the employee had caused the loss, damage, or destruction of Government property. The Authority found that limiting the amount an employee could be required to pay interfered with management's right to determine its internal security practices. We reached this conclusion because we found that the agency's policy concerning the amount an employee could be required to pay is a part of management's plan to eliminate or minimize risks of loss of or damage to Government property by making clear to employees the consequences of their actions.

For the reasons stated in U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, we find that the proposal in this case likewise impinges on management's plan to prevent damage to or loss of Agency property. The proposal, therefore, directly interferes with management's right to determine its internal security practices. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 15 and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, North Atlantic Region, 2 FLRA 875 (1980).

We find that the proposal concerns the establishment of the Agency's internal security practices rather than the methods and means of carrying out that internal security policy. Therefore, the Agency's contention as to section 7106(b)(1) must be rejected.

C. Conclusion

The proposal directly interferes with management's right to determine its internal security practices under section 7106(a)(1), and it is outside the Agency's duty to bargain.

III. Union Proposal 2

> If a decision is made to hold a bargaining unit employee liable for the loss, damage, or destruction of Government property and/or take disciplinary action for same, that decision(s) will be stayed until an arbitrator issues an award should it be grieved.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that Union Proposal 2 is inconsistent with 10 U.S.C. § 9835,[2] which provides that the decision of the Secretary of the Air Force with respect to an assessment of pecuniary liability shall be final. The Agency also argues that the proposal violates its right under section 7106(a)(2)(A) to take disciplinary action against employees, its right under section 7106(a)(1) to determine its internal security practices, and its right under section 7106(b)(1) to determine the methods and means of performing work. Finally, the Agency contends that the proposal conflicts with Article 5 of the parties' Master Agreement.

[2] 10 U.S.C. § 9835 provides:

> (a) Under such regulations as the Secretary of the Air Force may prescribe, any officer of the Air Force designated by him may act upon reports of surveys and vouchers pertaining to the loss, spoilage, unserviceability, unsuitability, or destruction of or damage to property of the United States under the control of the Department of the Air Force.
> (b) Action taken under subsection (a) is final, except that action holding a person pecuniarily liable for loss, spoilage, destruction, or damage is not final until approved by the Secretary or an officer of the Air Force designated by him.

The Union disputes the Agency's arguments, essentially claiming that the proposal concerns matters within the scope of the grievance procedure and that the proposal is a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2).

B. Analysis

1. Inconsistent with Law

Union Proposal 2 provides that action against an employee because of loss, damage or destruction of Government property will be stayed until an arbitrator issues an award in the case. Because 10 U.S.C. § 9835 gives the Secretary of the Air Force, or his designee, final authority to decide issues of employee liability, however, the Agency claims that an arbitrator has no authority to review the Agency's action.

In International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and United States Army Support Command, Hawaii, 14 FLRA 680 (1984), the Authority ruled that 10 U.S.C. § 4835 did not preclude an arbitrator from ruling on and overturning an assessment of pecuniary liability against an employee. The law relied upon in this case, 10 U.S.C. § 9835, is essentially the same as the law involved in the Army Support Command decision. For the following reasons, we find that 10 U.S.C. § 9835 does not prevent an arbitrator from reviewing the application of management's plan to prevent loss of or damage to Agency property, i.e., particular assessments of pecuniary liability against an individual employee.

Collective bargaining agreements negotiated under section 7121 of the Statute must contain grievance procedures which are exclusive for resolving all grievances which come within their coverage.[3] That is, the negotiated grievance procedure may be invoked to settle disputes within its coverage despite the existence of internal agency appeals procedures or statutory appeals procedures which also cover the matter at issue. Specifically, as to internal agency procedures, Congress intended that the negotiated grievance procedure replace internal agency grievance procedures.[4] As to statutory procedures, section 7121(e)(1) demonstrates that Congress was aware of other statutory appeals procedures when it provided in the Statute for negotiated grievance and arbitration procedures. It is clear that Congress intended the negotiated procedures to be an alternative to those other statutory procedures.[5] Unless it can be shown that the Agency's procedures for determining pecuniary liability are intended to be the exclusive procedures for resolving that issue,[6] such matters are within the scope of the negotiated procedure.

[3] The term "grievance" is defined in section 7103(a)(9)(C) to include any complaint concerning an alleged violation or misinterpretation of a law or regulation affecting conditions of employment. Applicable law and Agency regulation provide that employees may be required to pay for any loss to or damage of Government property which results from their negligence. Any complaint by an employee about an action taken against him or her under that law and regulation would be a "grievance" and would be covered by the negotiated grievance procedure, unless excluded by law or by the parties.

The courts and the Authority have determined that Federal law outside the Statute can limit the scope of the negotiated grievance procedure.[7] However, the fact that [6] Pursuant to 10 U.S.C. § 9831 et seq. the Air Force has established by regulation its own internal appeal system covering these matters. See Air Force Regulation 177-111 (December 21, 1978), Paragraph 31109A ff. See also DoD 7200.10-M, Department of Defense Accounting and Reporting of Government Property Lost, Damaged, or Destroyed.

10 U.S.C. § 9835 provides that the decision of the Secretary of the Air Force as to pecuniary liability is "final" is not sufficient to demonstrate that the Air Force procedures are exclusive so as to overcome section 7121 of the Statute. With respect to 38 U.S.C. § 4110, which provided for the decision of the Administrator of the Veterans Administration as to certain matters to be final, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, in Veterans Administration Medical Center, supra, note 7, stated as follows:

> Simply declaring the decision of the Administrator "final" is insufficient to produce conflict with the Civil Service Reform Act, since Congress obviously contemplated other statutory appellate procedures, which had to end somewhere, when it created alternative grievance and arbitration procedures available at the employee's option in the Civil Service Reform Act, 5 U.S.C. § 7121(e)(1)(Supp. IV 1980). Any other interpretation would render meaningless section 7121(e)(1) of the civil service reform legislation, which presupposed some nonexclusive statutory appellate procedures that could coexist with the alternative grievance and arbitration procedures made available under the Civil Service Reform Act. [Footnote omitted.]

Veterans Administration Medical Center at 956.

In those cases where the courts and the Authority have found that outside law limits the scope of the negotiated procedure there have been clear specific indications that the statutory procedures were intended to be exclusive. For example, in each instance, statutory provisions covering those procedures provided that they should take effect

"notwithstanding" any other law. New Jersey Air National Guard, note 7, supra, at 283; Veterans Administration Medical Center, Minneapolis, note 7, supra, at 958; U.S. Park Police, note 7, supra, at 3 of slip decision. In this case, 10 U.S.C. § 9835 does not provide that the decisions of the Secretary of the Air Force are final notwithstanding any other law.

Furthermore, the legislative history of those procedures indicated that they were intended as the exclusive procedures for the matters covered. New Jersey Air National Guard at 283-84; Veterans Administration Medical Center, Minneapolis at 956-57; U.S. Park Police at 3-5 of slip decision. The legislative history of 10 U.S.C. § 9835, and of 10 U.S.C. § 4835 pertaining to the Army on which § 9835 was modelled, indicates that the purpose of these provisions was primarily a matter of administrative convenience. These provisions were intended to "decentralize" final authority regarding accountability for Government property and to make the system for determining responsibility for loss or damage to that property more flexible. The objective was to expedite and facilitate settlement of such matters.8/ There is no indication that Congress intended to make these decisions unreviewable. See, e.g., Abel v. United States, 423 F.2d 339, 344 (Ct. Cl. 1970), wherein the court held that 10 U.S.C. § 9835 refers to finality within the agency and does not preclude judicial review.

As the Agency notes, the Comptroller General has held that 10 U.S.C. § 9835 prevents him from reviewing determinations by the Air Force as to pecuniary liability.9/ That holding represents the determination of the Comptroller General as to the limits of his own jurisdiction. It does not require us to conclude that 10 U.S.C. § 9835 limits the authority of an arbitrator to review such determinations.

8/ As to 10 U.S.C. § 4835, which was enacted first, see H. R. REP. No. 1224, 77th Cong., 1st Sess. 1 (1941); S. REP. No. 602, 77th Cong., 1st Sess. 1-2 (1941). As to 10 U.S.C. § 9835, see S. REP. No. 836, 82nd Cong., 1st Sess. 1-2 (1951).

9/ See Comptroller General Decision No. B-192609 (September 18, 1978); Comptroller General Decision No. B-135297 (March 28, 1958); 43 Comp. Gen. 162, 163 (1963).

In sum, 10 U.S.C. § 9835 establishes the final action authority in the Air Force for determining pecuniary liability. It does not prevent outside authorities from reviewing those determinations. Under the Statute, the negotiated grievance procedure, including binding arbitration, would be the exclusive procedure for resolving disputes as to pecuniary liability.

2. Management Rights

The Union's proposal would delay disciplinary action, or a collection action in the case of an assessment of pecuniary liability, until a final resolution of an employee's grievance. Contrary to the Agency's arguments, the proposal's delay would not amount to interference with management's exercise of its rights. Rather, the Authority has consistently held that proposals to stay final agency action pending the outcome of the grievance procedure are negotiable procedures under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute because they do not prevent management from acting at all with respect to its reserved rights. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1999 and Army-Air Force Exchange Service, Dix-McGuire Exchange, Fort Dix, New Jersey, 2 FLRA 153 (1979), enforced sub nom. Department of Defense v. FLRA, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981).

3. Master Agreement

The Authority has consistently held that we will only decide in a negotiability appeal issues which are before us under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Statute. If the parties are in dispute as to whether this proposal conflicts with the terms of their Master Agreement, they may resolve that issue under the procedures provided by that Agreement. See, e.g., Congressional Research Employees Association and Library of Congress, 18 FLRA No. 5 (1985).

C. Conclusion

Union Proposal 2 is not inconsistent with 10 U.S.C. § 9835. It is, instead, a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) which would not prevent the Agency from acting at all pursuant to its rights under section 7106(a)(1), section 7106(a)(2)(A), or section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute.

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's appeal as to Union Proposal 1 be, and it hereby is, dismissed. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request, or as otherwise agreed to by the parties, bargain on Union Proposal 2.[10]

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator William M. Edgett filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.

DIGEST NOTES

The union's bare assertion that it needs information does not automatically oblige the agency to supply such information under § 7114(b)(4). The Authority rejected the contention that the information sought was "presumptively relevant.' Rather, the duty to supply data under § 7114(b)(4) turns upon the nature of the request and the circumstances in each particular case. The necessity for unsanitized copies of official time and attendance records in one case and for unsanitized copies of progress reviews and performance appraisals in two other cases was not apparent from the circumstances. The union failed to divulge the reasons why it was seeking the information despite management's reasonable requests for clarification so that it could make an informed judgment as to whether or to what extent the information sought was necessary. The union failed even to state that it was seeking information to determine whether to file a grievance. Accordingly, the Authority found that the agency did not violate § 7114(b)(4) in violation of § 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) by refusing to provide the information sought.

5 U.S.C. § 5102

DIGEST NOTES

A new agency program establishing a cost of living adjustment to employee pay based on job location did not constitute a separate and unrelated employee benefit apart from the agency's pay setting system. The agency, a Government corporation which is not limited by the restrictions applicable to the "General Schedule" in compensating its employees, alleged that its new cost-of-living adjustment was a "relocation differential" and as such an employee benefit similar to hazardous duty pay or health insurance rather than an adjustment to the basic employee pay rate. Based on the facts presented, the Authority held that the cost-of-living adjustments based on geographic location were part of salary rates rather than a fringe benefit.

The agency, a Government corporation, did not alter the compelling need for its uniform pay setting system, as previously held by the Authority, when the agency established a cost-of-living adjustment based on job location. While the adjustment modified the agency's salary structure by adding a cost-of-living adjustment, the system of determining employee salaries remained uniform. The same method or formula for computing relative cost-of-living in areas where agency offices are located is applied to all employees of the agency. The Authority had previously found that the agency's uniform salary system was essential to achieving the agency's objective of pay equity. Further, the Authority determined that pay equity was a critical factor in maintaining employee morale and productivity, which in turn facilitated the effective and efficient operation of the agency. On the other hand, the union's proposal would compensate unit employees by a different method than that used to compute the cost-of-living adjustment for non-unit employees. Such different treatment of those employees who happen to be in the unit nullifies the agency's objective of equalizing employee "buying power" throughout the agency and, consequently, undermines the incentives for employees to move as part of an agency reorganization.

A union proposal for a different method of determining cost-of-living pay adjustments for unit employees than the method established by the agency for all agency employees does not directly interfere with management's right to determine its budget under § 7106(a)(1). The proposal does not prescribe a particular program or operation which must be included in the agency's budget. Rather, it concerns an already existing item, employee salaries. Moreover, the proposal does not prescribe the amount to be allocated to that item. It simply establishes a formula for adjusting employee salaries. Further, the agency did not demonstrate that implementation of the union's proposal would result in a significant and unavoidable increase in costs. Also it was not shown that the alleged increase in costs is not outweighed by compensating benefits.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is negotiable which provides that an employee whose past performance warranted an "Exceptional" or "Highly Successful" rating would retain that rating for one year from its effective date when changing positions during that year. The proposal conflicts with the agency's regulation (Army Regulation 690-400, Chapter 430) which provides that an employee's entrance rating is an automatic official rating of "Fully Successful." The agency alleged that there was a compelling need [5 C.F.R. § 2424.11(c)] for its regulation because consistent ratings throughout the agency is required to implement the requirement of 5 C.F.R.§ 351.201(c). That provision states that the requirement of 5 C.F.R. Part 351 be "uniformly and consistently applied in any one reduction-in-force and is applicable to credit for performance [5 C.F.R. § 351.504(d)]. However, both the union proposal and the agency's regulation does not specifically concern the amount of service credit which an employee will receive under OPM regulation. Moreover, the agency would be required to replace its current regulation with one similar to the union's proposal under the new OPM Performance Management System regulations (51 Fed. Reg. 8396-8421 (1986)). The new regulations require all agencies to transfer an employee's current performance rating of record to the employee's new job when an employee moves to a new position between performance appraisals. The agency also contended that there was a compelling need for its regulation because its regulation was essential to the maintenance of basic merit principles. However, the Authority held that this contention amounted to nothing more than a reassertion of its argument concerning additional service credit based on performance.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority denied the Union's request for reconsideration as untimely because they failed to comply with the filing requirements of the Authority's rules and regulations. While recognizing the problems regarding mail delivery between Panama and the United States, the Authority concluded that no extraordinary circumstances were established to warrant waiving the time limit. Moreover, even if the union's request for reconsideration had been timely, there was no basis for granting the union's request that the time limit for filing the original exceptions to the arbitrator's award be waived. The time limits established in 5 U.S.C. § 7122(b) may not be extended or waived as provided by section 2429.23(d) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Exceptions to arbitration awards cannot be filed at a FLRA Regional Office. While the union did mail exceptions in sufficient time, if properly addressed, they were incorrectly addressed to the former address of the FLRA Dallas Regional Office. Consequently, the exceptions did not arrive at the National Office of the Authority (i.e. the exceptions were not filed with the Authority) within the time limits prescribed by the Statute.

The arbitrator found that the activity violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement when it failed to select the grievant for an overtime assignment. DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is negotiable that provides reemployment or repromotion rights for persons removed or demoted in a RIF. The proposal would apply only when management decides to fill positions from which employees have been removed or demoted in a RIF. Also, the proposal would only require management to reemploy or promote employees who were qualified for and had previously performed acceptably in the position being filled. Therefore the proposal does not excessively interfere with management's right under § 7106(a)(2)(C) to fill vacant positions by making selections from any appropriate source. Nor does the proposal excessively interfere with management's right to assign employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A). Rather the proposal is an appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3). [proposal 1]

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

A proposal is negotiable that requires the agency to abide by another contract provision [re reemployment or repromotion rights for persons removed or demoted in a RIF] in any situation where that provision conflicts with the agency's RIF regulations. Contrary to the agency's contention, the proposal would not conflict with an agency regulation [Technician Personnel Regulation 300(351)] for which the Authority found a compelling need in a prior decision. In the previous decision the Authority held that there was a compelling need only for that part of the cited regulation which requires civilian technician RIF retention standing to be based on each employee's civilian and military appraisals. Case Nos. 2-CA-40303

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority because of exceptions filed by the General Counsel and the Charging Party to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The issue concerns whether the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by failing and refusing to furnish the Charging Party with information it had requested pursuant to section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute.

II. Background and Judge's Conclusion

The instant case involves a consolidated complaint. In each of the cases involved in the complaint, the record reveals that the Charging Party requested the following information: (1) Case No. 2-CA-40303--unsanitized copies of the official time and attendance records for all employees in the East New York Office for the period of October 1, 1983 to March 13, 1984; (2) Case No. 2-CA-40304--unsanitized copies of progress reviews and performance appraisals for all bargaining unit employees in the Murray Hill Office for the period of January 1, 1983 to March 15, 1984; (3) Case No. 2-CA-40343--unsanitized copies of all progress reviews and performance appraisals for all Title II Claims Representatives in the Jamaica Office for the period of January 1, 1983 to March 20, 1984; and (4) Case No. 2-CA-40350--unsanitized copies of various information related to Title II Claims Representatives in the Downtown District Office (e.g., annual performance appraisals, performance improvement plans, weekly District Office Work Report (DOWR) statistics, interviewing time studies, etc.) for the period of January 7, 1983 to February 29, 1984.

The Judge observed that the record revealed that the Charging Party requested the information to use in connection with a grievance or to determine whether to file grievances; however, these reasons were never disclosed to the Respondent. When the Respondent sought more information concerning the Charging Party's requests, the Charging Party responded with "cryptic and conclusionary references" to certain provisions of the Statute. The Judge found that the necessity of the requested data was never conveyed to the Respondent by the Charging Party and that it was not apparent from the surrounding circumstances why such requested data was necessary. He therefore concluded that the obligation to establish the necessity of the data had not been met and thus the Respondent was not obligated under the Statute to furnish it.

The Judge further addressed the arguments raised by the parties in connection with the Privacy Act, particularly, the Respondent's assertion that the "presumptive relevance theory" asserted by the General Counsel was inapplicable to the information requests because of Privacy Act considerations and the General Counsel's contention that the requirements of the Privacy Act had been met. In addressing these assertions, the Judge cited the Supreme Court's decision in Detroit Edison Company v. NLRB, 440 U.S. 301 (1979), among other cases, and noted that even assuming the information requested were presumptively relevant, since the Charging Party was seeking unsanitized data of a personal nature, the Respondent's obligation to adhere to the Privacy Act had to be balanced against the Charging Party's need for the information. Considering the Respondent's obligations under the Privacy Act and the Statute, he found no merit to the General Counsel's "presumptive relevance theory" in the circumstances of this case where the necessity of the data to the Charging Party was never conveyed to the Respondent and such necessity was not apparent from the surrounding circumstances.

In view of the above, the Judge ordered that the consolidated complaint be dismissed in it entirety.

III. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel basically argues that the information sought by the Charging Party was necessary and relevant to enable it to determine whether a grievance or EEO complaint should be filed under the parties' agreement or to take other appropriate action; that the requirement for establishing relevancy and necessity was met because the information was "presumptively relevant"; and that the Judge erred by failing to find the violations as alleged. Further, both the General Counsel and the Charging Party assert that the "routine use" exception in the Privacy Act permits the disclosure of the requested information. More specifically, the General Counsel asserts that section 552(a)(b)(3) of the Privacy Act permits the disclosure of the requested information which is contained in a system of records maintained by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) identified as OPM/GOVT-2, "Employee Performance File System Records." Additionally, they argue that the Judge erroneously concluded that the Charging Party waived its right to data related to the DOWR statistics in Case No. 2-CA-40350.

IV. Analysis

In agreement with the Judge, the Authority finds that the General Counsel has not met the burden of proving that the Respondent failed to comply with section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute in violation of section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute when it failed to furnish the requested information to the Charging Party. In reaching this conclusion, the Authority rejects the General Counsel's contention that the information sought was presumptively relevant. Rather, as the Authority has previously held, section 7114(b)(4)(B) of the Statute requires that the information requested be "reasonably available and necessary," Social Security Administration, Office of Hearings and Appeals, Region II, New York, New York, 19 FLRA No. 47 (1985), and that a union's bare assertion that it needs data to process a grievance does not automatically oblige the agency to supply such data, but the duty to supply data under section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute turns upon the nature of the request and the circumstances in each particular case. Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES), Fort Carson, Colorado, 17 FLRA 624 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1345 v. FLRA, No. 85-1378 (D.C. Cir. June 21, 1985). In the instant case, the record reveals that the necessity for the requested information was not apparent from the circumstances and that the Charging Party failed to divulge the reasons why it was seeking the information despite management's reasonable requests for clarification so that it could make an informed judgment as to whether or to what extent the information sought was necessary for collective bargaining purposes. The Charging Party failed even to state that it was seeking the information in connection with a grievance or to determine whether to file a grievance. Thus, under such circumstances, the Authority finds that the Respondent did not unlawfully refuse to furnish the data sought by the Charging Party. See Internal Revenue Service, Buffalo District, Buffalo, New York, 7 FLRA 654 (1982).*/

Additionally, the Authority finds, without passing upon the Judge's conclusion that the Charging Party waived its right to obtain DOWR statistics in Case No. 2-CA-40350, that under the circumstances the Respondent never refused to furnish such information. Rather, the evidence reveals that the Charging Party simply refused to follow through on its arrangement with the Respondent under which the DOWR statistics were made available for photocopying by the Charging Party.

V. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions to that Decision, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order except as noted in the footnote. We therefore conclude that the Respondent did not fail to comply with section 7114(b)(4) in violation of section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute when it refused to provide the information sought by the Charging Party. Accordingly, the complaint shall be dismissed in its entirety.

*/ In view of the finding that the information sought by the Charging Party was not shown to be necessary within the meaning of section 7114(b)(4)(B) of the Statute, the Authority finds it unnecessary to pass upon the Judge's findings pertaining to his consideration of the Privacy Act or the contention that the "routine use" exception in the Privacy Act permits the disclosure of the requested information.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that the consolidated complaint in Case Nos. 2-CA-40303, 2-CA-40304, 2-CA-40343 and 2-CA-40350 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This matter arose under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq.

Upon an unfair labor practice charge filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (herein referred to as AFGE or the Union) against the Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration and Social Security Administration, Field Operations, New York Region (herein referred to as Respondent), the General Counsel of the Authority, by the Regional Director for Region II, issued a Consolidated Complaint and Notice of Hearing alleging Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1)(5) and (8) of the Statute essentially by failing and refusing to furnish the Union with various information requested by the Union.

A hearing on the Complaint was conducted in New York, New York at which all parties were represented and afforded full opportunity to adduce evidence, call, examine and cross-examine witnesses and argue orally. The parties submitted a Stipulation of Facts and thereafter, briefs were filed by Respondent and Counsel for the General Counsel which have been carefully considered.

Upon the entire record in this matter I make the following:

Findings of Fact[1]

At all times material the Union has been the exclusive collective bargaining representative of various of Respondent's employees including employees located in Respondent's East New York Branch Office, the Murray Hill Branch Office, the Jamaica District Office and the Downtown District Office. The unit employees in the four New York area offices mentioned above were, by delegation of authority, represented by AFGE Local 3369 (herein sometimes referred to as the Union). At all times material Respondent and the Union were parties to a collective bargaining agreement the terms of which applied to all unit employees represented by Local 3369.

Case No. 2-CA-40303 - East New York Office

On or about March 13, 1984 Douglas L. Chauvin, a Vice President of AFGE Local 3369, was contacted by the AFGE Local 3369 on-site union representative from Respondent's East New York Branch Office. The local representative informed Chauvin that a bargaining unit employee at the East New York Branch Office, upon returning to work from a day of sick leave, had been told by her supervisor that sick leave restrictions might be placed upon her. As a result of the discussion with the on-site representative the Union believed that a potential grievance existed regarding the imposition of sick leave restrictions at Respondent's East New York Branch Office.[2] Accordingly, on March 13, 1984 Chauvin sent the following letter to Lester Gray, Manager of Respondent's East New York Branch Office where the Union represents 36 bargaining unit employees out of a total compliment of 42 employees:

[1] The record in this case consists solely of stipulated facts and documentary exhibits submitted in connection therewith.

[2] Article 24 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement contains a grievance procedure under which an employee, or the Union on behalf of an employee or employees, may file a grievance regarding matters concerning sick leave.

> "Pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 7103(a)(9) and 5 U.S.C. 7114, I would like unsanitized copies of the official time and attendance records for all of the employees in your office for the period October 1, 1983 through March 13, 1984. This information is necessary and relevant so Local 3369 can fairly and adequately represent the interests of the employees in your office.

"(9) 'grievance' means any complaint--
  "(A) by any employee concerning any matter relating to the employment of the employee;
  "(B) by any labor organization concerning any matter relating to the employment of any employee; or
  "(C) by any employee, labor organization, or agency concerning--
    "(i) the effect or interpretation, or a claim of breach, of a collective bargaining agreement; or
    "(ii) any claimed violation, misinterpretation, or misapplication of any law, rule, or regulation affecting conditions of employment[.]"

Section 7114 of the Statute sets forth various representation rights and duties of labor organizations and agencies and includes, inter alia, the following:

"(b) The duty of an agency and an exclusive representative to negotiate in good faith under subsection (a) of this section shall include the obligation--
  "(1) to approach the negotiations with a sincere resolve to reach a collective bargaining agreement;
  "(2) to be represented at the negotiations by duly authorized representatives prepared to discuss and negotiate on any condition of employment;
  "(3) to meet at reasonable times and convenient places as frequently as may be necessary, and to avoid unnecessary delays;

On March 15, 1984 Gray replied to Chauvin as follows:

> "In response to your letter of March 13, 1984, I am requesting that you provide more information concerning the need for the material you seek. Before this data can be released to you, I must make a determination whether it is relevant and necessary."

Chauvin's March 22 reply to Gray stated:

> "I received your letter dated March 15, 1984 in which you refuse to provide me with the information I requested in my letter dated March 13, 1984. My letter provides the appropriate statutory references for you to make your determination. You may also want to refer to Article 24 of the national negotiated agreement.
> "Please provide me with the information I requested before the close of business on March 29, 1984."

The parties engaged in no other communication concerning the requested information and Respondent has never supplied the Union with the information.

Although its reasons were never communicated to Respondent, the Union requested the information to determine sick leave patterns in Respondent's East New York Branch Office, how unit employees were treated regarding excessive sick leave usage, whether such treatment conformed to the collective bargaining agreement and because the Union believed that such information would be relevant to a determination on whether to file a grievance or to take other appropriate action. In the Union's opinion the information sought was required in unsanitized form in order to permit it to fully investigate and pursue a potential grievance.

> "(4) in the case of an agency, to furnish to the exclusive representative involved, or its authorized representative, upon request and, to the extent not prohibited by law, data--
> "(A) which is normally maintained by the agency in the regular course of business;
> "(B) which is reasonably available and necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding, and negotiations of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining; and
> "(C) which does not constitute guidance, advice, counsel, or training provided for management officials or supervisors, relating to collective bargaining . . ."

The information requested was not available to the Union from any other source and was normally maintained by Respondent in the regular course of business, was reasonably available to Respondent and did not constitute guidance, advice, counsel or training provided for management officials or supervisors relating to collective bargaining.

Case No. 2-CA-40304 - Murray Hill Office

In or around early March 1984 Local 3369 Vice President Chauvin was contacted by the AFGE Local 3369 on-site union representative from Respondent's Murray Hill Branch Office. The local representative told Chauvin she had handled the first and second steps of a performance appraisal grievance for a bargaining unit employee but was not familiar with step 3 proceedings. As a result of the discussion with the on-site representative, the Union believed that it would need certain information relevant to the processing of the grievance at the third step. Accordingly, on March 15, 1984 Local 3369 sent the following letter to David Gold, the Manager of Respondent's Murray Hill Branch Office where the Union represents approximately 15 bargaining unit employees:

> "Pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 7103(a)(9) and 5 U.S.C. 7114, I would like unsanitized copies of progress reviews and performance appraisals for all of the bargaining unit employees in your office for the period January 1, 1983 to March 15, 1984.
> "I will expect your reply to this request on or before March 22, 1984. Please reply to the address below."

On March 27, 1984 Gold replied:

> "This is in response to your request for information dated March 15, 1984, received March 20, 1984, concerning 5 U.S.C. 7103(a)(9) and 5 U.S.C. 7114.
> "Your request is deficient in that it does not identify the issue upon which it is based, it does not explain why all job categories are required and it does not indicate why unsanitized copies are needed.
> "I will give your request further consideration if you clarify the deficiencies as stated above."

On or about March 27, 1984, Vice President Chauvin and Murray Hill Branch Manager Gold telephonically discussed the Union's March 15, 1984 information request. In this conversation Gold asked Chauvin the issue for which the information was being requested. He also asked Chauvin why he wanted unsanitized information and whether it was related to a grievance or grievances, Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) complaint or any other matter. Chauvin replied that the Charging Party's letter of March 15, 1984, supra, was explicit enough for Respondent to release the information sought. He also advised Gold that he would make another request for the information.

Chauvin, on the same date, sent Gold the following letter:

> "Pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 7103(a)(9) and 5 U.S.C. 7114, I am making this second request for unsanitized copies of progress reviews and performance appraisals for all of the bargaining unit employees in your office for the period January 1, 1983 to March 15, 1984. This information is relevant and necessary for Local 3369 to fairly and adequately represent an employee(s) in your office.
> "Please provide this information to me at the address below on or before the close of business on April 6, 1984."

Gold's reply to Chauvin of April 2, 1984 stated:

> "Your second letter still does not identify what the issue involves or even if there is an issue! Further, you have not attempted to explain why all job categories are needed or why it must be in unsanitized form. I requested the clarification in my response to your first letter and in our telephone conversation of February 27, 1984. In our telephone conversation you stated that you are entitled to this information as the employee(s) representative and you refused to clarify further. I, however, must balance this intrusion into the personal privacy of the employee(s) vs your need of the information in the form requested by you. Consequently, I will give your request for information further consideration if you advise me of the issue, the reason for the need of unsanitized copies etc. etc."

On April 9, 1984 Chauvin sent the following letter to Gold:

> "I regret that I have to make this third request for information. My letters to you dated March 15, 1984 and March 27, 1984 provide sufficient reasons for you to release the information I requested to me.
> "In our phone conversation on March 27, 1984, not February 27, 1984 as you allege in your letter to me dated April 2, 1984, I referred to the right of the exclusive representative to have access to the information I requested and I gave as one example the right of the exclusive representative to monitor the employer's compliance with a collective bargaining agreement.

> "The issue and the reason for the need of the information are clearly specified in my letters dated March 15, 1984 and March 27, 1984. You might also want to refer to Article 24 of the collective bargaining agreement. In addition, the information is necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding, and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining.
> "Unless I receive the information I requested in my letters dated March 15, 1984 and March 27, 1984 on or before April 16, 1984, I will take other appropriate action with respect to my requests for the information."

On April 16, 1984 Gold sent the following reply to Chauvin:

> "This is in response to your letter of April 9, 1984. As I have stated previously, since you have not identified an issue (or even whether there is an issue), not explained why all positions are needed, and not explained why the information must be unsanitized I cannot release it to you. If and when you comply with my request for clarification I will be glad to help you."

Other than the six letters and the conversation referred to above, there were no other communications between Respondent and the Union regarding the information requested herein and Respondent never furnished the Union with the data.

Although its reasons were never communicated to Respondent, the Union requested the information to assist it in its preparation for a third step grievance. In the Union's opinion the information sought was required in unsanitized form to permit it to fully investigate and process the third step grievance.[4]

The information requested was not available to the Union from any other source and was normally maintained by Respondent in the regular course of business, was reasonably available to Respondent and did not constitute guidance, advice, counsel or training provided for management officials or supervisors relating to collective bargaining.

[4] Under Article 24, Section 9(a) of the collective bargaining agreement, a Step 2 grievance may be appealed to the Step 3 level within five (5) workdays after receipt of the Step 2 decision.

Case No. 2-CA-40343 - Jamaica Office

In or around October 1983 Local 3369 Vice President Chauvin was contacted by a bargaining unit employee who worked in Respondent's Jamaica District Office. The employee told Chauvin she was dissatisfied with her October 1983 appraisal and she suspected another unit employee had received a better appraisal because of favoritism on the part of their mutual supervisor. As a result of the discussion with the bargaining unit employee, the Union believed that, inter alia, a potential grievance existed regarding favoritism and on March 20, 1984 Local 3369 President John Riordan sent the following letter to Susan Pike, Manager of Respondent's Jamaica District Office where the Union represents approximately 104 bargaining unit employees of whom 21 or 22 are Title II Claims Representatives:

> "Pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 7103(a)(9) and 5 U.S.C. 7114, I would like unsanitized copies of all progress reviews and performance appraisals for all Title II Claims Representatives in your office for the period January 1, 1983 to March 20, 1984. This information is relevant and necessary so Local 3369 can fairly and adequately represent the employees in your office.
> "Please provide the information to the address below as soon as possible but no later than April 6, 1984."

On March 26, 1984 Pike replied to Riordan as follows:

> "This is in response to your request for Title II claims representative appraisals and progress review materials for the period January 1, 1983 to March 20, 1984.
> "This is a request for further information necessary to process your request and should not be construed as a denial of your request.
> "Please provide an explanation of the issue that prompted your request. Your request for these materials will be given further appropriate and responsibe consideration upon receipt of your reply."

Riordan's reply to Pike on April 2, 1984, stated:

> "I received your letter dated March 26, 1984 in which you respond to my request for information pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 7103(a)(9) and 5 U.S.C. 7114. "y request was dated March 20, 1984.
> "In addition to the statutory references cited above and in my letter dated March 20, 1984, permit me to suggest that you also refer to Article 24 of the negotiated agreement.

"The information I requested is necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding, and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining. Please be assured that the purpose of my request does not relate to internal union business.

"Please provide me with the information I requested in my letter dated March 20, 1984 on or before the close of business on April 12, 1984."

Pike responded to Riordan on April 5, 1984, stating:

> "I have received your letter dated April 2, 1984. Regrettably, you have not furnished me with sufficient information to release in unsanitized form all 1983 progress reviews and appraisals as well as 1984 progress reviews.
> "As you know, we are required to supply the union, upon request, with sufficient data to enable it to bargain intelligently, including policing the agreement, as in grievance matters. However, the union is not entitled to ask for data in the abstract. Unfortunately your response did not clarify to me the specific issue that generated your request.
> "I would like to point out that timeframes for filing grievances, etc. on 1983 performance data have elapsed and I am not aware of any 1983 appraisal grievances at any level that were timely filed that are still pending. Therefore, I am asking you to identify the live issue(s) that generated your request for both the 1983 as well as the 1984 documents.
> "As you also know records of performance documentation are generally sanitized to protect the privacy of the individual employees. An exception may be made only if identification of employees is necessary and relevant to the Union's representational function. Therefore please identify specifically why in this case you require non-sanitized documents.
> "Finally, should it be finally determined, based on your responses to my questions, that all of the 1983 and 1984 documents will be released, I estimate that the volume will exceed 250-300 pages. Much of this material is maintained in the Regional Personnel Office, rather than the Jamaica District Office. I therefore ask that you narrow your request, perhaps to be limited to all Title II CR's within one unit.
> "Please be assured that I will act promptly upon receipt of your response."

Riordan replied to Pike on April 16:

"I received your letter dated April 5, 1984 about my request for information dated April 2, 1984. My letter was a second request for information. I made my initial request on March 20, 1984.

"Your "awareness" of any grievances is irrelevant to your duty to provide the information I requested.

"Sanitized documents are virtually useless to the union in performing its representational functions.

"I am not willing to make my request more narrow. However, to ease your burden, I am willing to designate someone from the union to retrieve and photocopy the documents I requested."

On April 23, 1984, Pike answered Riordan:

"I have received your letter dated April 16, 1984.

"This is to inform you that performance documentation that you requested on March 20, 1984 may not be released until I receive the information requested in my correspondence dated March 26, 1984 and April 5, 1984."

The parties engaged in no other communication concerning the requested data and Respondent has never furnished the information to the Union.

Although its reasons were never communicated to Respondent, the Union requested the information to ascertain whether favoritism existed in Respondent's Jamaica District Office and because the Union believed that such information would be relevant to a determination on whether to file a grievance or to take other appropriate action.[5] It was the Union's opinion that the information sought was required in unsanitized form in order to permit it to fully investigate and pursue a potential grievance.

The information requested was not available to the Union from any other source and was normally maintained by Respondent in the regular course of business, was reasonably available to Respondent and did not constitute guidance, advice, counsel or training provided for management officials or supervisors relating to collective bargaining.

[5] Under Article 24, Section 9 of the collective bargaining agreement an employee, or the Union on behalf of an employee, can file a grievance concerning any matter relating to the employment of the employee.

Case No. 2-CA-40350 - Downtown Office

Shortly before February 16, 1984 Local 3369 Vice President Chauvin learned that a bargaining unit employee in Respondent's Downtown District Office (whom Chauvin was representing in an EEO complaint) had received a performance progress review which stated, inter alia, that the employee's within grade increase may be denied and termination or demotion may result if the employee's performance did not improve by August 1984. As a result of this knowledge the Union believed that a potential discrimination complaint and/or grievance existed regarding the employee's performance progress review and any adverse action that might issue as a result of the performance progress review. Accordingly, on February 16, 1984 Chauvin sent the following letter to Jefferson Woodcox, Manager of Respondent's Downtown District Office where the Union represents approximately 75 bargaining unit employees of whom 11 are Title II Claims Representatives:

> "Pursuant to 5 USC 7114, I am requesting the following information so that Local 3369 can fairly and adequately represent an employee in your office. Please provide in unsanitized form all of the information listed below for the period January 1, 1983 through February 29, 1984 for all Title II Claims Representatives in the Downtown District Office:
> "1. annual performance appraisals
> 2. Claims Representative desk audits
> 3. Claims Representative interview audits
> 4. performance improvement plans
> 5. interviewing time studies
> 6. quality review deficiency flags(bounces)
> 7. weekly DOWR statistics for each Title II breakdown.
> "I would appreciate your prompt reply to this request at the address below."

On or about February 27, 1984, Vice President Chauvin and the Assistant District Manager of Respondent's Downtown District Office, Peggy Murphy, telephonically discussed the Union's February 16, 1984 information request. In this conversation Murphy asked Chauvin for additional information so the request could be processed. Specifically, Murphy asked Chauvin to state the issue and why the Union needed the information in unsanitized form. Chauvin declined to provide further particulars on the ground that the Union's letter of February 16, 1984 stated sufficient information to warrant the release of the data sought.

Subsequent communications between the parties on this request were as follows:

- February 28, 1984 - Woodcox letter to Chauvin.

"This responds to your information request dated 2/16/84, received February 22, 1984, involving 5 USC 7114.

"Your request is deficient in that it does not identify the issue upon which it is based.

"In the telephone conversation with Peggy Murphy on 2/27/84, you refused to provide any particulars as to the case or issue related to your request.

"Should you identify an appropriate issue relevant to full & proper discussion, understanding, negotiation of subject within the scope of collective bargaining, your request will be given further appropriate responsive consideration."

- March 12, 1984 - Chauvin letter to Woodcox.

"I am writing this letter in response to your letter to me dated February 28, 1984 regarding my request for information dated February 16, 1984.

"During the phone conversation I had with Ms. Peggy Murphy I patiently pointed out to her that pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 7103(a)(9) and Article 24 of the national negotiated agreement a grievance means any complaint. Neither the statute nor the contract require the union to identify the employee or employees in your office who have a complaint.

"My request dated February 16, 1984 was not deficient and accordingly with this letter I am making the same request again.

"Unless you provide me with the information I am requesting before the close of business on March 22, 1984, I will take other appropriate action with respect to my request."

- March 15, 1984 - Woodcox letter to Chauvin.

"In response to your letter dated March 12, 1984 which was received by me on March 14, 1984 I wish to point out that at no time have I or Peggy Murphy asked you to identify the employee or employees in this office who have a complaint. What you have been asked to provide is the specific issue upon which the complaint is based. Is it a grievance involving an E.E.O. issue?

"In order for me to determine whether or not I can supply the information you require in the format you specified I still need to obtain more information from you before I can proceed.

"First, in deciding whether or not to release some or all of the information you request in an unsanitized format I must balance the intrusion into privacy of other employees against the need for the information in the form requested by you.

"Secondly, the copies you requested on all of the weekly DOWR statistics for each title II breakdown would be too burdensome to supply; however, I would consider making them available at this office for your inspection.

"Consequently, if you will advise me whether or not the complaint involves an EEO issue I will give your request further appropriate responsive consideration."

- March 22, 1984 - Chauvin letter to Woodcox.

"I received your letter dated March 15, 1984 in which you refuse to provide the union with the information it requested on February 16, 1984 and again on March 12, 1984.

"Both of my letters as well as my phone conversation with Ms. Peggy Murphy on February 27, 1984 provide sufficient information for you to make the information available to me.

"With respect to the weekly DOWR statistics, I am willing to photocopy them myself so that neither you nor your staff will be burdened by my request.

"Please provide me with the information I requested before the close of business on March 29, 1984."

- March 30, 1984 - Woodcox letter to Chauvin.

"In response to your letter dated March 22, 1984, which was received by me on March 26, 1984, it is apparent that you have misunderstood both of my previous responses to your requests for data.

"If you will simply re-read my last response, especially the second and third paragraphs, you will clearly see that I did not refuse to provide the information you requested. On the contrary, I simply asked you for specific information (whether or not the issue at hand was an E.E.O. complaint) so that I could come to a decision on whether to release the information in a sanitized or unsanitized format.

"You still have not answered my question and without knowing the answer I can not make an informed judgement concerning the intrusion into the privacy of other employees. Absent that information, I will release extant copies of the first six items in your letter of February 16, 1984, in a sanitized format.

"As far as item 7 on your list is concerned, if you will contact my Operations Officer, Mrs. Sprizzo, at 264-9416, and advise her of the date and time you wish to review the weekly DOWR statistics for the Title II breakdowns, she will make those records and a photocopy machine available to you for that purpose.

"In the interest of labor relations, as well as cost effectiveness, I will provide you with an additional ten (10) days to provide the information I require. If at the end of that time I have either not heard from you or you have responded in the negative, I will then submit items one through six in a sanitized format. As that response will require my having to devote staff and considerable time to the task of retrieving and copying that data, I would not later entertain a request from you to resubmit the data in an unsanitized format, should you subsequently answer my question.

"Finally, I fail to understand your reluctance to make a simple statement as to whether or not it is an E.E.O. issue. By answering my question, you would neither reveal the employee'(s) identify nor the issue(s) surrounding the complaint, but would certainly expedite the deliverance of the data you require and allow both of us to get on with our responsibilities."

- April 7, 1984 - Chauvin letter to Woodcox.

"I am responding to your letter to me dated March 30, 1984. Your "offer" to provide me with sanitized information is unacceptable.

"In the fifth paragraph of your letter you mention "cost effectiveness" as one of the reasons for arbitrarily setting a deadline for me to respond to your letter dated March 30, 1984. If you are truly interested in being cost effective you would provide the information to me in unsanitized form instead of sanitized form or you could allow me to inspect and copy the material I requested so you would not have to commit your staff to retrieving and copying the data.

"My reluctance to identify individual(s) or provide you with enough information so that you can identify them stems from my knowledge of management's reprisal against individuals who exercise their rights. As you know, the Federal Labor Relations Authority has issued several complaints against you for violating the rights of employees.

"The employees responded to your record in labor relations by recently voting to have you removed from the Board of Directors of the HEW Federal Credit Union. Fortunately for them, the election was done by secret ballot.

"I will not call Ms. Sprizzo until you have provided me with the rest of the information I requested in unsanitized form.

"Unless I receive the information I originally requested on or before April 17, 1984, I will take other appropriate action with respect to my request."

- April 18, 1984 - Woodcox letter to Chauvin.

"I am responding to your letter dated April 7, 1984, which was received by me upon my return from Philadelphia, PA. on April 16, 1984.

"Based on your statements, "Your 'offer' to provide me with sanitized information is unacceptable" and "I will not call Mrs. Sprizzo . . .", I am not going to forward the data to you in a sanitized format.

"This should not be construed as a denial to provide information, because if you subsequently advise me whether or not the issue concerns an E.E.O. matter, I will then be able to make an informed decision consistent with the provisions of the Privacy Act and send you the data requested in the appropriate format.

Finally, I take exception to your distorted, malicious and erroneous statements concerning Federal Labor Relations authority actions that have never occurred and the Federal Credit Union elections. Those issues have been referred to my personal attorney for appropriate legal remedies."

The parties engaged in no other communication concerning the requested data and Respondent has never furnished the information to the Union.

Although its reasons were never communicated to Respondent, the Union requested the information to compare the performance of the potential grievant with that of other employees in Respondent's Downtown District Office and because the Union believed that such information would be relevant to a determination on whether to file a grievance or complaint or to take other appropriate action.[6] It was the Union's opinion that the information sought was required in unsanitized form in order to permit it to fully investigate and pursue a potential grievance and/or complaint.

The information requested was not available to the Union from any other source and was normally maintained by Respondent in the regular course of business, was reasonably available to Respondent and did not constitute guidance, advice, counsel or training provided for management officials or supervisors relating to collective bargaining.

Discussion and Conclusions

The basic issue to be resolved herein is whether under section 7114(b)(4)(B) of the Statute Respondent was required to furnish the Union with the information it requested from the four locations herein. Counsel for the General Counsel essentially contends that since the data was sought either for use in processing an existing grievance or to determine whether to file a grievance, Respondent's refusal violated the Statute. Respondent essentially contends that the Union was obligated to state the relevance and necessity of obtaining the information in an unsanitized format and the Union's failure to do so privileged Respondent's refusal to furnish the data. Counsel for the General Counsel argues the information sought was of such a nature as to be presumptively relevant and necessary and therefore, the Union was not required to provide Respondent with any specific showing of relevance and necessity. Respondent argues that the presumptive relevance theory is inapplicable to the requests herein, especially since the requirements of the Privacy Act of 1974[7] must be

[6] Under Article 24 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement a grievance may be filed concerning a performance progress review or an Equal Employment Opportunity matter.

[7] The Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a, provides in relevant part:

"(b) Conditions of disclosure. --No agency shall disclose any record which is contained in a system of records by any means of considered. Counsel for the General Counsel counters by contending that the circumstances of the requests support a conclusion that the requirements of the Privacy Act have been met.

The Authority, in United States Environmental Protection Agency, Health Effects Research Laboratory, Cincinnati, Ohio, 16 FLRA No. 16 (1984) addressed the general status of the law under the Statute in this area by stating:

> "The Authority has previously held that section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute requires management to furnish an exclusive representative with information which would enable the union to effectively carry out its representational obligation in connection with the processing of an employee grievance or the determination whether to file a grievance, and that management violates the Statute if it refuses to do so. See, e.g., U.S. Customs Service, Region VII, Los Angeles, California, 10 FLRA 251 (1982); Veterans Administration Regional Office, Denver, Colorado, 7 FLRA 629 (1982); Department of the Navy, Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, 4 FLRA 619 (1980). However, the information sought must be necessary and relevant to assist the exclusive representative in discharging its responsibilities under the Statute, and therefore the Authority has dismissed complaints where this requirement has not been communication to any person, or to another agency, except pursuant to a written request by, or with the prior written consent of, the individual to whom the record pertains, unless disclosure of the record would be--

> (3) for a routine use as defined in subsection (a)(7) of this section and described under subsection (e)([illegible])(D) of this section . . ."

The parties acknowledge that the materials requested are contained in a "system of records" within the meaning of the Privacy Act and the "routine use" exception, above, would permit Respondent:

> "To disclose information to officials of labor organizations recognized under 5 U.S.C. chapter 71 when relevant and necessary to their duties of exclusive representation concerning personnel policies, practices, and matters affecting working conditions."

established. See, e.g., Internal Revenue Service, Buffalo District, Buffalo, New York, 7 FLRA 654 (1982); Director of Administration, Headquarters, U.S. Air Force, 6 FLRA 110 (1981)."

Thus, while management is clearly obligated to furnish a union with information in connection with the processing of a grievance or determining whether to file a grievance, it must be established that the information is necessary and relevant to the matter.

In the case herein, the record reveals that the Union requested information for use in a grievance in process or to determine whether to file grievances. However, these reasons were never disclosed to Respondent. Accordingly, with regard to the various requests, Respondent sought: (1) more information concerning the need for the material sought from the East New York Office[8]; (2) the identity of the issue involved, why information on all job categories was required and why unsanitized data was needed from the Murray Hill Office; (3) the "live" issue that generated the request and why unsanitized documents were required at the Jamaica Office; and (4) the case or issue related to the request for unsanitized information from the Downtown Office.[9] Essentially, Respondent was seeking to obtain sufficient facts whereby it could make an informed judgment as to whether the data sought was necessary and relevant for any legitimate collective bargaining purpose, especially since the Union was seeking unsanitized information. However, the Union replied merely by giving one or more cryptic and conclusionary references to the Statutory sections relating to the definitions of a grievance and the rights and duties of labor organizations and agencies under the Statute; the duty of an agency to provide information "necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining"[10]; the necessity and relevance of information to "fairly and adequately represent the interests of employees," the negotiated grievance procedure; and monitoring the parties negotiated agreement.

[8] This request was for information concerning all employees in the Office, not merely data confined to bargaining unit employees.

[9] Since Union Vice President Chauvin volunteered to photocopy the DOWR statistics and Respondent agreed to make them available on that basis but the Union ultimately declined to follow through with this arrangement until all data requested was provided in an unsanitized fashion, I conclude the Union waived its right to obtain this data.

[10] See section 7114(b)(4)(B) of the Statute.

In my view under United States Environmental Protection Agency, supra, and cases cited therein, the Union was obligated to sufficiently establish with Respondent how the information sought was necessary and relevant to it carrying out its representational obligations. Obviously what is required to fulfill this obligation will vary depending upon the circumstances of the case. Indeed, in certain situations the relevance and necessity might be apparent and no specific showing of relevance and necessity would be required, for example where the request is made when contract negotiations are imminent or actually in progress or where the request is made during a discussion of a specific grievance. But in the case herein the relevance and necessity of the requested data was never conveyed to Respondent nor apparent from the surrounding circumstances. Accordingly, I conclude the obligation to establish the relevance and necessity of the data was not met and Respondent was not obligated under the Statute to furnish the data sought.[11]

Counsel for the General Counsel argues that the requirement of establishing relevancy and necessity was met in this case, contending that the information sought was by its very nature "presumptively relevant." Counsel for the General Counsel suggests that the approach used in similar situations by the National Labor Relations Board (the Board) with court approval in cases arising under the National Labor Relations Act (the Act) should be applied to the case herein. The Board summarized its approach in a recent decision, Bohemia, Inc., 272 NLRB No. 178 (1984), as follows:

> ". . . It is well established that an employer must provide a union with requested information "if there is a probability that such data is relevant and will be of use to the union in fulfilling its statutory duties and responsibilities as the employees' exclusive bargaining representative." Associated General Contractors of California, 242 NLRB 891, 893 (1979), enfd. 633 F.2d 766 (9th Cir. 1980); NLRB v. Acme Industrial Co., 385 U.S. 432 (1967). The Board uses a liberal, discovery-type standard to determine whether information is relevant, or potentially relevant, to require its production. NLRB v. Truitt Mfg. Co., 351 U.S. 149 (1956). Information about terms and conditions of employment of employees actually represented by a union is presumptively relevant and necessary and is required to be produced. Ohio Power Co., 216 NLRB 987 (1975), enfd. 531 F.2d 1381 (6th Cir. 1976). Information necessary for processing grievances under a > collective-bargaining agreement, including that necessary to decide whether to proceed with a grievance or arbitration, must be provided as it falls within the ambit of the parties' duty to bargain. NLRB v. Acme Industrial, supra; Bickerstaff Clay Products, 266 NLRB 983 (1983).

[11] In view of this resolution I find it unnecessary to decide whether the Union's request might have been deficient or other grounds as urged by Respondent in its brief.

> "However, when a union's request for information concerns data about employees or operations other than those represented by the union, or data on financial, sales, and other information, there is no presumption that the information is necessary and relevant to the union's representation of employees. Rather, the union is under the burden to establish the relevance of such information. Ohio Power, supra . . ."

Indeed, under the Act it has been long held that wage or related information, since it concerns the core of the employer-employee relationship, is presumptively relevant and a union is not required to show the precise relevance of it unless effective employer rebuttal comes forth. See Curtiss-Wright Corp., Wright Aero Division v. NLRB, 347 F.2d 61, at 69 (3d Cir. 1965).

The logic behind the Board's approach was expressed by Board Chairman Gray Farmer, with majority agreement, earlier in Whitin Machine Works, 108 NLRB 1537 at 1541 (1954), enf'd, NLRB v. Whitin Machine Works, 217 F. 2d 593 (4th Cir. 1954), cert. denied, 349 U.S. 905 (1955). In that case Chairman Farmer stated:

> "I would not require that the union show the precise relevancy of the requested information to particular current bargaining issues. It is enough for me that the information relate to the wages or fringe benefits of the employees. Such information is obviously related to the bargaining process, and the union is therefore entitled to ask and receive it.
> "My interpretation of the employer's obligation under Section 8(a)(5) in this respect, of course, also presupposes that the bargaining agent, in this area as in all others, will seek the wage-rate information as a good-faith act in the discharge of is duty as the representative of the employees. I would, therefore, hold that, short of evidence that union requests for wage data are used as an harassing tactic and not in good-faith effort to secure pertinent bargaining information, the employer has a continuing obligation to submit such data upon request to the bargaining agent of his employees. This does not, > of course, preclude the employer from requiring the union to enter into reasonable arrangements for the compilation of the requested data including provisions for bearing the additional cost to the employer of furnishing the requested information. I am convinced, after careful consideration of the import of the problem on the collective-bargaining process, that this broad rule is necessary to avoid the disruptive effort of the endless bickering and jockeying which has theretofore been characteristic of union demands and employer reaction to requests by unions for wage and related information. The unusually large number of cases coming before the Board involving this issue demonstrates the disturbing effect upon collective bargaining of the disagreements which arises as to whether particular wage information sought by the bargaining agent is sufficiently relevant to particular bargaining issues. I conceive the proper rule to be that wage and related information pertaining to employees in the bargaining unit should, upon request, be made available to the bargaining agent without regard to its immediate relationship to the negotiation or administration of the collective-bargaining agreement."

Notwithstanding the Board and court cases and principles stated above, the Supreme Court in Detroit Edison Company v. NLRB, 440 U.S. 301 (1979), 99 S.Ct. 1123 at 1131 stated:

> "A union's bare assertion that it needs information to process a grievance does not automatically oblige the employer to supply all the information in the manner requested. The duty to supply information under § 8(a)(5) turns upon "the circumstances of the particular case," NLRB v. Truitt Mfg. Co., 351 U.S., at 153, 76 S.Ct., at 756, and much the same may be said for the type of disclosure that will satisfy that duty. See e.g., American Cyanamid Co., 129 N.L.R.B. 683, 684 (1960)."

In Detroit Edison a union sought certain information about employee aptitude tests to prepare for arbitration of a grievance. The Court, after noting that no absolute rule has ever been established wherein a union's interests in arguably relevant information must always predominate over all other interests, however legitimate, id at 1132, 1133, went on to balance the conflicting interests of the parties to resolve the matter. Thus, it is apparent that where a request for "arguably relevant" information is at issue, all the circumstances of the request must be considered in balancing conflicting interests. It follows that similar consideration should be accorded a request for "presumptively relevant" data.

The Authority used this approach in Veterans Administration Regional Office, Denver, Colorado, 7 FLRA 29 (1982). In that case the union, while investigating an employee's grievance alleging preselection in a promotion, sought the names of other candidates so it could match known ratings of a rating panel with particular employees. Veterans Administration, Denver, relying on prior similar cases which arose under Executive Order 11491[12/], balanced privacy rights against the union's Statutory right for information and found the union's right and need for data to substantially outweigh the employee's right to privacy in the circumstances therein.[13/]

In the case herein, the Union made broad requests for unsanitized information in situations wherein the necessity to the Union was not immediately apparent nor in such circumstances that Respondent could be expected to have known the relevance and necessity of the information to a particular concern of the Union. Thus, unsanitized time and attendance records for all employees, which would obviously include non-unit employees at the East New York Office, were sought. At the other offices the Union sought unsanitized appraisal information and other data of a particular personal nature at a time when no negotiations were planned or in progress, no particular dispute was occurring and no indication was given to management the data sought was necessary for a grievance in progress or being considered.[14/]

12/ Department of Defense, State of New Jersey, 3 FLRC 285 (1975), 5 A/SLMR 499 (1975), 3 A/SLMR 591 (1973); Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, 8 A/SLMR 113, A/SLMR No. 974, aff'd 6 FLRC 797 (1978); Internal Revenue Service, Chicago, District Office, 8 A/SLMR 309, A/SLMR No. 1004 (1978); Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Region VIII, 8 A/SLMR 949, A/SLMR No. 1109 (1978); Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service and IRS Milwaukee District, 8 A/SLMR 1125, A/SLMR No. 1133 (1978).

13/ The cases under the Executive Order were decided based upon section 10(e) of the Order under which an exclusive representative was entitled and responsible to represent the interests of all employees in the unit. Although in Veterans Administration, Denver, supra, the Authority specifically rejected the theory that an exclusive representative's right to information derived from section 7114(a)(1) of the Statute, which is virtually identical to the language of section 10(e) of the Executive Order, the Authority nevertheless did not reject the procedure of balancing conflicting rights an interests in these situations.

14/ Indeed, when management sought to ascertain, even in a general way, how the data sought was relevant and necessary to a legitimate Union concern, the Union refusal to give management even a reasonable hint to support its request.

In evaluating the request herein, even assuming arguendo that the requested information was generally presumptively relevant to collective bargaining, since the Union was seeking unsanitized data of a personal nature, I conclude Respondent's obligation to adhere to the proscriptions of the Privacy Act must be balanced against the Union's need for such information. Respondent is placed in a situation of being required to follow the dictates of two statutes, one requiring the production of information and one limiting production. It is obvious that in such situations an employer must have some information relative to why the Union needs the data in order to balance the necessity and relevance of the data against the obligations imposed by the Privacy Act. Indeed, section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute only requires the production of data ". . . to the extent not prohibited by law" and the Privacy Act permits the disclosure to a union of otherwise personal employee information where that data is "relevant and necessary" for the union to perform its proper representational functions. But how can an employer decide if particular information is relevant and necessary unless it has some idea of why the union needs the information?

In my view there is no merit to the claim that a "presumptive relevance" theory would satisfy the requirement of the Privacy Act and the section 7114(b)(4)(B) of the Statute in a situation as herein. Veterans Administration Regional Office, Denver, supra, and Detroit Edison Company, supra. Rather, I conclude that under the Statute when unsanitized personal information is sought wherein Privacy Act considerations are legitimately raised, sufficient facts demonstrating a union's need must be available to an agency so the employer can balance the union's need for the information against the employer's duties and obligations under the Privacy Act and the Statute.15/

15/ As indicated previously, all the circumstances surrounding the request for information must be considered when assessing how much detail must be provided management relative to a union's need for data. I find noteworthy, especially when considering the particular facts of the case herein and the Authority's decision in United States Environmental Protection Agency, supra, the following language used by Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in NLRB v. F.W. Woolworth Co., 235 F.2d 319 at 322 (9th Cir. 1956); rev'd 352 U.S. 930 (1956):

> "We do not hold that a request must painfully, laboriously or absolutely demonstrate in detail a relevancy, but we do believe that at sometime or someplace some specific relevancy should be asserted or facts should be shown whereby one could say that the employer ought to know anyway without demonstration the relevancy of the information to the relationship of the parties. It must be something more than Micawber's "something may turn up."

Accordingly, in view of the entire foregoing and under the particular circumstances herein I conclude that no violation of the Statute occurred by Respondent's refusal to furnish the Union with the requested data and I recommended the Authority issue the following:

DECISION ON REMAND

I. Statement of the Case

By its Order of April 26, 1985, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit granted the Authority's motion to remand the record in the instant case so that the Authority could consider the relevance, if any, of the Agency's August 20, 1984 issuance to the Authority's initial decision herein, National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 207 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Washington, D.C., 14 FLRA 598 (1984) (Member Haughton dissenting). The proposal remanded to the Authority was the following:

Union Proposal 5[1]

Article 59 - Salary

Section 1

> The salary structure, that is the grades and steps of the schedule, being used by FDIC will be maintained. Hereafter, all employees will have their current salaries adjusted for the cost-of-living/comparability factor. The (After October 1980 the adjustment factor developed by the Council will be modified to account for the different comparability positions between FDIC and those employees under the General Schedule. Beginning in January 1981 the parties will meet to seek agreement on the modification formula.) This adjustment will become effective the beginning of the first pay period following the announcement of it by the council or other appropriate sources. It will be unaffected by Presidential or Congressional actions.

In its initial decision the Authority held that Union Proposal 5 was outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(2) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), as amended, 5 U.S.C. §§ 7101-7135 (1982 and Supp. II 1984)[2] and section 2424.11(a) of the uniform salary system, whereby employees at the same grade and step receive the same salary, was essential to achieving the Agency's objective of pay equity. Further, the Authority determined that pay equity was a critical factor in maintaining employee morale and productivity, which in turn facilitated the effective and efficient operation of the Agency. The Union's proposal, the Authority concluded, by providing a different salary system for unit employees in the Washington headquarters office, would frustrate the goal of pay equity and thus would disrupt the effective and efficient accomplishment of the mission of the Agency. The Agency is comprised of employees in 14 regional offices across the country as well as bargaining unit and nonbargaining unit employees in the Washington headquarters.

[4] The parties stipulated that the Agency is a Government Corporation and is not subject to the pay and allowance provisions of Chapter 51 of title 5 of the United States Code, see 5 U.S.C. § 5102, 5 CFR 511.201; the compensation paid to its employees is not limited by the restrictions applicable to the "General Schedule"; and the Agency's Board of Directors, in its discretion, regularly has adopted resolutions pursuant to which the Agency pays its general graded and wage graded employees at the same rates of pay as are paid to Federal employees who are subject to Chapter 51 of title 5 of the U.S. Code. There is no dispute in this case as to whether the Agency's salary resolutions constitute agency rules or regulations which could bar negotiation of conflicting proposals if supported by a compelling need.

The Union appealed the Authority's decision to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, appeal docketed sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, No. 84-1286 (D.C. Cir. July 6, 1984). Subsequent to the filing of the appeal, the Agency's Board of Directors, on August 20, 1984, adopted a resolution establishing a cost-of-living adjustment to the salaries of all Agency employees effective January 1, 1985.[5] On the same date, the Agency notified employees

By Order of April 26, 1985, the Court granted the Authority's motion and denied the Union's motion. case, including the parties' submissions pursuant to the Authority's Notice of Reopened Proceedings, the Authority makes the following determinations.

II. Positions of the Parties

On remand, the Union contends that the Agency's August 20, 1984 resolution undermines the Authority's earlier determination that a compelling need exists for Agency resolutions prescribing a uniform salary structure based upon an employee's grade and step. The Agency contends that its August 20, 1984 resolution establishes a benefit for employees wholly apart from and unrelated to its salary schedule and, thus, the August 20, 1984 resolution does not fall within the scope of the Authority's decision as to the essentiality of the Agency's salary schedule. In the alternative, the Agency argues that even if the Agency's August 20, 1984 resolution is found to pertain to employee salaries, that determination does not require the reversal of the Authority's decision. The Agency concludes that, for the same reasons as are set forth in the Authority's original decision, a compelling need exists for the cost-of-living adjustments established in the Agency's August 20, 1984 resolution. The Agency also contends that the proposal directly interferes with its right to determine its budget under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute.

III. Analysis

A. Relationship of Resolution to Salary

As to the Agency's first contention, that its cost-of-living adjustments constitute separate and unrelated employee benefits, the Authority finds, in agreement with the Union,[7] that the subject matter of the Agency's August 20, 1984 resolution directly relates to the issues pertaining to the Agency's salary structure resolved by the Authority in its initial decision. The resolution provides for "a full cost-of-living adjustment to the salaries of all . . . employees." [Emphasis added.][8] Moreover, the record indicates that a major reason for adopting a system of cost-of-living adjustments is to make the salaries of Agency employees more competitive with salaries for comparable jobs in higher cost areas.9/ The Agency argues that because the cost-of-living adjustment is based upon job location rather than position classification it is a "relocation differential" and as such is an employee benefit. However, rather than substantiating its claim, the Agency's argument only emphasizes the similarity to other forms of wage differentials, like an environmental differential or hazardous duty pay. Furthermore, the Agency acknowledges that its cost-of-living adjustment constitutes taxable income to the employee, again implicitly underscoring the distinction between the cost-of-living adjustment involved herein and typical non-taxable employee benefits, like life and health insurance.10/ In short, the cost-of-living adjustment established by the Agency is an increment to employee salary. It is necessary, therefore, to consider the effect of its establishment upon the Authority's prior decision.

B. Compelling Need

The Union contends that the Agency can no longer claim, and the Authority could not now find, that the uniform salary system established by Board of Director resolutions is essential to the accomplishment of the Agency's mission or the execution of its functions in a manner consistent with the requirements of an effective and efficient government. With the adoption of the August 20, 1984 resolution, the Agency no longer has a uniform salary system. In particular, the Union argues that since, under the Agency's cost-of-living adjustment, employees at the same grade and step will not receive the same salary, the Agency cannot claim, nor can the Authority find, that the August 20, 1984 resolution is essential to the achievement of pay equity and the preservation of employee morale. The Union concludes that there is no compelling need for the Agency's resolution so as to bar negotiation on the Union's proposal. The Agency cannot show that the disparate rates of pay established thereby are any more "essential" than the difference in rates of pay for unit employees which would result from the Union's proposal.

In its initial decision the Authority held that a compelling need existed for uniformity in the Agency's pay-setting system, compensating employees on the basis of the same salary rate for positions at the same grade and step. The Authority stated as follows (at 611-12 of the decision):

> The Agency has demonstrated that the need for uniformity in its pay system is an integral aspect of the Agency's stated objective of pay equity. The Agency's need for uniformity is thus not one of mere administrative convenience, as our colleague suggests in dissent. In this regard, the Agency has shown that in the pay setting area, under the circumstances presented, lack of uniformity would result in pay inequity which in turn would result in disruption inimical to the accomplishment of the Agency's mission and execution of its functions in a manner consistent with an effective and efficient government. Thus, in the circumstances in this case, we are persuaded that there is an overriding need for a uniform pay setting system throughout the Agency in order to operate effectively and efficiently to accomplish its mission. [Footnotes omitted and emphasis added.]

In reaching its finding of compelling need the Authority addressed both uniformity as to amount, i.e., that employees at the same grade and step receive the same salary, and uniformity of pay-setting method, i.e., that all employees would be paid on the basis of the same system of computing salary rates. The Authority did not distinguish between these two different aspects of uniformity because, under the facts presented at that time, the method of computing employee salaries resulted in uniform salary rates. However, as the Union argues, the Agency's pay-setting system as modified in the August 20, 1984 resolution no longer provides uniform salary rates for employees at the same grade and step. Thus, the issue now before the Authority is whether the Agency has shown that it nevertheless has preserved in its pay-setting system a uniformity of method which is essential to the accomplishment of its mission.[11]

[11] The Authority notes that employees' basic salary is still determined by grade and step. Pursuant to the August 20, 1984 resolution, employees' total salary is determined by a combination of that method with the method used to determine the applicable cost-of-living adjustment.

While the August 20, 1984 resolution modifies the Agency's salary structure by adding a cost-of-living adjustment, the system of determining employee salaries remains uniform. The same method or formula for computing relative cost-of-living in areas where Agency offices are located is applied to all employees of the Agency.[12] As the Agency notes, the cost-of-living adjustment modification of its salary structure enhances its ability to maintain pay equity among its employees by eliminating regional cost differentials and thereby equalizing employee "buying power."[13] In so doing, the Agency increases the efficiency and effectiveness of its accomplishment of its mission by facilitating the movement of employees within its regional offices and by making its salaries more competitive with other employers in higher cost areas.[14] The Union's proposal, on the other hand, would establish a method of computing the cost-of-living adjustment for unit employees in the Washington headquarters office which is different from that established for non-unit employees in the headquarters and 14 other regional locations by the Agency's August 20, 1984 resolution,[15] namely, it would adopt the recommendations of the President's Pay Council.[16] Such different treatment of those employees who happen to be in the unit nullifies the Agency's objective of equalizing employee "buying power" throughout the Agency and, consequently, undermines the incentives for employees to move. The only way by which the Agency can insure its ability to accomplish its objective of equitable treatment of its employees is to maintain a uniform pay-setting system. The Authority disagrees with the Union's argument that the Agency has not shown that the pay-setting system set forth in the August 20, 1984 resolution is the only way to achieve those objectives.17/ Any pay-setting system which involves different methods of calculating the salaries of similar groups of employees, as would be the case if the Union's proposal were ultimately to be adopted, could produce inherently inequitable results by treating similarly situated groups of employees differently.

C. Management's Right to Determine Its Budget

The Agency also argued in this case that Union Proposal 5 is outside the duty to bargain under the Statute because it directly interferes with management's right to determine its budget under section 7106(a)(1).18/ However, the Agency has not demonstrated that implementation of the Union's proposal would directly interfere with management's right to determine its budget under the test set forth in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604 (1980), enforced as to other matters sub nom. Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 995 (1982). It is clear from the record in this case that Union Proposal 5 does not prescribe a particular program or operation which must be included in the Agency's budget. Rather, it concerns an already existing item, employee salaries. Moreover, the proposal does not prescribe the amount to be allocated to that item. It simply establishes a formula for adjusting employee salaries. There is no showing that the proposal directly interferes with the Agency's right to determine its

> § 7106. Management rights

> (a) Subject to subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this chapter shall affect the authority of any management official of any agency--

budget. Further, the Agency has not demonstrated that implementation of the Union's proposal would result in a significant and unavoidable increase in costs. The Agency has presented no evidence as to the cost impact of the Union's proposal compared with the costs of the system, including the regional differential, adopted by the Agency. It has not been shown that the alleged increase in costs is not outweighed by compensating benefits. Union Proposal 5 does not directly interfere with management's right to determine its budget under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute.

IV. Conclusion

The Authority finds that the Agency's August 20, 1984 resolution, modifying the Agency's pay-setting system by providing for regional cost-of-living adjustments, maintains a uniform formula for calculating the salary of employees of the Agency. Such action is essential to the accomplishment of the Agency's mission and execution of its functions in a manner consistent with an effective and efficient government. The Authority finds that Union Proposal 5 conflicts with an Agency resolution for which a compelling need exists. The Authority reaffirms its decision that the proposal is outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(2) of the Statute and section 2424.11(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

APPENDIX

I. PROPOSAL

A combination of factors is likely to result in a significant number of Corporation employees moving over time from generally lower-cost areas to higher-cost urban centers. These factors are mainly the regional realignment itself and our changing regulatory focus on large and problem banks regardless of their charter source. To minimize the financial hardships associated with relocating into higher-cost areas, to mitigate employee concern with the phase-out of six Regional Offices, and to make our salary structure more equitable for all personnel and the Corporation more competitive with other employers in high cost locations, we recommend adoption of a salary cost-of-living differential.

A summary schedule is attached which presents an index of adjustments that would be necessary to make more equitable the incomes of employees in high-cost locations throughout the country and those who work in standard or low-cost areas. Five alternatives are shown, ranging from paying full COLA to maximum adjustments of 10%, 7.5%, 5% and 2.5% of current salaries. Either the full living cost adjustment or the cap at 10% would go a long way toward alleviating the present inequities. However, we favor the full COLA option and feel its higher cost will be well justified.

II. JUSTIFICATION

As noted, we believe a mechanism is needed to adjust employee salaries for the significant differences that exist in various locations across the country in terms of housing, taxation, transportation, goods and services and other expense elements. This will therefore be an important benefit for the significant number of Corporation employees now living in high cost areas, and will also be helpful as we implement the regional restructuring plan and relocate significant numbers of personnel.

We contracted with Runzheimer and Company, Inc., to undertake a comprehensive analysis of living cost differences in 135 field locations. These locations represent DBS field offices and major Liquidation sites. Based on the firm's report, we believe we now have a supportable index and comprehensive cost profiles for each of the selected sites and therefore have a sound basis for instituting regional pay differentials.

The adjustment percentages shown in the attached summary schedule represent cost-of-living differences with "Standard City", an arithmetic mean of living cost standards in 100 representative cities. These percentages can be adjusted each year.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(D) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the underscored portion of the following Union proposal.

> Annual ratings are effective as of the date approved and remain the employee's current official rating for one year or until replaced by another rating or an entrance rating. An entrance rating is an automatic official rating of Fully Successful, as a minimum, unless an Exceptional or Highly Successful rating has been given within the last 12 months, in which case, that rating will be the entrance rating for one year from its effective date; provided the employee has not changed career fields.

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal conflicts with an internal agency regulation which provides that an employee's entrance rating when changing positions will be "Fully Successful." It claims that a compelling need exists for this regulation because it (1) implements in an essentially nondiscretionary manner the mandate of a Government-wide regulation and (2) is essential to the maintenance of basic merit principles. It argues that the proposal is, therefore, outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(2) of the Statute.

The Union contends that the Agency has not demonstrated a compelling need for its regulation.

III. Analysis and Conclusion

The Union's proposal provides that an employee whose past performance warranted an "Exceptional" or "Highly Successful" rating would retain that rating for one year and would receive the same rating as an entrance rating when changing positions during that year. The proposal conflicts with Army Regulation 690-400, Chapter 430 which provides that an employee's entrance rating is an automatic official rating of "Fully Successful." However, an agency regulation does not bar negotiation on a conflicting union proposal unless the agency demonstrates that its regulation is supported by a compelling need. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1928 and Department of the Navy, Naval Air Development Center, Warminster, Pennsylvania, 2 FLRA 450, 454 (1980).

The Agency first contends that there is a compelling need for its regulation under the illustrative standard for determining whether a compelling need exists as set forth in section 2424.11(c) of the Authority's Rules. It claims that a Department-wide performance appraisal system which results in consistent ratings throughout the Agency is required to implement the requirement of 5 CFR 351.201(c).[1] That provision states that 5 CFR Part 351 must be "uniformly and consistently applied in any one reduction in force [RIF]." The Agency argues that the Union's proposal would result in employees in different bargaining units who had performed equally well receiving different entrance ratings and, consequently, different service credit in the event of a RIF.[2]

[1] All references in this decision to the Office of Personnel Management's regulations concerning reductions-in-force (RIF) in 5 CFR Part 351 are to the revised regulations published at 51 Fed. Reg. 318-326 (1986) which became effective February 3, 1986 (hereinafter referred to as the RIF regulations).

Both the Union proposal and the agency regulation do not specifically concern the amount of service credit which an employee will receive under OPM regulation. Rather, the proposal and the agency's regulation each establish an entrance rating which would serve as the basis for determining the service credit to which an employee would be entitled. The Agency has not shown that the only way it could apply section 351.504(d) in a uniform and consistent manner is by giving all employees an entrance rating of "Fully Successful." It has not demonstrated that the Union's proposal would prevent it from crediting all employees with similar ratings with the same amount of service credit as required under section 351.504(d).

Moreover, the Agency would be required to replace its current regulation with one similar to the Union's proposal under the new OPM Performance Management System regulations effective April 10, 1986. 51 Fed. Reg. 8396-8421 (1986). The new regulations require all agencies to transfer an employee's current performance rating of record to the employee's new job when an employee moves to a new position between performance appraisals. See 5 CFR 430.206(f) and 293.405(a). To the same effect, the Federal Personnel Manual chapter implementing the RIF regulations provides that "[r]egardless of whether the employee's service occurred in one or more agencies," the additional service credit an employee receives in a RIF should be based on "the employee's actual ratings." Interim FPM chapter 351 section 3-9(d)(3) (transmitted March 4, 1986 by FPM Letter 351-20).

> (d) The additional service credit an employee receives for performance under this subpart shall be expressed in additional years of service and shall consist of the mathematical average (rounded in the case of a fraction to the next higher whole number) of the employee's last three (actual and/or assumed) annual performance ratings of record computed on the following basis:
> (1) Twenty additional years of service for each performance rating of outstanding (Level 5) or equivalent;
> (2) Sixteen additional years of service for each performance rating of exceeds fully successful (Level 4) or equivalent; or
> (3) Twelve additional years of service for each performance rating of fully successful (Level 3) or equivalent.

Additionally, the Agency has not provided support in the record for its contention that the proposal, which applies only to employees in the Kansas City District bargaining unit, would require it to treat employees in a single competitive area inconsistently in the event of a RIF. In this connection, the Agency does not claim that the competitive area encompassing the Kansas City District bargaining unit also includes positions and employees who are not within the bargaining unit. See National Treasury Employees Union and Department of Health and Human Services, Region IV, 11 FLRA 254 (1983), in which the Authority made no determination as to whether Union Proposal 1 concerning competitive areas applied to non-bargaining unit employees because the agency's sole contention was that the proposal conflicted with a regulation for which a compelling need existed.

The Agency also contends that its regulation satisfies the standard for compelling need set forth in section 2424.11(b) of the Authority's Rules because it is essential to the maintenance of basic merit principles mandating fair and equitable treatment for employees set forth at 5 U.S.C. §2301(b)(2) and (6). However, the Agency's contentions amount to nothing more than a reassertion of its argument concerning additional service credit based on performance disposed of above.

The Authority finds that the Agency has failed to demonstrate that its regulation is supported by a compelling need. Therefore, the regulation does not bar negotiation on the Union proposal and the proposal is within the duty to bargain.3/

The case is before the Authority on a request for reconsideration filed by the Union on February 25, 1986, seeking reconsideration of the Authority's Order of December 9, 1985, dismissing the Union's exceptions (20 FLRA No. 100 (1985)). For the reasons set forth below, the Union's request must be denied.

The Authority dismissed the Union's exceptions to the arbitrator's award on the basis that such exceptions were untimely. The Authority found that the arbitrator's award was dated October 3, 1985, and pursuant to section 7122(b) of the Statute, as amended, 1/ and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, as amended, 2/ which amendments are applicable to exceptions filed on or after March 2, 1984, and under sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, which are also applicable to computation of time limit here involved, the exceptions had to be filed in the national office of the Authority not later than the close of business on November 6, 1985.

1/ Section 7122(b) of the Statute was amended by the Civil Service Miscellaneous Amendments Act of 1983 (Pub. L. No. 98-224, § 4, 98 Stat. 47, 48 (1984)) to provide that the 30-day period for filing exceptions to an arbitrator's award begins on the date the award is served on the filing party.

However, the exceptions were not filed with the Authority at its national office until November 20, 1985, after having been mistakenly mailed to the Authority's Dallas Regional Office where it was received on November 19, 1985, and immediately forwarded.

In its request for reconsideration, which the Union recognizes is untimely filed under section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations,[3] it requests a waiver of both the time limit for filing a request for reconsideration and the time limit for filing the original exceptions to the arbitration award on the basis of the unique mailing problems that exist between Panama and the United States. The Union asserts in this regard that (1) it did not receive the Authority's December 9, 1985, Order Dismissing Exceptions until December 31, 1985, and (2) it had filed all previous exceptions with the Dallas Regional Office and those in this case were mailed with sufficient time for the Dallas Regional Office to forward its exceptions to the national office of the Authority.

With respect to the untimely request for reconsideration, section 2429.23(b) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides, in pertinent part, that "Except as provided in paragraph (d) of this section, the Authority ... may waive any expired time limit ... in extraordinary circumstances." While recognizing that mail delivery between Panama and the United States presents unique problems for a party meeting the filing requirements and such problems may, in appropriate circumstances, provide "extraordinary circumstances" for waiving an expired time limit, such circumstances are not present here. 4/ In this regard, it is noted particularly that the Union acknowledges receipt of the Authority's Order of December 9, 1985 on December 31, 1985, but did not file its request for reconsideration until February 25, 1986.5/

[3] Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides that a party to the proceeding before the Authority who can establish in its moving papers extraordinary circumstances for so doing, may file a motion for reconsideration of a final decision or order of the Authority within ten (10) days after service of such decision or order. Therefore, under section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, and sections 2429.21 and 2429.22, which are also applicable to the computation of the time limit here involved, the Union's request for reconsideration was due in the national office of the Authority before the close of business on December 24, 1985. However, the Union's request was not filed until February 25, 1986.

4/ The Authority is not unmindful of the unique problems experienced by parties making filings from outside of the continental United States and it is the Authority's practice consistent with the provisions of the Statute and section 2429.23 of the regulations to grant extensions of time where good cause is shown and to waive expired time limits in extraordinary circumstances.

5/ While it is concluded that the request for reconsideration must be dismissed as untimely, it is noted that even if timely, no basis exists for granting the Union's request that the time limit for filing the original exceptions to the arbitrator's award be waived. Section 2429.23(d) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides, in pertinent part, that the time limits established in 5 U.S.C. 7122(b) "may not be extended or waived ...." Section 7122(b) of the Statute establishes the 30 day time period for filing exceptions to an arbitrator's award. As described above, the exceptions had to be filed in the National Office not later than close of business on November 6, 1985. Although the exceptions were mailed by the Union through the Air Force APO mail system on November 2, 1985, they were not received by the Dallas Regional Office until November 19, 1985, (possibly being delayed by the fact that they were addressed to the former address of the Regional Office). Consequently, they were not filed with the National Office until November 20, 1985. While the Union did mail the exceptions on November 2, 1985, presumably in sufficient time to be timely received if properly addressed, exceptions to an arbitrator's award cannot be filed at a Regional Office. Since the inception of the Authority in 1979, applicable regulations have required that exceptions to arbitration awards filed with the Authority be filed at the National Office.

Accordingly, as the Union's request for reconsideration does not present extraordinary circumstances warranting waiver of the time limit for filing such request, it must be denied.

For the Authority.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Robert J. Ables filed by the Department of the Navy (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance alleged that the Activity denied the grievant the opportunity to work overtime on an asbestos rip-out project because she was absent on sick leave on the day the overtime assignments were made. The grievance also alleged that during later changes in the overtime assignments made after the grievant had returned to work a less qualified employee was chosen instead of the grievant. The Arbitrator found that the Activity violated pertinent provisions of the parties' collective bargaining agreement when it failed to select the grievant for the overtime assignment and ruled that "the grievant should have been assigned or, at least, been requested to perform overtime work on the second shift." He sustained the grievance and as a remedy ordered the Activity to pay the grievant as though she had worked 12 hours of overtime.

III. EXCEPTION

As its exception, the Agency contends that the award is contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596, because the Arbitrator failed to find that the grievant would have worked 12 hours of overtime but for the violation of the agreement.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSION

In order for an award of backpay to be authorized by the Back Pay Act, the arbitrator must determine that the aggrieved employee was affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action, that the personnel action directly resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of the grievant's pay, allowances or differentials, and that but for such action, the grievant otherwise would not have suffered the withdrawal or reduction. U.S. Army Aberdeen Proving Ground and Local 2424, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO, 19 FLRA No. 35 (1985). In this case, the Arbitrator determined that the Activity violated the parties' agreement by denying the grievant overtime. However, he did not find specifically that but for the Activity's violation of the parties' agreement, the grievant would have performed the overtime work and received overtime pay. That is, the Arbitrator's finding that the grievant should have been assigned or should have been requested to perform the overtime does not constitute the requisite finding that she would have performed the work. Consequently, the award of retroactive overtime pay to the grievant is contrary to the Back Pay Act. See Jefferson Barracks National Cemetery, St. Louis, Missouri and National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-116, 13 FLRA 703 (1984).

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Arbitrator's award is set aside.

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Barbara Fausner Tener filed on behalf of the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

In her award the Arbitrator found that the Agency had removed the grievant from the Federal service for just cause and denied the grievance.

III. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSION

The Authority has determined that it is without jurisdiction to review the Union's exceptions. Section 7122(a) of the Statute provides, in pertinent part:

> Either party to arbitration under this chapter may file with the Authority an exception to any arbitrator's award pursuant to the arbitration (other than an award relating to a matter described in section 7121(f) of this title).

As relevant to this case, the matters described in section 7121(f) of the Statute include adverse actions under 5 U.S.C. § 7512, such as removal actions. Review of an arbitration award relating to such matters must be obtained in accordance with 5 U.S.C. § 7703, i.e., in the same manner and under the same conditions as if the matter involved had been decided by the Merit Systems Protection Board. E.g., Veterans Administration Medical Center, New York, N.Y. and Local No. 2094, American Federation of Government Employees, 7 FLRA 788 (1982).

Since the Arbitrator's award relates to a matter covered by 5 U.S.C. § 7512, i.e., the removal of the grievant, under section 7122(a) of the Statute, exceptions to the award may not be filed with the Authority. Consequently, the Authority is without jurisdiction to review the exceptions.

IV. DECISION

Accordingly, for that reason and apart from other considerations, the Union's exceptions are dismissed.

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Jean Wilcox filed by the Union pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance in this case concerned the conduct of the grievant which resulted in her being reprimanded and then removed. In her award the Arbitrator found that the reprimand and the removal of the grievant were in accordance with applicable law and regulation and the collective bargaining agreement.

III. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority has determined that it is without jurisdiction to review the Union's exceptions. Section 7122(a) of the Statute pertinently provides:

> Either party to arbitration under this chapter may file with the Authority an exception to any arbitrator's award pursuant to the arbitration (other than > an award relating to a matter described in section 7121(f) of this title).

As relevant to this case, the matters described in section 7121(f) of the Statute include adverse actions under 5 U.S.C. § 7512, such as removal actions. Review of an arbitration award relating to such matters must be obtained in accordance with 5 U.S.C. § 7703, i.e., in the same manner and under the same conditions as if the matter involved had been decided by the Merit Systems Protection Board.

Because the Arbitrator's award relates to a matter covered by 5 U.S.C. § 7512, i.e., the removal of the grievant, under section 7122(a) of the Statute, exceptions to the award may not be filed with the Authority. Consequently, the Authority is without jurisdiction to review the exceptions.

IV. DECISION

Accordingly, for these reasons and apart from other considerations, the Union's exceptions are dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of two Union proposals.

II. Union Proposal 1

Article 12, Section 7: Change to read:

> a. When the specific position, in an activity, from which an individual has been removed or demoted through reduction in force (RIF) is vacant and is being filled, the individual who was removed or demoted will be returned to the position and/or grade noncompetitively subject to paragraph b, below.
> b. A basis for an individual not to be returned to his former position and/or grade, noncompetitively is an unsatisfactory performance rating which is documented in the individual's OPF, at the time the position concerned becomes vacant, or documentation that the individual's work either before or after the action by reduction in force, was not at an acceptable level of competence.

c. If more than one individual meets the criteria contained in a and b above, the employee who possessed the highest retention standing at the time of the RIF action will be returned to the concerned position and/or grade prior to others listed on the retention register.

d. All individuals previously affected in a RIF without personal cause, misconduct, or inefficiency, will receive special consideration for being returned to their former position and/or grade.

NOTE: FOR THIS SECTION THE TERM [sic] "FORMER POSITION" and "CONCERNED POSITION" INCLUDES BUT IS NOT LIMITED TO THE ACTIVITY THE INDIVIDUAL WAS EMPLOYED AT, AT THE TIME OF THE RIF.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency alleges that the proposal is nonnegotiable because it interferes with management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(C) to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source. The Agency also alleges that the proposal violates management's right to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) by requiring the reassignment of demoted employees. The Union argues, citing the decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 702 F.2d 1183 (D.C. Cir. 1983), reversing and remanding American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 and Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 91 (1981), that the provision constitutes an "appropriate arrangement" within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management's rights.

B. Analysis

Union Proposal 1 in this case, which provides reemployment or repromotion rights for persons removed or demoted in a reduction-in-force (RIF), is comparable to Provision 2 at issue in National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986).

The proposal in this case, like Provision 2 in that case, would apply only when management decides to fill positions from which employees have been removed or demoted in a RIF. Similarly, it would only require management to reemploy or promote employees who were qualified for and had previously performed acceptably in the position being filled. Union Proposal 1, therefore, does not impose any greater burden on management or provide any greater benefit for employees than the provision in Kansas Army National Guard. As with the provision at issue in Kansas Army National Guard, the burden on management in these circumstances is insubstantial in comparison to the detriment originally suffered, and the benefit later obtained, by the affected employees.

C. Conclusion

Consistent with our reasoning in Kansas Army National Guard, we hold that Union Proposal 1 does not excessively interfere with management's right, under section 7106(a)(2)(C), to fill vacant positions by making selections from any appropriate source and that it is an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3). We note that while the Kansas Army National Guard case involved only repromotion rights, and this case involves repromotion and reemployment rights, it does not appear, nor do the parties argue, that there is any material difference in those rights so as to affect the outcome in this case.

We further conclude that Union Proposal 1 does not excessively interfere with management's right to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A). Even if the Agency's argument that reemployment and repromotion are "assignments" within the meaning of section 7106(a)(2)(A) were credited, there would not be any different or additional substantive effect on management's rights or on management's practical needs. Therefore, we find that by designating the particular employee to be reemployed or repromoted, that is, "reassigned," the proposal would not excessively interfere with management's right to assign employees.

III. Union Proposal 2

Article 13: Add the following note:

> NOTE: Provisions of Article 12, Section 7, [Union Proposal 1, supra] of this agreement will take precedent [sic] over this article.

A. Positions of the Parties

As explained by the parties, Union Proposal 2 requires the Agency to abide by Article 12, Section 7, in any situation where that provision conflicts with the Agency's RIF regulations which are cited in Article 13. The Agency contends that, by making Union Proposal 1 applicable in RIF situations, Union Proposal 2 is nonnegotiable for the same reasons it alleges Union Proposal 1 is nonnegotiable. In addition, the Agency argues that Union Proposal 1 could not, as required by Union Proposal 2, take precedence over Article 13 because the latter incorporates Technician Personnel Regulation (TPR) 300 (351), an Agency regulation for which the Authority has found a compelling need to exist. The Union contends that if Union Proposal 1 is negotiable, Union Proposal 2, which depends upon it, is also negotiable.

B. Analysis

Because it would also give force to Article 12, Section 7 (Union Proposal 1 in this case), the proposal presents issues as to management rights which are identical to those addressed in the discussion of Union Proposal 1. For the reasons set forth above we find that this proposal does not excessively interfere with management's rights under the Statute.

The Agency further argues that by giving Article 12, Section 7, priority over Article 13, Union Proposal 2 conflicts with an Agency regulation, Technician Personnel Regulation (TPR) 300 (351), for which a compelling need exists. The Agency cites certain Authority decisions in support of its argument.[1] Those decisions, however, held that there was a compelling need only for that part of the cited regulation which requires civilian technician RIF retention standing to be based on each employee's civilian and military appraisals. These decisions stand for the limited proposition that that part of the regulation constituted a bar to proposals insofar as they would have eliminated the military appraisal as a factor in determining technician retention standing. The Agency does not claim, or refer to any other decision in which the Authority has found, that a compelling need exists for any other portion of that regulation. Thus it appears that the Agency is only arguing that Union Proposal 2 conflicts with the part of its RIF regulations which prescribe the criteria for determining an employee's retention standing.

[1] The Agency cites American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2953 and National Guard Bureau, Office of the Adjutant General, Nebraska, 7 FLRA 87 (1981), affirmed American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2953 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 730 F.2d 1534 (D.C. Cir. 1984); Association of Civilian Technicians, Montana Air Chapter and Department of the Air Force, Montana Air National Guard, Headquarters 120th Fighter Interceptor Group (ADTAC), 11 FLRA 585 (1983), affirmed as to these matters and reversed and remanded as to other matters sub nom. Association of Civilian Technicians, Montana Air Chapter v. Federal Labor Relations Authority,

The Agency's argument, however, overlooks the fact that the proposal requires the selection of the employee with the highest retention standing and that the standing would be determined in accordance with the Agency's regulations. That is, the proposal by its express terms must be applied consistent with precisely that part of its regulations on which the Agency relies to bar negotiation.

C. Conclusion

Since the Agency has not demonstrated any conflict between the proposal and the cited Agency regulation, that regulation does not constitute a bar to negotiation of Union Proposal 2. Union Proposal 2, therefore, constitutes a negotiable appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) and is within the Agency's duty to bargain under the Statute.

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the

Where an authorized representative of the Union possessed at least apparent authority to bind the Union, and he negotiated and reached an agreement with the agency concerning overtime distribution and compensatory leave, the union must sign the written memorandum of understanding embodying the agreed upon terms. The Union failed to prove that the agency had any prior knowledge that there were restrictions on the union representative's authority. The Authority concluded, in agreement with the Judge, that by ordering its agent to refuse to execute the negotiated agreement concerning overtime distribution and compensatory leave and by continuing to refuse to execute that agreement, the union violated § 7116(b)(5).

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority adopted the Judge's decision that the Union violated § 7116(b)(1) and (8) when it refused to proceed to arbitration concerning three grievances filed by the agency. Once arbitration is invoked by one party to a collective bargaining agreement, the other party is obligated to proceed to, and participate in, the requested arbitration proceedings. A failure of a party to so participate, is violative of § 7121 and constitutes an unfair labor practice. The Judge concluded that although the union asserted that the 1983 agreement was "null and void " and, therefore, it would only honor grievances under the prior 1979 agreement, the union was required to proceed to arbitration under the parties' prior 1979 agreement which contained a similar grievance and arbitration procedures as the 1983 agreement. Thus, by failing or refusing to proceed to arbitration pursuant to the grievance and arbitration provisions of either collective bargaining agreement, the union failed to comply with § 7121.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is negotiable that requires the agency to conduct a cost study to determine whether instituting a furlough or retraining program for affected employees would be less costly than conducting a RIF. Also the proposal provides a suggested furlough schedule as part of the cost study by which management would calculate the cost savings of temporarily laying off employees according to their GS grade. The proposal requires management to consider certain alternative courses of action, without placing any obligation on the agency to adopt any of the specified actions in lieu of a RIF. Accordingly, the proposal is not inconsistent with management rights under § 7106(a) and (b) and is an appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3). (proposal 1)

A proposal is negotiable which requires the agency, when conducting cost studies concerning a possible RIF, to calculate the cost savings of furloughing wage grade and printing employees in the same manner as specified GS employees. The proposal does not concern the classification of a position within the meaning of § 7103(a)(14)(B) and therefore is not excluded from the definition of a condition of employment. (proposal 2)

The time limits for filing a negotiability appeal under § 2424.3 of the Authority's rules and regulations runs from the date an agency's allegation is served in writing upon a union rather than, as the agency alleged, when it orally stated to the union that the proposal was nonnegotiable.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority adopted the Judge's decision that the Agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when it unilaterally changed a practice of issuing blackjacks to detention officers without bargaining over the impact and implementation of its decision to discontinue the past practice. The Authority found, as did the Judge, that the change had more than de minimis impact on unit employees' conditions of employment. The Agency, therefore, was obligated to notify the Union and afford it an opportunity to bargain over the procedures to be observed in implementing such change and appropriate arrangements for unit employees adversely affected by its decision to change the practice of issuing blackjacks.

The Authority, contrary to the Judge, concluded that since the laws of the State of New York were not applicable to the employees in this case, there was not a basis to conclude that a status quo ante remedy was unlawful. The Authority found that a status quo ante remedy was warranted in the circumstances of this case where no notice or bargaining opportunity was afforded the Union concerning the change; the agency refused the union's request for negotiations after implementation of the change; other detention officers retained possession of their previously issued blackjacks; and there was no indication in the record that the Respondent's operations would have been disrupted by reinstating the past practice of issuing blackjacks.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions filed to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The complaint before the Judge alleged that the National Council of Social Security Administration Field Operations Locals - Council 220, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (the Union) violated section 7116(b)(5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by refusing to execute a negotiated agreement concerning overtime distribution and compensatory leave. The Judge found that the Union had engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, in violation of the Statute, and recommended that the Authority issue an appropriate order directing the Union to cease and desist from these unfair labor practices.

II. Background Facts

As the result of negotiations between the Union and the Agency (the Charging Party), concerning overtime distribution and compensatory leave, the parties reached an agreement. However, when the agency presented the agreement for signature to Thomas Biggar, the Union's Acting Regional Vice President, with whom it had been negotiating, Biggar refused to sign the agreement, stating that he was under a direct order not to sign. The agency then filed the unfair labor practice charge that led to this complaint.

III. Positions of the Parties

At the hearing the General Counsel argued that the Union negotiator, Biggar, had the apparent authority to bind the Union and that, if he was restricted in any way in this regard, the Union had failed to meet the burden of proving that the agency was aware of any such restrictions.

In its exceptions, the Union argues, as it did before the Judge, that the agency had the burden of explicitly confirming with higher Union officials the exact nature of Union negotiator Biggar's authority to bind the Union to an agreement. If the agency had sought such confirmation, it argues, the agency would then have known that Biggar's authority was in fact limited. From this, it contends that the Judge was incorrect in finding that the Union should be bound by Biggar's actions.

IV. Analysis

In his decision, the Judge held that Union negotiator Biggar possessed at least apparent authority to bind the Union and that the Union failed to meet the burden of proving otherwise. We agree with the Judge's conclusion that, as an authorized representative of the Respondent Union negotiated and reached agreement, the Union must be required to sign the written memorandum of understanding embodying the agreed upon terms. However, we find it unnecessary to pass upon, and specifically do not adopt, the Judge's statement with regard to whether, or in what forum, the memorandum's enforceability may be challenged as potentially conflicting with the terms of the parties' national collective bargaining agreement.

V. Conclusion

The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions to that Decision, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings,[1] conclusions, and recommended Order as modified.[2] Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. We therefore conclude that the Respondent has violated section 7116(b)(5) of the Statute by ordering its agent to refuse to execute a negotiated agreement concerning overtime distribution and compensatory leave and by continuing to refuse to execute that agreement.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the National Council of Social Security Administration Field Operations Locals - Council 220, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, shall:

---

[1] The Respondent in essence excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Judge. The demeanor of witnesses is a factor of consequence in resolving issues of credibility, and the Judge has had the advantage of observing the witnesses while they testified. The Authority will not overrule a Judge's resolution with respect to credibility unless a clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence demonstrates that such resolution was incorrect. The Authority has examined the record carefully, and finds no basis for reversing the Judge's credibility findings.

[2] The Judge's recommended Order has been modified for consistency with remedial orders previously issued where substantially identical violations of the Statute have been found. See, e.g., American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3732, 16 FLRA 318 (1984).

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to bargain in good faith with Region III, Social Security Administration, by withdrawing its delegation of authority to its agent, Biggar, by ordering him not to sign, and by refusing to sign the January 21, 1985 written memorandum of understanding embodying terms and conditions of employment concerning overtime distribution and compensatory leave on which full agreement had been reached.

(b) In any like or related manner failing to bargain in good faith with Region III, Social Security Administration.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request, sign the January 21, 1985 memorandum of understanding reached with Region III, Social Security Administration, which embodies terms and conditions of employment concerning overtime distribution and compensatory leave on which full agreement had been reached.

(b) Post at its business offices and normal meeting places, including all places where notices to members and to employees of Region III, Social Security Administration, are customarily posted, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the Regional Vice President of the National Council of Social Security Administration Field Operations Locals - Council 220, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to members and other employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Submit appropriate signed copies of such Notice to the Regional Commissioner, Region III, Social Security Administration, for posting in conspicuous places where unit employees are located, where they should be maintained for a period of 60 consecutive days from the date of posting.

(d) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region II, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. Section 7101 et seq. and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder.

Pursuant to an amended charge first filed on February 26, 1985, by Rose M. LePore, Regional Commissioner, Region III, Social Security Administration, (hereinafter called the Charging Party or SSA), a Complaint and Notice of Hearing was issued on April 29, 1985, by the Regional Director for Region II, Federal Labor Relations Authority, New York, New York. The Complaint alleges that the National Council of Social Security Administration Field Operations Locals - Council 220, American Federation of Government Employees, (hereinafter called the Union or Respondent), violated Section 7116(b)(5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, (hereinafter called the Statute), by virtue of its actions in refusing to execute a negotiated agreement concerning overtime distribution and compensatory leave.

A hearing was held in the captioned matter on June 10, 1985, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. All parties were afforded the full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witness, and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved herein. The General Counsel and the Respondent submitted post-hearing briefs on July 25, 1985, which have been duly considered.

Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witness and his demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions, and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

The American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (AFGE), is the exclusive representative of a consolidated nationwide unit of certain employees of the Social Security Administration, including among others, all employees employed in the District and Branch offices of the Social Security Administration in the States of Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia, West Virginian and Washington, D.C.[1] The aforementioned District and Branch offices of the Social Security Administration fall within the jurisdiction of Region III and are under the supervision of Regional Commissioner Ms. Rose LePore. Council 220, the Respondent herein, is the AFGE representative for Region III. Thomas Wachter is the Regional Vice President for Council 220 and empowered to negotiate and execute agreements on behalf of Council 220. He also has the power to delegate his responsibilities in the area of negotiations such as grievances to other Union representatives.

Mr. Michael Gutkind, Regional Labor Relations Specialist, represents SSA Region III in labor relations matters at the local, area and regional levels. In his capacity as the Regional Labor Relations Specialist he has successfully negotiated agreements at all levels, i.e. local, area and regional wide, with Mr. Wachter's designees that have been signed by the Respondent Union. Although the Respondent Union had a policy of having any agreement negotiated by Mr. Wachter's designees reviewed by Mr. Wachter or Ms. Jill Hastings, a Regional Vice President designee, prior to execution,[2] Mr. Gutkind was never advised of this policy.

[2] In her position as a Regional Vice President designee, Ms. Hastings handles various matters and/or assignments from Mr. Wachter.

On August 6, 1984, Mr. Wachter designated Mr. Thomas Biggar, a Regional Vice President and also a Local president, to represent the Respondent Union on a grievance concerning the assignment of overtime. At this time Mr. Biggar had already been designated the Union's representative on another grievance concerning the awarding of compensatory time for overtime worked. There was also a third grievance pending concerning overtime which had been assigned to another representative or designee. The grievances concerned the way volunteers were selected for overtime and the awarding of compensatory time in lieu of wages.

SSA Region III was of the opinion that the grievances had some merit as there appeared to be a difference in the various offices of SSA concerning the criteria to be utilized in selecting individuals for overtime and the awarding of compensatory time for overtime worked. Thus it appears that some offices would not allow employees to work overtime if they had used annual leave during the pay period when overtime work was available. In order to correct the situation the Regional Commissioner decided that a region-wide agreement should be negotiated so that there would be uniformity among all the offices within the Region with respect to the awarding of overtime.

In September 1984, Mr. Gutkind telephone Mr. Biggar, and discussed the grievances that Mr. Biggar had been designated on as the Union representative, informed Mr. Biggar that he was personally speaking for the Regional Commissioner and that she desired to negotiate a settlement which would be Region wide, and that although he, Mr. Biggar, did not represent the Union on the third grievance pending against SSA Region III it would be appreciated if he could coordinate its resolution with the other two grievances on which he had been designated union representative. Mr. Biggar agreed to coordinate the third grievance and agreed to exchange proposals with Mr. Gutkind.[3]

In accordance with their agreement, Mr. Gutkind mailed his proposals to Mr. Biggar on October 19, 1984. Mr. Biggar received the proposals and on November 8, 1984 mailed counterproposals to Mr. Gutkind. Mr. Gutkind considered the counterproposals to be applicable to all three grievances since Mr. Biggar stated in proposal No. (3) as follows:

> 3. The Union agrees to withdraw all requests for individual remedies in the 2 grievances which raised

[3] Mr. Biggar acknowledges a discussion with Mr. Gutkind, but claims that the discussion only involved the two grievances that he had been designated as union representative.

these issues. The Union also agrees to withdraw its arbitration request in 84k14304.[4]

In making his counterproposals Mr. Biggar requested that further negotiations be postponed until he returned from an assigned work detail which ran or was scheduled to run from September 1, 1984 through December 14, 1984. Mr. Gutkind did not pursue the matter until he returned from a two week vacation in early January, 1985.

In early January 1985, Mr. Wachter notified the SSA Region III by telephone that Mr. Biggar would be Acting Regional Vice President of Council 220 because he, Mr. Wachter, was going to be involved for approximately 30 days in negotiations in Baltimore. Mr. Wachter confirmed the delegation in writing by letter dated January 17, 1985. Although Mr. Wachter testified that he had informed Mr. Biggar not to sign any agreement without first contacting Ms. Jill Hastings, he admitted that he had never informed Mr. Gutkind of any a kind of restrictions on Mr. Biggar's authority. The record indicates that Mr. Biggar had on two occasions in the past been designated Acting Regional Vice President.

According to Mr. Gutkind, he telephoned Mr. Biggar in early January and discussed the proposals and the fact that it included all three grievances. Although, Mr. Bigger testified that all his discussions were confined to only two grievances, he did acknowledge that the Agency's proposals would have region-wide impact. Subsequently, Mr. Gutkind and Mr. Biggar, commencing on January 9, 1985, held approximately five or six telephone conversations and discussed the problems each had with the other's proposals.[5] The parties finally reached an agreement on or about January 14, 1985. Mr. Gutkind then prepared a written agreement, had it signed by Commissioner LePore, and mailed it to Mr. Biggar for signature. According to Mr. Biggar, during the negotiations, he on one occasion notified Mr. Gutkind that the agreement was subject to review by Mr. Wachter. Mr. Gutkind denies ever being informed of any limitation on Biggar's authority, and I credit his denial.

Shortly after January 14, 1985, Mr. Wachter spoke with Ms. Hastings and learned that Mr. Biggar was negotiating an agreement which involved more than the grievances on which he had been designated the union representative. Mr. Wachter then telephoned Mr. Biggar and requested all correspondence on the matter.

[4] Mr. Gutkind testified that he understood the reference to the two grievances and one arbitration request to be the three grievances he had discussed earlier in the negotiations with Mr. Biggar. Mr. Biggar testified that his response was only applicable to the two grievances on which he had been designated as the Union representative. The reference to the arbitration request was part of one of the grievances. Mr. Biggar's testimony to this effect is supported by one of the grievances which indeed makes mention of Arbitration No. 84k14304.

[5] At this time Mr. Biggar was Acting Regional Vice President for Council 220.

Ms. Hastings then contacted Mr. Gutkind by telephone on January 16, 1985, and informed him that there would be no regional agreement on the subject of overtime. Mr. Gutkind informed Ms. Hastings that he was dealing with Mr. Bigger on the matter. Mr. Gutkind then telephoned Mr. Biggar and informed him of Ms. Hastings' telephone call. Mr. Biggar apologized and stated that Ms. Hastings was out of line, that he intended to sign the agreement and that he would straighten out the matter.6/

On January 21, 1985, not having received the signed agreement from Mr. Biggar, Mr. Gutkind telephoned Mr. Biggar and inquired about its status. Mr. Biggar informed Mr. Gutkind that he would not sign the agreement without four specified changes. Although Mr. Gutkind insisted that an agreement had already been reached, Mr. Biggar stood fast in his position that further changes would have to be made before he signed the agreement. The telephone conversation ended with Mr. Gutkind agreeing to reconsider the matter. Later that same day, after determining that the changes did not materially change the agreement, Mr. Gutkind telephoned Mr. Biggar and informed him that his suggested changes would be made and that another signed agreement would be mailed to him. Mr. Gutkind then redrafted the agreement, had it signed by Ms. LePore and mailed it out on January 24, 1985.

By letter dated February 4, 1985, Ms. Hastings informed Ms. LePore that the Union would be glad to negotiate an agreement on the assignment of overtime.

On February 12, 1985, Mr. Gutkind telephoned Mr. Biggar and asked where the signed agreement was. Mr. Biggar informed him that he could not sign the agreement because he had received orders from Mr. Wachter forbidding its execution. According, to Mr. Gutkind, Mr. Biggar told him that he had been threatened with a personal law suit and could not discuss the matter further. According, to Mr. Wachter, he did not want the agreement signed because he was of the opinion that it conflicted with the parties national agreement.7/

6/ Mr. Biggar acknowledges the telephone call but claims that he informed Mr. Gutkind that the only person within the Region that had authority to review the agreement was Mr. Wachter.

7/ In this connection Article 10, Section 2 of thee contract provides in pertinent part as follows:

> A. Overtime shall be distributed to bargaining unit employees whose performance is fully satisfactory.

On February 18, 1985, Mr. Biggar wrote a letter to Mr. Gutkind which reads as follows:

> Dear Michael,
> The recent action of the union concerning the agreement we negotiated troubles me. Because of that action I have resigned my regional position. Although I am no longer in a position to make agreements on a regional level and cannot sign the MOU as written, I can make agreements covering Area 6 and am willing to sign the MOU if it is revised to cover Area 6 offices only. I only wish that there was some way I could have signed it for the region because I think it was a good settlement. However faced with a direct order not to sign and the threat of a suit if I did I had no choice.
> Please let me know if the above offer is acceptable. I hope it is but can certainly understand why you might not want to make an agreement for only one area.

Mr. Biggar subsequently resigned his Union position due in part to the Union's action in preventing him from signing the agreement negotiated with Mr. Gutkind.

Mr. Wachter testified that other than submitting a written confirmation of Mr. Biggar's appointment to Acting Regional Vice President, he never discussed with Mr. Gutkind any restriction he had placed on Mr. Biggar's authority to represent the Union.[8]

B. Overtime shall not be distributed or withheld as reward or penalty.

Mr. Witold Skwierczynski, President of the National Council of SSA Field Operation Locals and one of the negotiators of the national collective bargaining agreement, corroborated Mr. Wachter's testimony that the memorandum of understanding conflicts with the terms of the national collective bargaining agreement. He further testified that during negotiations for the national agreement the SSA had attempted to insert restrictions on the distribution of overtime by penalizing employees who had taken sick leave, annual leave or leave without pay during the pay period when overtime leave was available.

[8] In his written notice to the Agency concerning the designation of Mr. Biggar as Acting Regional Vice President, Mr. Wachter merely informed the SSA that he would "continue to handle all pending grievances and arbitration cases for which I am the representative of record." No other restrictions were in the letter.

Discussion and Conclusions

The General Counsel takes the position that the Union violated Section 7116(b)(5) of the Statute by refusing to execute the memorandum of understanding concerning overtime distribution and compensatory leave negotiated by Mr. Gutkind and Mr. Biggar while Mr. Biggar was acting in the capacity as Acting Regional Vice President. In support of his position the General Counsel points out that the Regional Vice President possessed the power to bind the Union. In such circumstances, while there may have been some internal restrictions on Mr. Biggar's designation as Acting Regional Vice President, such restrictions were never conveyed to SSA, Region III. In such circumstances the Union is bound by the memorandum of understanding negotiated by its agent, Mr. Biggar, who it had clothed with the apparent authority possessed by the Regional Vice President in the area of negotiability.

The Respondent Union, on the other hand, takes the position that it was under no obligation to sign the memorandum of understanding since Mr. Gutkind was aware of the fact that any agreement negotiated by Mr. Biggar was subject to approval of Mr. Wachter. In support of its position it relies on the testimony of Mr. Biggar and points out, that in any event, Mr. Gutkind should have sought clarification of Mr. Biggar's bargaining authority following the telephone call from Ms. Hastings. Additionally, the Union argues that it should be excused from executing the memorandum of understanding because it conflicts with the terms of the national agreement between the parties.

Section 7114(b)(5) of the Statute provides that "the duty of an agency and an exclusive representative to negotiate in good faith . . . shall include the obligation if an agreement is reached, to execute on the request of any party to the negotiation a written document embodying the agreed terms. . . ." Failure of a union to so execute an agreement embodying agreed terms of employment is violative of Section 7116(b)(5) of the Statute. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3732 and Department of Transportation, Maritime Administration, U.S. Merchant Marine Academy, Kings Point, N.Y., 16 FLRA No. 50.

Respondent Union does not appear to be arguing with the above conclusions concerning the state of the law, but rather takes the position that although agreement had been reached between Mr. Gutkind and Mr. Biggar on the memorandum of understanding dealing with the distribution of overtime, etc., the agreement was subject to the approval of Mr. Wachter.

However, in order to sustain such position, it is incumbent upon the Respondent Union to prove that SSA, Region III had prior knowledge of the restrictions placed on Mr. Biggar, who by virtue of his position as Acting Regional Vice President had apparent authority to conclude an agreement. In this context, Mr. Wachter admits that any internal restrictions on Mr. Biggar's authority to enter into a binding agreement were never conveyed by him to management during his conversations with Mr. Gutkind. In fact the only evidence indicating that such restrictions were conveyed to management is Mr. Biggar's testimony that on one occasion during the negotiations he told Mr. Gutkind that any agreement was subject to Mr. Wachter's approval. Mr. Gutkind denies being so informed.[9]

The fact that Ms. Hastings may have informed Mr. Gutkind that the agreement would never by signed does not alter the above conclusion since Ms. Hasting was subordinate to the Regional Vice President in authority.

Finally, with respect to Respondent Union's defense predicated upon the allegation that the memorandum of understanding conflicts with the terms of the national collective bargaining agreement, I find such defense to be without merit. Whether or not there is a conflict between the memorandum of understanding and the terms of the national collective bargaining agreement which might render the memorandum of understanding unenforceable is a matter to be determined in another forum, i.e. arbitration or a suit to rescind the memorandum of understanding.

Accordingly, having designated Mr. Biggar Acting Regional Vice President without any restrictions, save the pending grievances on which Mr. Wachter was the designated Union representative, and having clothed Mr. Biggar with all the apparent authority of the Regional Vice President, it is obligated to honor and execute any and all agreements negotiated by him. Long Beach Naval Shipyard, Long Beach, California and FEMTC, AFL-CIO, 7 FLRA 102.

Based upon the above findings and conclusions, I further find that by refusing to execute the memorandum of understanding concerning the distribution of overtime and compensatory leave, the Respondent Union violated Section 7116(b)(5) of the Statute.

Having found that the Respondent Union has violated the Statute, I hereby recommend that the Authority issue the following order designed to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute.[10]

[9] Based upon my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor I credit Mr. Gutkind's testimony that he was never informed of any restriction on Mr. Biggar's apparent bargaining authority. Mr. Biggar's hesitant testimony appeared to be tailored so as not to prejudice Respondent Union's case.

[10] Although I recognize that ordering the Respondent Union to execute the memorandum of understanding may turn out to be a futile act since the memorandum of understanding may well conflict with the terms of the national collective bargaining agreement, the fact remains that an authorized representative of Respondent Union negotiated and reached agreement on conditions of employment and is therefore required by the Statute, upon request, to sign a written document embodying the agreed upon terms.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and Section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the National Council of Social Security Administration Field Operations Locals - Council 220, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

a. Refusing to bargain in good faith with Region III, Social Security Administration by refusing to sign the January 21, 1985 written memorandum of understanding embodying terms and conditions of employment concerning overtime distribution and compensatory leave on which full agreement had been reached.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

a. Upon request, sign the January 21, 1985, memorandum of understanding reached with Region III Social Security Administration which embodies terms and conditions of employment concerning overtime distribution and compensatory leave on which full agreement had been reached.

b. Post at its business offices and normal meeting places including all places where notice to members are customarily posted throughout Region III of the Social Security Administration copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Regional Vice President of the National Council of Social Security Administration Field Operations Locals - Council 220, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, and shall be posted by him for 60 consecutive days. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

c. Pursuant to Section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region II, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

On June 26, 1984, the Authority issued its Decision and Order in the above-entitled proceeding in which it found that the Respondent had not failed and refused to comply with the provisions of section 7122(b) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute[1] and therefore had not violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.[2] U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's Home, Washington, D.C., 15 FLRA No. 26 (1984).

> (b) If no exception to an arbitrator's award is filed under subsection (a) of this section during the 30-day period beginning on the date the award is served on the party, the award shall be final and binding. An agency shall take the actions required by an arbitrator's final award. The award may include the payment of backpay (as provided in section 5596 of this title).

[2] Section 7116(a)(1) and (8) provides:

Thereafter, on November 22, 1985, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit set aside the Authority's Decision and held that the Respondent was required to comply with the terms of an arbitrator's award, notwithstanding that timely exceptions had been filed with the Authority pursuant to section 7122(b) of the Statute, because the Respondent had failed to request a stay of the arbitrator's award as required by section 2429.8 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations (codified in 5 C.F.R. § 2429.8). Statute by refusing to implement an arbitrator's award notwithstanding that no request for a stay of the arbitration award had been filed pursuant to section 2429.8 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Comply fully with the award of Arbitrator Nicholas H. Zumas dated March 22, 1982, to the extent that such compliance has not been previously effectuated.

(b) Post at its facility where employees in the bargaining unit are located copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by an appropriate official of the Respondent, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision finding that the Respondent had engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommending that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action. The Respondent filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, it is hereby ordered that the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2782, AFL-CIO, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Unilaterally refusing or failing to proceed to arbitration regarding three grievances filed by the Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, on March 8, 1984, contrary to the requirements of section 7121 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, after receiving timely notice of the Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census' desire to invoke arbitration.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing unit employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request, proceed to arbitration regarding the three grievances filed by the Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, on March 8, 1984.

(b) Post at its business offices and its normal meeting places, including all places where notices to members and employees of the Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, are customarily posted, copies of the attached Notice, on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the President of the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2782, AFL-CIO, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to members and other employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Submit appropriate signed copies of such Notices to the Director, Bureau of the Census, for posting in conspicuous places where the unit employees are located, where they shall be maintained for a period of 60 consecutive days from the date of posting.

(d) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. Section 7101, et seq., and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder.

Pursuant to an amended charge first filed on October 3, 1984, by the Department of Commerce, Bureau of Census, (hereinafter called the Charging Party or Bureau), a Complaint and Notice of Hearing was issued on December 31, 1984, by the Regional Director for Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Washington, D.C. The Complaint, which was amended at the hearing, alleges in substance that the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2782, AFL-CIO, (hereinafter called the Union), violated Sections 7116(b)(1) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, (hereinafter called the Statute), by virtue of its actions in failing and refusing to proceed to arbitration on three grievances filed by the Bureau.

A hearing was held in Washington, D.C. on February 20, 1985. All parties were afforded the full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved herein. The General Counsel submitted a post hearing brief on March 20, 1985, which has been duly considered.1/

Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions, and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

The Union is and has been the exclusive collective bargaining representative of two units of the Bureau's employees stationed in the Washington, D.C. Metropolitan Area. On June 23, 1977, the Union and the Bureau executed a collective bargaining agreement covering the above mentioned employees. The agreement was to be effective for a period of three years and from year to year thereafter absent appropriate notice by either party to the contrary.2/ Article 7 of the collective bargaining agreement sets forth a grievance procedure, the last step of which is binding arbitration. If the parties can not mutually agree on the selection of an arbitrator, then, in accordance with the grievance procedure, a list of seven arbitrators is to be secured from Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service (FMCS). Upon the receipt of the list from FMCS, the parties will alternately take turns striking single names from the list until only one arbitrator's name remains on the list. The grievance procedure further provides that either party to the collective bargaining agreement may "as the final step in the grievance procedure" invoke arbitration following the receipt of the opposing parties decision pursuant to Section 7.10 of the grievance procedure which is entitled "Formal Grievance".

On or about October 28, 1983, after approximately six months of bargaining by Mr. David Warner on behalf of the Bureau and Mr. Edward Hanlon, then Chief Steward and Chief Negotiator for the Union, Mr. Hanlon and Mr. Warner initialed off on a new collective bargaining contract.3/

1/ In the absence of any objection, the General Counsel's Motion to Correct Transcript is hereby granted.

2/ The 1977 contract was amended in 1979 to conform to the provisions of the Civil Service Reform Act.

3/ The new contract contained a grievance procedure similar to the one contained in the old contract. However, rather than using such terms

The collective bargaining contract was subject to ratification by the Union membership, and a 30 day period thereafter for final approval by higher representatives of the Bureau.

Also on October 28, 1983, Mr. Hanlon and Mr. Warner entered into a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) wherein the Union agreed to withdraw "all unfair labor practices which have been filed and are currently pending, including those being investigated and those already scheduled for hearings". The Union also agreed to abide by Article 30 of the "proposed new agreement" pending ratification of the Agreement. Article 30 of the new Agreement provides, among other things, that the Union will give the Bureau 30 days notice prior to filing any unfair labor practice charge.

According to the credited testimony of Mr. Warner, the Union ratified the new October 28, 1983 collective bargaining agreement between the parties on or about November 9 or 10, 1983. On or about December 10, 1983, approximately 30 days following ratification, the Bureau began to implement the contract. Thus, the Bureau established an alternate work schedule, provided Union access to the mails, prepared a survey concerning employee interest in a day care center, effected changes in employees' work space, etc.

However, despite the fact that the Bureau had been implementing the terms of the new collective bargaining agreement, the Union, due to a controversy surrounding Article 19.2 of the new collective bargaining agreement which pertained to alternate work schedules for unit employees in the Bureau's Computer Services Division, refused to formally sign the new collective bargaining agreement.

By separate Memorandums date March 8, 1984, the Bureau filed three separate "Formal" grievances against the Union. Two of the grievances concerned alleged violations of the October 28, 1983 MOU and the third grievance concerned an alleged "intentionally false, inflammatory letter" from the Union to unit employees in connection with a pending representaas informal grievance, formal grievance, etc., the new contract set forth the progression of the grievances by steps. Thus, step 5 of the new grievance procedure was equivalent to the "formal grievance" in the old contract and like the "formal grievance" was the last chance for discussion between the parties prior to submission of the matter to arbitration. With respect to arbitration, the new contract called for the establishment of a permanent panel of arbitrators which would handle cases on a rotating basis. The procedure for establishing the panel of arbitrators was set forth in the contract. Finally, like the old contract, either party was given access to arbitration.

tion matter before the Federal Labor Relations Authority.4/ When the Union failed to respond to the grievances, the Bureau by three separate letters dated April 14, 1984, consistent with applicable provisions of both the 1977 and 1983 collective bargaining contracts, invoked arbitration on each of the grievances. Attached to each of the three April 14, letters invoking arbitration was a copy of the original grievance, a proposed settlement and a Form R-43 which was utilized under the 1977 contract to obtain a list of arbitrators from the FMC. Neither the March 8, 1984 grievances nor the April 13, 1984, letters invoking arbitration specifically mentioned which contract the Bureau was proceeding under.

On April 23, 1984, the Union responded to the Bureau's request for arbitration taking the position that the November, 1983 collective bargaining contract was "void, null, and without any legal meaning whatsoever" due to pending litigation thereon before the Federal Labor Relations Authority, and that in such circumstances the grievances were "not grievable or arbitrable at this time". The Union closed its letter stating as follows:

> However, if the Agency wishes to seek enforcement of any provision of the 1977 agreement currently in legal effect, it may do so pursuant to the negotiated grievance procedure of that contract. The Union will, of course process any management grievance pursuant to the 1977 contract.

By memorandum dated May 4, 1984, the Bureau notified Mr. Hanlon, then president of the Union, that it was unaware of any authority for the Union's position that it could make a unilateral determination concerning the arbitrability and/or grievability of any matter. The memorandum further advised the Union that the Bureau intended to proceed "independently to arbitration" and give serious thought to filing an unfair labor practice predicated upon the Union's refusal to process grievances. Four days later, on May 8, 1984, the Bureau filed a completed FMCS Form R-43, entitled "Request For Arbitration Panel". On May 14, 1984, the FMCS forwarded a panel of arbitrators to both the Union and the Bureau.

On July 19, 1984, the Bureau and the Union entered into a Memorandum of Agreement covering the disputed language appearing in Article 19.2 of the new collective bargaining agreement which pertained to alternative work schedules for unit employees in the Bureau's Computer Division. Paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) dealt solely with Article 19.2. Paragraphs (d), (e) and (f) read as follows:

4/ As authority for the grievance, the Bureau cited Article 1.1 which provides in both the 1977 and 1983 contracts that the basic purpose of the collective bargaining agreements is ". . . to provide for constructive and cooperative labor-management relations between the parties".

> (e) The contract is effective as of the date of signature of this memorandum. However, any agency actions taken under the November 9 contract must be considered as if the contract had taken effect when implemented by the agency. The agency will not raise the defense of timeliness with respect to grievances concerning the issues of physical relocation, or the impact of reorganization under article 23 and 24, respectively, occurring between December 10, 1983 and July 19, 1984.
> (f) The Agency will withdraw the unfair labor practice charge filed in Case No. 3-CO-40019 now pending.

On July 23, the Bureau sent a memorandum to the Union wherein it requested the Union's position on the Bureau's March 8, 1984 grievances.

By Memorandum dated August 13, 1984, the Union requested that the parties take immediate steps to form a five member arbitration panel pursuant to Sections 9.3 and 10.3 of the new contract. The Union proposed September 10, 1984, as the date the parties would each submit a list of 10 arbitrators.[4]

By Memorandum dated August 14, 1984, the Bureau reiterated its request for the Union's position on the Bureau's three pending grievances and asked for a response by August 17, 1984.

On August 17, 1984, the Union replied to the Bureau's July 3, 1984 memorandum stating in pertinent part as follows:

> Obviously, the confusion over which contract was in effect from December 10, 1983, to July 19, 1984, made the processing of any grievance very difficult -- Union, Agency, or employee. That confusion has now, hopefully, been cleared up.

[4] On August 15, the Bureau sent a reply memorandum wherein it suggested October 31, 1984, as the date for exchanging lists of arbitrators.

> I have not made a final determination of arbitrability or grievability on your grievance. However, to provide an answer to your July, 1984, letter and consider your grievances, I require reasonable official time. Article 5 did not contemplate the right of management to file a grievance. No such management right is required by law.
> I am willing to consider a final response to your March, April, and July correspondence and forward it to you within 10 workdays if in return you recognize that the Union president or designees are entitled to reasonable amounts of official time over and above that contained in Article 5 to process management grievances.

By Memorandum dated August 15, 1984, the Bureau replied to the Union's August 13, 1984, letter concerning its request that the parties take immediate steps to form a permanent arbitration panel by September 1, 1984. The Bureau, pointing out that there would not be sufficient time to review the qualifications of the arbitrators, suggested October 31, 1984, as the date to select a panel of arbitrators. On August 17, 1984, the Union answered the Bureau's August 15, 1984, memorandum. The Union accused the Bureau of stalling on the matter and suggested September 17, 1984 as an alternate date for exchanging lists of arbitrators.

On August 20, 1984, the Union again wrote the Bureau concerning its pending grievances. Thus, the Union agreed to process the pending grievances filed by the Bureau through Articles 8, 9 and 10 of the new 1983 contract provided it was allowed additional official time to perform such activities. Articles 8, 9 and 10 of the new contract are the grievances and arbitration provisions of the new contract.

On September 7, 1984, the Bureau sent a memorandum to the Union wherein it set forth its position on the official time provisions of the contract. By a separate memorandum, also dated September 7, 1984, the Bureau informed the Union that while it expected to have its list of arbitrators ready for exchange by the end of October, it was of the opinion that the establishment of a panel should not prevent the parties from proceeding immediately to arbitration on the unresolved grievances.

On October 26, 1984, the Bureau notified the Union that it was prepared to meet for purposes of establishing the arbitration panel called for in the new contract.

As of the date of the hearing, the Union had not agreed to proceed to arbitration on the Bureau's three grievances.

Discussion and Conclusions

The General Counsel takes the position that the record supports a conclusion that the Union failed and/or refused to participate in the submission of the Bureau's three grievances to arbitration and thereby violated Sections 7116(b)(1) and (8) of the Statute. In support of this position the General Counsel points out that none of the three grievances were predicated solely upon provisions of the 1983 contract and as such were actionable under the grievances and arbitration provisions of either the 1979 or 1983 contract. In such circumstances according to the General Counsel, even if it be concluded as contended by the Union that the 1983 contract was not in effect at the time of the initial request for arbitration of the three grievances, then then Union was under an obligation to process the grievances under the 1979 contract, which by its terms remained in effect until superseded by a new collective bargaining contract. In this latter context the General Counsel points out, and I so find, that both the form and procedures utilized in the processing of such grievances comported in all respects with the grievance and arbitration provisions of the 1979 collective bargaining contract.

The Union's sole defense to the instant complaint appears to be that due to various disagreements concerning the wording of various provisions of the 1983 contract, including the provisions dealing with grievances and arbitration, the 1983 contract was not in effect at the time the Bureau requested arbitration of its grievances. In such circumstances, since the Bureau was in fact requesting arbitration under the provisions of the 1983 contract, it, the Union, was under no obligation to process the grievances. According to the Union it was always willing to process the grievances under the 1979 collective bargaining agreement.

The Authority has held that an agency has a right under the Statute to process grievances through the negotiated grievance and arbitration procedures. Laborer's International Union of North America, AFL-CIO-CLC, Local 1267, and Defense Logistics Agency, Defense Depot Tracy, Tracy, California, 14 FLRA 686. The Authority has further held that once arbitration is invoked by one party to a collective bargaining agreement, the other party is obligated to proceed to, and participate in, the requested arbitration proceedings. A failure of a party to so participate, is violative of Section 7121 of the Statute and constitutes an unfair labor practice. Department of Labor, Employment Standards Administration/Wage and Hour Division, Washington, D.C. and AFGE, Local 12, AFL-CIO, 10 FLRA 316. The obligation to participate in arbitration also applies to threshold questions concerning grievability and arbitrability, Department of Labor, Employment Standards, et al, supra.

In view of the foregoing state of the law, it is obvious that resolution of the instant complaint turns on whether or not the Union did, as alleged in the complaint, refuse to proceed to arbitration on the Bureau's three grievances.

A thorough review of the record, particularly the Union's responses to the Bureau's request for arbitration, makes it clear that the Union had no intention of cooperating in the requested arbitration proceedings. Thus, the Union in its first response dated April 23, 1984, took the position that the grievances were not arbitrable since they concerned issues covered by the November 1983 collective bargaining agreement, which, according to the Union, was "null and void, and without any legal meaning whatsoever". In line with such position, the Union made it clear that it would only honor grievances predicated on the 1979 collective bargaining agreement and then only under the grievance and arbitration provisions of such agreement. Thereafter, when the Bureau subsequently, in accordance with the past practice under the grievance and arbitration provisions of the 1979 agreement, requested and received a list of arbitrators from the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, the Union, which had been furnished a copy of the list of arbitrators supplied by the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, made no effort whatsoever to participate in the selection of an arbitrator.

Even after July 19, 1984, when all the problems with the 1983 collective bargaining agreement had apparently been worked out by the parties, the Union while still contesting the grievability and arbitrability of the Bureau's grievances, refused to pursue the matter any further unless the Bureau recognized that the Union was entitled to a "reasonable amount of official time over and above that contained in Article 5 to process management's grievances".

While it is true that in the interim, the Union did propose that steps be taken to establish the permanent panel of arbitrators called for in the 1983 collective bargaining agreement, at no time did it indicate any willingness to participate in the submission of the Bureau's grievances to arbitration under either of the two collective bargaining contracts.

Based upon the foregoing, I find that the Union has failed and/or refused to participate in any arbitration proceedings concerning the Bureau's grievances. Rather, the Union has usurped the powers of an arbitrator and unilaterally determined that the grievances are not arbitrable.

There is no doubt that as of April 14, 1984, the date the Bureau invoked arbitration, one of the two collective bargaining contracts was in effect. If the Union's position that the 1983 contract was "null and void" is accepted, then the 1979 collective bargaining contract by its terms remained in effect. In such circumstances the Union was obligated to proceed to arbitration pursuant to the grievance and arbitration provisions of such collective bargaining contract. However, despite the fact that the Bureau followed the existing past practice and successfully secured a list of arbitrators from the FMCS, the Union, which was also furnished with a copy of the list of arbitrators, made no attempt to meet with the Bureau for purposes of perfecting the Bureau's request for arbitration. In fact, the Union as late as August 17, 1984, some two months later, admittedly had made no attempt to even investigate the merits of the grievances.5/

Accordingly, I find that the record supports the conclusion that the Union has failed to comply with Section 7121 of the Statute and by such act has violated Sections 7116(b)(1) and (8) of the Statute.

Having found that Respondent violated Sections 7116(b)(1) and (8) of the Statute, I recommend that the Authority issue the following:

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and Section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2782, AFL-CIO, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Unilaterally refusing or failing to proceed to arbitration regarding three grievances filed by the Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census on March 8, 1984, contrary to the requirements of Section 7121 of the Statute, after receiving timely notice of the Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census' desire to invoke arbitration.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request, proceed to arbitration regarding the three grievances filed by the Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census on March 8, 1984.

(b) Post at its business offices and its normal meeting places, including all places where notices to members and employees of the Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census are customarily posted, copies of the attached Notice, on forms to be furnished by the

5/ To the extent that it is the Union's position that the October 28, 1983, MOU, on which two of the Bureau's grievances are predicated, is part and parcel of the 1983 collective bargaining agreement and like the 1983 agreement is null and void, I find that this is a threshold determination to be made by an arbitrator, and not the Union.

Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the President of the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2782, AFL-CIO, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to members and to other employees are customarily posted. The President of the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2782, AFL-CIO, shall take reasonable steps to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director of Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

These cases are before the Authority because of two separate negotiability appeals filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), and concern the negotiability of two proposals submitted in response to a proposed reduction-in-force (RIF) in the Agency.

II. Procedural Issues

The Agency moved that the Authority consolidate the two separate appeals filed by the Union for purposes of Authority review. These two appeals arose out of the same set of collective bargaining negotiations between the same parties and concern two portions of a larger article declared nonnegotiable by the Agency. Thus, in the interest of expeditious processing of these two appeals which concern a common subject, the Authority grants the Agency's motion to consolidate.

The Agency contends that each Union petition should be dismissed as untimely filed because the Agency had orally stated earlier in the negotiations that an entire article, which included the two disputed portions appealed to the Authority, was nonnegotiable. This contention cannot be sustained. It is well established that the time limit for filing a negotiability appeal pursuant to section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations runs from the date an agency's allegation is served in writing upon a union. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3385 and Federal Home Loan Bank Board, District 7, Chicago, Illinois, 7 FLRA 398 (1981).

The Agency also contends that the Union's appeal as to Proposal II should be dismissed under section 2424.4(a)(2) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations because the proposal is vague, ambiguous and unsupported by sufficient explanation as to its meaning. Contrary to the position of the Agency the Authority finds that the Union did sufficiently explain the meaning of Proposal II in the context of the negotiations in which it was offered. Thus, the Agency's contention cannot be sustained.

III. Union Proposal I

> Prior to conducting any reduction-in-force in any competitive area in Headquarters, management shall conduct a cost-benefit analysis to consider if a furlough and/or a retraining program for affected unit employees would be less costly than conducting a reduction-in-force.
> Management shall consider the following in conducting its analysis:
> (The cost savings of) All bargaining unit employees in Headquarters shall be furloughed according to the following schedule:
> (1) GS-5 and below for 5 days on Mondays or Fridays which are not holidays starting the fifth pay period of the fiscal year and continuing every fourth pay period until the 5 days of furlough are completed.
> (2) GS-10 to GS-6, inclusive, for 10 days of furlough on Mondays or Fridays which are not holidays starting the fifth pay period of the fiscal year and continuing every fourth pay period until the 10 days of furlough are completed.

(3) GS-15 to GS-11, inclusive, 15 days of furlough beginning as soon as practicable after the beginning of the fiscal year but in no event later than the fifth pay period of the fiscal year and continuing every pay period until the fifteen days of furlough are completed.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that Proposal I is inconsistent with section 7106(a) and (b) of the Statute because it interferes with the internal deliberation process in which management engages before management implements decisions concerning rights reserved to it under section 7106(a) and (b) of the Statute.

The Union contends, in essence, that Proposal I constitutes an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. In support of its position, the Union cites the decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 702 F.2d 1183 (D.C. Cir. 1983), reversing and remanding American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 and Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 91 (1981).

B. Analysis

According to its language and the Union's interpretation, which interpretation the Authority adopts, Proposal I would require the Agency to conduct a cost study to determine whether instituting a furlough or retraining program for affected employees would be less costly than conducting a RIF. In addition, Proposal I provides a suggested furlough schedule as a part of the cost study by which management would calculate the cost savings of temporarily laying off employees according to their GS grade.

Contrary to the Agency's claim, the disputed proposal would not require the Agency to take or refrain from taking any action whatever with regard to the retention of employees. Rather, the proposal requires management to consider certain alternative courses of action, without placing any obligation on the Agency to adopt any of the specified actions in lieu of a RIF. That is, Proposal I merely requires management to consider various options before reducing the workforce, and does not interfere with the exercise of management's right. As such it constitutes an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by the Agency's right to conduct a RIF and therefore is within the duty to bargain under section 7106(b)(3). Because Proposal I does not interfere at all with the Agency's right under section 7106 to conduct a RIF or retain employees, it is not necessary to apply any test for determining "excessive interference" with the relevant management right under section 7106(b)(3). National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986) (Provision 2).

C. Conclusion

The Authority finds, for the foregoing reasons, that Proposal I does not interfere with the exercise of management rights. Rather, it constitutes an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by the Agency's decision to conduct a RIF and, therefore, is within the duty to bargain.

IV. Union Proposal II

> For the purposes of this article, wage grade employees shall be considered GS employees, GS-5 or below. Printing employees shall be considered GS-10 and below.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that because Proposal II involves matters relating to the classification of positions which are excluded from the definition of conditions of employment under section 7103(a)(14)(B) of the Statute, it is nonnegotiable.

The Union contends that Proposal II merely concerns how wage grade and printing employees will be covered under the furlough formula set out in Proposal I.

B. Analysis

The Authority finds that the Agency misinterpreted the meaning of Proposal II. According to its language and the Union's interpretation, which interpretation the Authority adopts, Proposal II would merely require that in conducting the cost study contemplated by Proposal I the Agency would calculate the cost savings of furloughing wage grade and printing employees in the same manner as specified GS employees. Thus, the Agency's claim that Proposal II is excluded from the definition of conditions of employment as defined by section 7103(a)(14)(B) of the Statute cannot be sustained.

C. Conclusion

The Authority finds, for the foregoing reasons, that Proposal II does not concern classification matters and is within the duty to bargain.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Proposals I and II.*/

Respondent

and

Case No. 2-CA-40021

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF GOVERNMENT
EMPLOYEES, LOCAL 1917, AFL-CIO

Charging Party

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions to the attached Administrative Law Judge's Decision filed by the General Counsel. The Respondent filed an opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions. The complaint in this case alleged a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) when the Respondent unilaterally ceased issuing "blackjacks" to detention officers at its Brooklyn, New York facility and thereafter refused to negotiate over the impact and implementation of such change with the Charging Party.

II. Background

The facts are fully set forth in the Judge's Decision. Briefly stated, the record indicates that there was a practice of issuing blackjacks to detention officers at the Respondent's Brooklyn facility. The blackjacks were either issued or authorized by the Chief Detention Officer. At a certain point in time, however, the newly assigned Chief Detention Officer denied a request by a newly assigned detention officer that the latter be issued a blackjack. Repeated requests were similarly denied as was a request to negotiate made by the Charging Party after the change in practice had been implemented. There is no dispute that the Respondent changed its practice of issuing blackjacks to detention officers.

III. Judge's Decision

The Judge concluded that the Respondent's failure to bargain over the impact and implementation of its decision to discontinue the past practice of issuing blackjacks to detention officers at the Brooklyn, New York, facility violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. To remedy such conduct, the Judge ordered the Respondent to bargain, upon request, to the extent consistent with law and regulation, concerning the impact and implementation of the change. However, the Judge rejected the General Counsel's request for a status quo ante remedy on the basis that continued use of blackjacks by detention officers might be illegal under New York state law. The Judge did not pass upon the lawfulness of such a practice because, in his view, the unfair labor practice proceeding was not the proper forum in which to resolve that question.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The only exceptions to the Judge's findings and conclusions were made by the General Counsel and related to the Judge's recommended remedy. The General Counsel argued that the Judge was obligated to determine whether the practice of issuing blackjacks is legal; that, based upon the record, the practice is legal; and, further, that issuance of a status quo ante remedy is warranted under Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604 (1982).

In its opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions with regard to the status quo ante remedy issue, the Respondent essentially argued the propriety of issuing blackjacks to detention officers. The Respondent also asserted that subsequent to the unfair labor practice hearing in this case, the parties at the national level executed a collective bargaining agreement which, it argued, gives to management the sole discretion to determine which employees are authorized to carry various weapons.

V. Analysis

It is undisputed that the Respondent had a practice of issuing blackjacks to detention officers at the Brooklyn, New York facility, and that the Respondent unilaterally discontinued this practice. We find, in agreement with the Judge, that this change had more than de minimis impact on unit employees' conditions of employment. Therefore, the Respondent was obligated to notify the Charging Party and afford it an opportunity to bargain over the procedures to be observed in implementing such change and appropriate arrangements for unit employees adversely affected by its decision to change the practice of issuing blackjacks. This the Respondent failed to do. As noted above, the Respondent did not except to the Judge's conclusion that the failure to provide the Charging Party with such opportunity was a violation of the Statute.

VI. Remedy

As noted, the Judge declined to issue a status quo ante remedy, a conclusion to which the General Counsel excepted. In our view, a status quo ante remedy is warranted in this case. First, in Federal Correctional Institution, the Authority held that the appropriateness of a status quo ante remedy is to be determined on a case-by-case basis, carefully balancing the nature and circumstances of the violation against the degree of disruption in government operations which would be caused by such a remedy. The Judge stated generally that there were factors both for and against a status quo ante remedy, but did not identify or weigh such factors because of the basis for his ultimate disposition of the issue. As to the question of the legality of the unilaterally discontinued practice of issuing blackjacks to detention officers, the Respondent essentially conceded, in its opposition to the exceptions, that the New York state law upon which the Judge based his conclusion was not applicable to the employees in this case.[1] Accordingly, it must now be determined whether a status quo ante remedy is warranted under Federal Correctional Institution. In this regard, the Authority notes the Judge's uncontradicted finding that there was no notice given to the Charging Party concerning the discontinuance of the practice of issuing blackjacks to detention officers, that there was no bargaining opportunity afforded concerning this change in practice, and that the Respondent refused the Charging Party's request for negotiations after implementation of the change. With respect to the impact experienced by the employees, the Authority notes the uncontradicted findings of the Judge with respect to the use of the blackjacks and the fact that other detention officers at the Brooklyn facility retained possession of their previously issued blackjacks. Finally, the Authority finds nothing in the record which would indicate that the Respondent's operations would be disrupted by reinstating the issuance of blackjacks consistent with preexisting practice, along with the affirmative order that the Respondent negotiate consistent with the requirements of the Statute.2/

[1] The Respondent has not demonstrated any other basis on which to conclude that issuance of a status quo ante remedy under the Statute would be unlawful.

VII. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision and the entire record in this case, and adopts the Judge's findings and conclusions, and his recommended Order as modified to include the status quo ante remedy. Therefore, we find that the Respondent has violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute and shall order that the Respondent restore the past practice of issuing blackjacks to the detention officers involved in this case.3/

2/ As to the Respondent's arguments concerning the propriety of issuing blackjacks to detention officers, the Authority of course makes no judgment on that issue but addresses only the question of whether reinstatement of the past practice as a part of the remedy will disrupt or impair efficiency of the Respondent's operations. As to the Respondent's assertion concerning the substance of a subsequently negotiated agreement arguably giving management the sole discretion to determine which employees are authorized to carry various weapons, the Authority finds it unnecessary to determine what, if any, effect this agreement may have concerning management's right to make such determinations. Rather, the issues before the Authority in this proceeding are whether the Respondent failed to fulfill its bargaining obligation under the Statute, and the appropriate remedy for such unlawful conduct.

3/ The Authority notes that it appears the Respondent's Brooklyn, New York facility has relocated to a facility in Manhattan. The Authority's order is of course intended to apply to the detention officers involved herein regardless of their change in physical location.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the Immigration and Naturalization Service shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Unilaterally discontinuing the practice of issuing blackjacks to detention officers at its Brooklyn, New York, facility without affording the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1917, AFL-CIO, notice and an opportunity to bargain over the procedures to be observed in implementing such change and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected thereby.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Restore the practice of issuing blackjacks to detention officers of the Brooklyn facility.

(b) Notify the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1917, AFL-CIO, concerning any proposed discontinuance of the practice of issuing blackjacks to detention officers at the Brooklyn, New York facility, and, upon request, negotiate with such representative concerning the procedures to be observed in implementing such change and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected thereby.

(c) Post at the Immigration and Naturalization Service facility which currently houses detention officers formerly located at the Brooklyn facility, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the head of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region II, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with it.

Issued, Washington, D.C., April 21, 1986.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a Complaint and Notice of Hearing issued on December 28, 1983, by the Acting Regional Director for the Federal Labor Relations Authority, Region II, a hearing was held before the undersigned on March 6, 1984 at New York, NY.

This case arose under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 5 U.S.C. 7101 et seq. (herein called the Statute). It is based upon a charge filed on October 18, 1983 by American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1917, AFL-CIO (herein called the Union) against Immigration and Naturalization Service (herein called Respondent).

The Complaint alleged, in substance, that on or about the July 15, 1983 Respondent unilaterally discontinued the issuance of blackjacks to its Detention Officers assigned to its Detention Center in Brooklyn, NY; that on or about that date and at all times thereafter Respondent has failed and refused to negotiate the impact and implementation of the change in conditions of employment for unit employees - all in violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

Respondent's Answer, dated January 20, 1984, denied the aforesaid allegations of the Complaint as well as the commission of any unfair labor practices.

All parties were represented at the hearing. Each was afforded full opportunity to be heard, to adduce evidence, and to examine as well as cross-examine witnesses. Thereafter briefs were filed with the undersigned which have been duly considered.[1]

Subsequent to the hearing General Counsel filed with the undersigned a Motion to Strike portions of Respondent's brief, contending they referred to facts not contained on the record. Respondent filed a response thereto as well as a motion to reopen the record and admit specific documents into the record. Opposition to the motion to reopen the record was thereafter filed by Respondent. The motions involve the following:

> 1) On page 1, paragraph 2 of its brief, Respondent refers to various classifications within its agency. General Counsel moves to strike such evidence as not being in the record. Respondent states that 8 CFR 103.1(q) lists the types of classifications within the agency, and therefore it is a matter of public record.
> 2(a) On page 5, paragraph 3 of its brief Respondent asserts that:

[1] In its brief Respondent asserts the General Counsel's case in procedurely defective. It is contended that General Counsel altered his argument, in his opening statement, to conform to the original complaint. Further Respondent maintains this was done at the prompting of the undersigned. The undersigned rejects this contention and finds it lacking in substance. The Complaint herein was predicated on a change in a condition of employment which occurred without negotiating said changes with the Union. The undersigned suggested that the Complaint, in conformance with the opening remarks re a practice existing for five years, might well have so pleaded. Nevertheless, the Complaint is sufficient as a pleading to encompass the existence of a past practice (condition of employment) and its subsequent discontinuance.

> "In January of 1984, six months after this incident, the National Immigration and Naturalization Service Council, parent of Local 1917 (the Charging Party) formally requested negotiations upon the impact and implementation of an Agency-wide proposal to discontinue the practice of issuing blackjacks."

(b) On page 6, paragraph 2 of its brief Respondent mentions that the National Council of the Union formally requested national negotiations 6 months later, in January, 1984.

(c) On page 8, paragraph 1 of its brief Respondent states that the impact and implementation of this change in policy is currently the subject of ongoing negotiations between the National Council of the union in the Respondent's national headquarters.[2]

3) On page 6, paragraph 4 of its brief Respondent refers to a settlement agreement in the case of Man Chung et. al. v. William French Smith, et. al., Civil Action No. CV-79-0795 (EDNY) which allegedly impacted upon a decision to cease issuing blackjacks. General Counsel asserts it is not part of the record and moves to strike all references thereto. Respondent contends it is a public record and moves to introduce same herein which is amended to is brief as Attachment IV.

4) On page 7, last sentence of its brief Respondent refers to changes in the Immigration Detention Officer's Handbook dated July 30, 1983 which proscribes the use of blackjacks. General Counsel asserts the Handbook was not introduced in evidence and no evidence appears as to any such change in policy. It moves to strike

[2] With respect to the references in the brief concerning request for negotiation, as well as ongoing negotiation, General Counsel asserts there is no evidence or testimony in the record in support thereof. It moves to strike such reference on page 5, 6, and 8 of the brief. While conceding the record does not include evidence re negotiations between the parent of Local 1917 and Respondent, the latter contends the correspondence postdated the charge and thus was not introduced into evidence. Respondent moves to now introduce such material as follows: A letter dated November 23, 1983 from Respondent to the president of the Union's Council, marked Attachment I; the Proposed Policy of Respondent re service employees carrying weapons to which the Union was invited to respond, marked Attachment II; the Response of the Union to such proposal, marked Attachment III.

all references to said Handbook. Respondent maintains the Handbook was not put in evidence since it postdates the charge. It moves to introduce the same herein which is annexed to a brief as Attachment V.

In respect to the foregoing motions on the part of both General Counsel and Respondent, the undersigned rules as follows:

1) General Counsel's motion to strike from Respondent's brief all references to the job clarification in the agency is denied. A reading of 8 CFR 103.1(q) discloses that such data is contained therein and hence the classifications are a matter of public record. Accordingly, the motion to strike such reference is denied.

2) General Counsel's motion to strike from Respondent's brief all references to the request for negotiations by the National Immigration and Naturalization Council (parent of Local 1917), as well as references to ongoing negotiations between the said parent and Respondent, is granted. There is no evidence in the record to support such reference in Respondent's brief as set forth on pages 5, 6 and 8 thereof. Respondent's argument that it did not introduce such evidence at the hearing because the correspondence postdated the charge is not persuasive. Nothing in the Statute or the Rules and Regulations precludes the introduction in evidence of relevant material which is dated or effective after a charge is filed. Since it appears, moreover, that such evidence existed and was available at the time of the hearing, the cross motion by Respondent to reopen the record and introduce such evidence - Attachment I, II and III is denied.

3) Respondent's motion to introduce into evidence Attachment IV, the Stipulation of Agreement in the case of Man Chung et. al. v. William French Smith et. al. Civil Action, No. CV-79-0795 (EDNY) is denied. While official notice might be taken of the proceeding in the District Court action, the stipulated facts therein are not relevant to the instant matter. Settlement of a cause of action involving persons not part of the instant proceeding, and containing a commitment between Respondent and such persons, do not relate to the obligation of the agency to fulfill its obligation under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

4) General Counsel's motion to strike from Respondent's brief references to the Immigration Detention Officer's Handbook, as set forth on page 7 thereof, is granted. The fact that the document postdates the filing of the charge is not legal justification for failing to introduce same into evidence during the hearing. Inasmuch as the Handbook was in existence and available at the time of the hearing, the motion by Respondent to reopen the record and introduce it into evidence as Attachment V is denied.

Upon the entire record herein, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings and conclusions:

Findings of Fact

1. At all times material herein the American Federation of Government Employees (National Council of Immigration and Naturalization Service Locals) has been, and still is, the exclusive representative for a nationwide unit of all Respondent's employees, excluding those employees assigned to Border Patrol Sectors and those excluded from coverage by the Civil Service Reform Act.

2. At all times material herein Respondent has recognized American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1917, AFL-CIO (the Union) as the agent of the exclusive representative for the purpose of bargaining on behalf of its employees in the Respondent's New York District.

3. Respondent is responsible for the control of aliens coming to reside in the United States from foreign countries. It maintains, within the New York District, a Service Processing Center at Brooklyn, NY. This center is also known as the Detention Center. Aliens who are illegally present in the United States are detained thereat until accorded a hearing or other due process.

4. Employed at the Detention Center are about 80 Immigration Detention Officers, of whom about 30 are female. These Officers are responsible for the control, upkeep, health and maintenance of the aliens detained at the Center. They also perform escort duties when aliens are moved to and from consulates, hospitals, prisons and airports. In connection with the performance of their duties, the Detention Officers are issued various types of weapons. While guns may be issued if an assignment is dangerous, the Officers are usually provided restraining items as leg weights, handcuffs, riot batons, and billy chains. Prior to July, 1983 the Detention Officers at the Brooklyn Detention Center were also issued blackjacks. This item is a piece of lead about 1/2 inch long wrapped in leather, and with a leather strap about 6-8 inches long. The blackjack, which is wrapped around a thumb and rests in one's hand, is used to poke someone or strike the legs or knees of an alien causing trouble.3/ Record facts show training in the use of blackjacks has varied from a minute or so to two hours.

5. Detention Officer Frank Marino testified, and I find that in 1973 he was a supply clerk at the district office in New York City; that he gave out equipment to the Detention Officers, which included blackjacks. The

3/ In 1980 Detention Officers were escorting some Cuban aliens who were alighting from a bus. When the aliens grabbed several of the Officers, other Detention Officers were required to use their blackjacks to control the situation.

Chief Detention Officer authorized the issuance of blackjacks to those Officers and this equipment was given out at the New York supply room. This continued until 1980 when the blackjacks were issued from the Brooklyn location. The issuance of blackjacks to the Detention Officers, with the approval of the Chief Detention Officer, continued until about May, 1983.

6. In May, 1983 Mae Saccamano was assigned to the Detention Center as a Detention Officer. She was given a manual as well as handcuffs and keys. Some other Officer mentioned that she should have a blackjack also. Saccamano approached Chief Detention Officer Roger Mayo who assumed that role on April 17, 1983. She asked Mayo for the blackjack and the Chief Officer advised Saccamano that its use was illegal in New York State. Hence he refused to furnish her with a blackjack. In June[4] Saccamano went to Glynco, Georgia for training in forearms. Upon her return in July she again asked Mayo for a blackjack but he refused to issue one to her. Although Saccamano repeated the request again, it was not issued.

7. Between May-July several Detention Officers informed James A. Lane, shop steward, that blackjacks had not been issued to them. He suggested they speak to Mayo in this regard. Since their efforts were fruitless, Lane went to see Mayo in July and asked why the blackjacks were not given to the Detention Officers. Mayo told the steward that the employees are not supposed to have them - it is so provided in the Handbook, and Mayo doesn't like them. Lane told the Chief Officer this was a change in practice, and the union official suggested they discuss the matter. Upon Mayo's refusal to do so, Lane mentioned he would have to file an unfair labor practice charge. Mayo stated that Lane should do as he must; that the Chief Officer would do what's required of him.

8. Record testimony reflects that Mayo made the decision, shortly after assuming the position of Chief, not to issue blackjacks to Detention Officers. He based his decision on the fact that such item was illegal in New York and no training[5] was provided for its use. Mayo was aware of the past practice at the Center to issue the blackjacks. The Chief testified he made the decision without consulting the Union or negotiating the matter in any respect with the bargaining agent. He further testified he was not aware of any obligation to notify the Union before discontinuing the issuance of blackjacks at the Center.

[5] Training was provided in the use of night sticks, although it appears from the record that no training was given in respect to the use of riot batons.

9(a). Article 10, Section 10(12) of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York, provides as follows:

> "Deadly weapon" means any loaded weapon from which a shot, readily capable of producing death or other serious physical injury, may be discharged, or a switch blade, knife, gravity knife, dagger, billy, blackjacks, or metal knuckles. (underscoring supplied).

(b) Article 2, Section 2.10 of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York, entitled "Peace Officers" sets forth a list of those persons who shall have the powers of, and be deemed, peace officers.[6]

(c) Article 2, Section 2.15 of the Criminal Procedure Law of the Statute of New York, entitled "Federal law enforcement officers; powers," lists the federal law enforcement officers who shall have the powers set forth in subdivision 1 (with certain exceptions), 2, 3, and 8 of Article 2, Section 2.20 of this Criminal Procedure Law. While no reference is made specifically to Immigration Detention Officers, the said list in Section 2.15 does name: "Immigration and Naturalization Service Special agents, investigators and patrol officers."

(d) Article 2, Section 220 of the Criminal Procedure Law, entitled "Powers of peace officers," provides that such officers shall have certain powers. Subdivisions 1, 2, 3, and 8 grant them the following:

> 1. The power to make warrantless arrests. . . .
> 2. The power to use physical force and deadly physical force in making an arrest or preventing an escape pursuant to section 35.30 of the penal law.
> 3. The power to carry out warrantless searches whenever such searches are constitutionally permissible and acting pursuant to their special duties.
> . . .
> 8. The power to possess and take custody of firearms not owned by the peace officer, for the purpose of disposing, guarding, or any other lawful purpose, consistent with his duties as a peace officer. (underscoring supplied)

6/ While no specific reference is made to Immigration Officers in said section, General Counsel concedes that, based on 8 USCA 1357 which sets forth the powers and duties of these officers and the weapons made available to them, the Immigration Officers may be called "peace officers."

Conclusions

Respondent does not dispute the fact that a past practice existed at the Brooklyn, NY Processing Center whereby blackjacks were issued to the Immigration Officers. Further it does not deny that the issuance of blackjacks was in connection with the primary duties of these officers in escorting and controlling illegal aliens who are detained in this country. It is contended, however, that the practice was discontinued on April 17, 1983 by the new Chief Detention Officer based on his conclusion that it violated the Criminal Code of New York State, and there was no training for use of the blackjacks. Respondent also maintains that there was no wilful intent on its part when the practice was terminated, nor did Chief Mayo harbor any animus toward the Union. Finally, it is contended that any impact occasioned by the change is minimal.

It is quite clear that, despite the right of an agency to make certain decisions affecting employees, an obligation remains to notify the bargaining agent and afford it an opportunity to bargain re the impact and implementation thereof. Even though an agency may under, Section 7106(b) (1) of the Statute, institute a change involving a reserved management right, it still must bargain concerning its impact and implementation. Social Security Administration, 16 FLRA No. 17; Internal Revenue Service, (District, Region and National Office and Service Center Unit), 10 FLRA 326.

Respondent's chief contentions in support of its discontinuing the practice of issuing blackjacks to Detention Officers, rests on the alleged illegality of their use under the NY Criminal Code. This argument is rejected. The Authority has concluded that while management may be required to correct an unlawful practice once discovered, it still must give notice of the change and, upon request, bargain as to the impact and implementation, where possible, of such change. Department of the Interior, U.S. Geological Survey, Conservation Division, Gulf of Mexico Region, Metairie, Louisiana, 9 FLRA No. 65 (footnote 9). The parties disagree as to whether the issuance of blackjacks does flout the NY State Criminal Procedure Law. Assuming arguendo that the penal law in New York does outlaw the use of such an item by the Detention Officers herein, it was still incumbent upon Respondent to notify the Union of its intention to discontinue the use of blackjacks and negotiate the impact and implementation of such discontinuance. It is conceded by Respondent that it failed to do either.

While it is argued that the impact of the change or discontinuance of the blackjack is de minimis, record facts persuade me to the contrary. Some of the illegal aliens handled by the Detention Officers have criminal backgrounds, and these individuals are enacted to and from the airport by the officers. In 1980 several officers were grabbed by some Cuban aliens, and it was necessary for other officers to use their blackjacks to restore order. Moreover, some of the escort services rendered by the Detention Officers require escorting aliens to and from prisons. It thus appears that the duties performed by the Officers are fraught with some danger and may well be hazardous in nature. Further, since the aliens outnumber the Officers in many instances, the carrying of a blackjack as a defensive weapon could be very necessary at times. Respondent asserts that other weapons, as night sticks or riot batons, are available as weapons. However, such items may not be issued in advance for particular assignments, and yet the need for some articles, as a blackjack, may well arise in certain circumstances. It seems clear to the undersigned that the change in the past practice of issuing blackjacks to Detention Officers impacted upon these employees. Where a change does result in an impact which is more than de minimis, as in the instant case, there is a statutory duty to negotiate. See U.S. Government Printing Office, 13 FLRA No. 39.

Having failed and refused to bargain re the impact and implementation of the change in the past practice of issuing blackjacks to its Detention Officers, Respondent has violated Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

Remedy

General Counsel seeks a status quo ante remedy whereby Respondent be required to issue blackjacks to Detention Officers who desire them. In citing Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604, to support this remedy, General Counsel stresses the failure by Respondent to give notice of its action and its refusal to fulfill an obligation to negotiate, as well as the fact that such a remedy will not impair the effectiveness of Respondent's operation. Contrariwise, Respondent opposes a status quo ante remedy, emphasizing its lack of wilfulness and the fact that returning the blackjacks would require Respondent to commit an unlawful act.

Upon careful consideration of this particular issue, I am constrained not to recommend the requested remedy. Note is taken that several factors listed in the Federal Correctional Institution, case, supra, favor the position of either party in respect thereto. However, I consider it determinative in disposing of this issue that the continued use of blackjacks by the Detention Officers might be illegal. A tenable argument may be advanced that the Detention Officers herein do not fall within the term "Immigration and Naturalization Service Special agents, investigators and patrol officers" as set forth in Article 2, Section 2.15 of the N.Y. Criminal Procedure Law. In such instance, it is arguable, these officers would not have the powers granted to peace officers under Article 2, Section 220 of said Criminal Procedure Law.[7] A status quo ante remedy should not place the employer in a position where it may be subject to civil liability or criminal prosecution based on an existing law, despite controversy as to its application. In my opinion, it would not accord with the purposes and policies of the Statute to grant said remedy, and I conclude it is unwarranted herein.

Accordingly, and in view of the foregoing conclusions that Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, it is recommended that the Federal Labor Relations Authority issue the following:

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and Section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Immigration and Naturalization Service shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

    (a) Instituting changes in established conditions of employment at its New York District without first notifying the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1917, AFL-CIO, the designated representative of its employees of the New York District, and affording such representative the opportunity to bargain, to the extent consonant with law and regulation, concerning the impact and/or implementation of such changes.

    (b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action:

    (a) Upon request by American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1917, AFL-CIO, the designated representative of its employees of the New York District, bargain, to the extent consonant with law and regulation, concerning the impact and/or implementation of a change in the past practice of providing blackjacks to its Immigration Detention Officers.

[7] It does not appear that an extra-agency decision or determination has been made as to whether the use of blackjacks by the Respondent's Detention Officers is legal under the NY Criminal Procedure Law. I do not believe the present proceeding is the proper forum for such determination. Hence, I do not pass upon whether such use is legal or illegal under said state law.

(b) Post at its facilities copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of the forms they shall be signed by the Chief Detention Officer, New York District, and they shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Chief Detention Officer shall take reasonable steps to insure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 2423.30 of the Rules and Regulations notify the Regional Director, Region II, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is an appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3) that would require the agency to select employees who were involuntarily reassigned to a position of equal grade without personal cause for return to their former positions at their former duty stations if and when such positions are vacant and the agency makes the determination to fill them. Contrary to the agency's contention, employees who were involuntarily reassigned to positions of equal grade in a different duty station were adversely affected since the reassignment, perhaps across the state, causes significant negative impact on affected employees. The burden placed by the proposal on management's right to select individuals to fill vacant positions under § 7106(a)(2)(C) is not so significant as to outweigh the disruption to an employee's life cause by assignment to a new duty station and the benefit conferred by the proposal of an opportunity for the employee to return to his or her former duty station. Likewise, the proposal does not add to the weight of management's practical needs in the exercise of its right to assign employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A).

DIGEST NOTES

A payment of travel and per diem expenses, as provided by the parties' collective bargaining agreement was not contrary to the Travel Expense Act. The Activity contended that a specific agency head determination that the travel was performed in the primary interest of the Government had not been made, as required by the Travel Expense Act. However, the provisions of the Travel Expense Act do not prohibit an agency from exercising through negotiations the discretion which it possesses to determine whether travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for purposes of reimbursement of appropriate travel expenses. The arbitrator concluded, as did the Authority, that contrary the Activity's contention above, the parties' agreement provision as to the payment of travel and per diem expenses constituted the determination by the Activity that travel attendant to representing an exclusive representative in negotiations is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business. Accordingly, the Authority found no basis for the Activity's exception.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

Since the arbitrator did not expressly provide in the award that the payment of travel and per diem expenses sought must comport with applicable regulatory requirements and restrictions, i.e. the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs), the Authority modified the award to assure that it would be consistent with the FTRs.

DIGEST NOTES

The issue before the arbitrator was what was a reasonable amount of official time under the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The activity had directed the union representative to reduce official time from 100 percent to 15 percent because of workload demands. The arbitrator found that the decision to impose the 15 percent official limitation was arbitrary, capricious, discriminatory, retaliatory and unreasonable. As his award, the arbitrator ordered that sufficient time be granted the union representative to perform appropriate union work for reasonable periods of time, provided there is no work emergency; the activity may require a log of official time use; the parties to negotiate the appropriate amount of official time in good faith; and annual leave be recredited to the union president for periods when official time should have been granted.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

In its exceptions, the agency alleged that the award was contrary to management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). The Authority held that the award was not contrary to management's right to assign work. Also the Authority held that the award of recrediting annual leave was not deficient.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator determined that the agency violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement when it terminated the payment of travel and per diem expenses of employees who served as union negotiators in bargaining sessions. As his remedy, the arbitrator ordered the agency to reimburse union negotiators for travel and per diem expenses incurred retroactive to the date the agency ceased making such payments. He also retained jurisdiction over implementation of the award for the limited purpose of resolving any reimbursement questions.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

In its initial exceptions, the agency contended that the award was incomplete; that the award failed to draw its essence from the agreement; that the award was based on a nonfact. The Authority concluded that these exceptions constituted nothing more than disagreement with the arbitrator's interpretation and application of the parties' agreement which provides no basis for finding an award deficient. Also the agency failed to establish that the arbitrator exceeded his authority, as alleged, by retaining jurisdiction for the limited purpose of resolving any reimbursement questions during implementation of the award.

In its final exception, the agency contended that the award was contrary to § 7131 and travel statutes. The Authority concluded that this exception failed to establish that the award was deficient. The arbitrator's interpretation of the parties' agreement is not contrary to § 7131. Moreover, the award is not contrary to the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5701 et seq. The arbitrator's interpretation of the agreement effectively constitutes the requisite determination that the travel was sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for purposes of reimbursement of travel expenses. However the award does not expressly provide for agency determinations regarding the propriety under the Federal Travel Regulations [41 CFR part 101-7] of those expenses. Accordingly, the Authority modified the award to provide agency determination of the propriety under the FTRs of the travel expenses.

DIGEST NOTES

The grievance in this case concerned the refusal of a supervisor to recommend the grievant, a patent examiner, for a career-ladder promotion. The arbitrator concluded that the supervisor was arbitrary. The arbitrator found that an examiner could expect to be promoted unless management showed a substantial basis for withholding the promotion, and that management had not made such a showing in this case. As his award, the arbitrator directed the agency to promote the grievant retroactively with backpay.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

In its exceptions the agency contended that the award was contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. 5596 and § 7106(a). The Authority concluded that the arbitrator did not made the necessary finding under the Back Pay Act that but for the unjustified or unwarranted personnel action, the grievant would not have suffered a withdrawal or reduction of pay. The arbitrator's finding that the supervisor's failure to recommend the grievant for promotion does not constitute the requisite finding.

The Authority also concluded that the arbitrator's award directing the agency to promote the grievant was contrary to management's rights to promote under § 7106(a)(2)(C). The Authority has previously held that an award of a retroactive promotion under the Back Pay Act is authorized only if the arbitrator finds that the employee was affected by an improper agency action that directly resulted in the failure of the employee to be promoted when the employee otherwise would have been. In this case the arbitrator did not make such a finding.

DIGEST NOTES

The grievant in this case objected to the performance rating given her under new performance standards. The arbitrator concluded that the agency violated the parties' agreement by rating the grievant's performance at the end of the agency rating cycle rather than at the end of 12 months. He found a further violation of the agreement in the agency's failure to inform the grievant that her performance was not at the previous level of "Excellent." As his award, the arbitrator ordered that the ten-month rating be stricken from the grievant's personnel records and be used only as a progress review and that the grievant be given a new appraisal for the requisite 12-month period.

In one exception the agency contended that the award violated § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) because the arbitrator substituted his judgment for that of management with respect to the grievant's performance appraisal. The Authority found that the arbitrator did not substitute his judgment for that of management as to what the grievant's performance appraisal should be, but merely directed that the grievant be reevaluated by management for the requisite period under established elements and standards.

In another exception, the agency contended that the award was contrary to 5 C.F.R. § 430.201(c)(3), a Government-wide regulation. The Authority concluded that the agency failed to show that the negotiated provision, as interpreted by the arbitrator to require appraisals on an annual basis, violated the Statute or the cited regulation. Further there is nothing in 5 CFR part 430 which imposes a specific requirement that performance appraisals must be accomplished on particular dates.

In other exceptions, the agency contended that the arbitrator's finding that the appraisal should cover a 12-month period and that the grievant was not given required counselling was based on nonfacts and, further, that the award failed to draw its essence from the parties' agreement. The Authority concluded that the agency's allegations merely constituted disagreement with the arbitrator's interpretation of the collective bargaining agreement.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator concluded that the parties had negotiated and agreed upon the payment of travel and per diem expenses for union representatives engaged in representational activities on official time. As his award, the arbitrator directed that the grievant be reimbursed for her reasonable and necessary travel and per diem expenses for the representational functions she performed on official time upon compliance with the provisions of the parties' agreement regarding such claims. The parties agreement subjects a claims for travel and per diem expenses to the exercise of sound discretion of both the union and management.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

In its first exception, the agency contended that the arbitrator's award failed to draw its essence from the parties' agreement. The Authority held that the agency's exception constituted nothing more than disagreement with the arbitrator's interpretation of the agreement which does not provide any basis for finding the award deficient.

In its second exception, the agency contended that the award was contrary to § 7131. The Authority concluded that the arbitrator's award, based upon his interpretation of the parties' agreement that the agency had agreed to pay travel and per diem expenses, was not contrary to § 7131.

In its third exception, the agency contended that the award was contrary to the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5701 et seq., and Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs), 5 CFR part 101-7. The Authority concluded that the arbitrator found that the agency had exercised its discretion under the Travel Expense Act through negotiations by making the determination that the representational activities were sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business. Moreover, the arbitrator clearly directed the payment of travel and per diem expenses only to the extent the expenses are consistent with legal and regulatory requirements and restrictions. According, the Authority concluded that the award was consistent with the Travel and Expense Act and the FTRs.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator determined that the activity violated the parties' agreement by allowing a temporary foreman to do the work of nonsupervisory personnel during periods of overtime. However, the arbitrator noted that it was not clear what impact this had on possible overtime for the three grievants. Nevertheless, the arbitrator awarded backpay for overtime not worked. In its exceptions, the agency contended that the award was contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596. In setting aside the award, the Authority held that because the arbitrator failed to find that but for the violation the grievants would have in fact performed the overtime work and received overtime pay, the award was contrary to the Back Pay Act.

DIGEST NOTES

After a reduction in the grievant's assigned duties and based on the findings of a classification desk audit, the grievant was not given a noncompetitive career ladder promotion. The arbitrator acknowledged that he had no jurisdiction over a classification matter but found that the dispute was arbitrable because the essence of the grievance was that the agency violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement when it changed the grievant's duties and prevented him from demonstrating that he could perform satisfactorily at the higher level. As his award, the arbitrator ordered, among other things, the agency to restore the duties which the grievant previously performed or in some other way provide him with the same opportunities he previously had to demonstrate that he is able to satisfactorily perform at the higher level.

In its first exception, the agency alleged that the award was contrary to § 7121(c)(5) which precludes grievances concerning the classification of any position that does not result in the reduction in grade or pay of an employee. The Authority found that the grievance and the award pertained to whether the grievant was entitled to a noncompetitive promotion and did not directly concern the classification of his position.

In its second exception, the agency contended that the award interfered with management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). The Authority has previously held that § 7106 provides that "nothing" in the Statute shall "affect the authority" of an agency to exercise the rights enumerated in that section. Therefore, the Authority found that to the extent the award restricts the assignment of duties to the grievant or directs the agency to restore the mix of higher and lower-rated duties which the grievant previously performed, the award was deficient as contrary to management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B).

DIGEST NOTES

The grievant alleged that she was not selected for a vacant position because of discrimination over an alleged "whistleblowing" incident. The arbitrator concluded that the activity violated the parties's agreement by repeatedly denying her applications for the desired position, and that the agency's actions were discriminatory and based upon non-merit reasons rather than job related selection criteria. As his award, the arbitrator ordered the agency to immediately select the grievant for the position or, if the position was not available, to grant the grievant priority consideration for the next like position that became available.

In its exceptions, the agency alleged that the award was contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(C) as it interfered with management's right to select. The Authority concluded that the arbitrator failed to make the necessary finding of a direct connection between improper agency action and the failure of the grievant to be selected for promotion. Consequently, the Authority found that portion of the award directing the immediate selection of the grievant to be deficient as contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(C).

DIGEST NOTES

The parties submitted to arbitration the stipulated issue of whether the union's claim for travel and per diem expenses for union negotiators were arbitrable and, if so, whether the applicable provision in the parties' agreement was null and void or unenforceable. The arbitrator held that the grievances were arbitrable disputes over the interpretation and application of the agreement provision. On the substantive issue, the arbitrator found, contrary to the agency's contentions, that nothing in

Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983) (BATF) prohibited agencies and unions from entering into an agreement to reimburse employee union negotiators for travel and per diem expenses. He also found that the guidance in FPM Letter 711-162 did not apply to prevent payment of travel and per diem in this case. Accordingly, the arbitrator sustained the grievances and directed the activity to make the grievants whole for any losses they may have suffered.

In its first exception the agency contended that the arbitrator erred in finding that the agreement provision was "negotiated", and further that the contract language was not the product of bargaining but merely incorporated the existing statutory entitlement. In its second exception the agency contended that the arbitrator improperly resolved an issue relating to the duty to bargain. The Authority held that the arbitrator did not resolve a negotiability issue but rather, the arbitrator interpreted an agreement provision which had been approved by the agency head. Both exceptions, the Authority found, constituted nothing more than disagreement with the arbitrator's interpretation and application of the parties' agreement which does not provide a basis for finding an award deficient.

In the remaining exceptions, the agency alleged that the arbitrator erred in his interpretation and application of the Supreme Court's decision in BATF. Although the Supreme Court in BATF held that there was no entitlement to travel and per diem expenses under § 7131(a), the Authority found that the decision did not pertain to circumstances where, as here, an agency was found to have negotiated a binding agreement.

The agency also alleged that the arbitrator erred in his interpretation of BATF by failing to enforce the requirement that payment of travel and per diem expenses must be certified to be in the interest of the Government. However, the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5701 et seq., does not prohibit an agency from exercising through negotiations, its discretion to determine whether travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for purposes of reimbursement of related travel expenses.

In directing the payment of travel and per diem expenses, the arbitrator did not provide for agency determination of the propriety of the particular travel and per diem expenses under the Federal Travel Regulations [41 C.F.R. part 101-7]. Consequently, the Authority modified the award to assure that it is consistent with the requirements of the FTRs.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the following Union Proposal.

Union Proposal

> Affected individuals will be returned non-competitively to the specific location and position from which they were RIF'ed when the position is vacated and being filled.

The proposal was submitted with regard to a Reduction-in-Force (RIF) whereby employees were involuntarily reassigned to positions of equal grade at different duty stations.

II. Positions of the Parties

The Union argues that the proposal constitutes an "appropriate arrangement" within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management's rights. It refers to the decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2782 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 702 F.2d 1183 (D.C. Cir. 1983), reversing and remanding American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 and Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 91 (1981).

The Agency states that employees covered by the proposal will not be adversely affected by any reduction in force (RIF) because they will have been placed into positions of equal grade. The Agency also alleges that the proposal is nonnegotiable because it interferes with management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(C) to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source. Finally, the Agency alleges that the proposal violates management's right to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) by requiring the reassignment of employees.

III. Analysis

The Union Proposal would require the Agency to select employees who were involuntarily reassigned to a position of equal grade without personal cause for return to their former positions at their former duty stations if and when such positions are vacant and the Agency makes the determination to fill them. The basic issue in this case is whether the proposal constitutes a negotiable appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management's rights under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. In National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986), the Authority stated that henceforth the Authority will determine whether a proposal constitutes a negotiable "appropriate arrangement" under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute by determining whether the proposal "excessively interferes" with the exercise of management's rights. In making such a determination, the Authority will first examine the record in each case to ascertain as a threshold question whether a proposal is in fact intended to be an arrangement for employees adversely affected by management's exercise of its rights. If the Authority concludes that a proposal is in fact intended as an arrangement, the Authority will then determine whether the arrangement is appropriate or whether it is inappropriate because it excessively interferes.

With regard to the threshold question, the Agency contends that the employees subject to the proposal are not adversely affected because they were reassigned to positions of equal grade in a different duty station. We disagree. Employees subject to a RIF in this case could be reassigned to any duty station within the State of Kansas. A change in duty station could require an employee to move or could result in a significant change of commute. We find that effect to be sufficient to meet the first requirement under section 7106(b)(3). Therefore, we find the proposal to be an "arrangement" for employees adversely affected by the exercise of a management right. According to the Union, the proposal is clearly intended to mitigate against an involuntary change in an employee's duty station by requiring selection of the employee for his or her previous position at his or her prior duty station when it is vacant and the Agency decides to fill it.

The issue thus becomes whether the proposal excessively interferes with management's right to select individuals to fill positions or management's right to assign employees. In this case it is a question of whether the right afforded employees under the proposal to return to their previous duty station is outweighed by the effect of the proposal on those management rights. As detailed above, the only effect of the proposal is to require management to select for a vacant position the employee who would still be in that very position if he or she had not been reassigned in a RIF.

In our decision in Kansas Army National Guard we held that a similar requirement was not a substantial burden on management when compared to the detriment suffered by employees demoted in a RIF and the benefit of repromotion conferred by the proposal in that case. While employees covered by the proposal in this case have not been demoted, we conclude that the necessity to relocate as a result of a permanent lateral involuntary reassignment, perhaps across the State, like a demotion causes significant negative impact on affected employees. See Union Statement of Position at 1. With this proposal, as with the one we considered in Kansas Army National Guard, the burden placed by the proposal on management's right to select is not so significant as to outweigh the disruption to an employee's life caused by assignment to a new duty station and the benefit conferred by the proposal of an opportunity for the employee to return to his or her former duty station. For the foregoing reasons, we find that the Union's proposal does not excessively interfere with management's right, under section 7106(a)(2)(C), to select individuals to fill vacant positions from any appropriate source.

The selection of employees to fill the positions they previously held at their former duty stations may entail a reassignment of those employees to their former duty station and thus may also have an effect upon management's right to assign employees. However, we find that this fact would not change the above analysis in that there would not be any different or additional substantive effect, nor would it add to the weight of management's practical needs.

IV. Conclusion

Having found that the employees involuntarily reassigned by RIF in this case were adversely affected by a management decision and that the Union Proposal does not excessively interfere with management's rights, under sections 7106(a)(2)(A) and (a)(2)(C) to assign employees and to fill vacant positions by making selections from any appropriate source, we hold that the proposal is an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) and therefore negotiable.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request, or as otherwise agreed to by the parties, bargain concerning the Union Proposal.*/

Case No. 0-AR-875

OFFICE OF HEARINGS AND APPEALS,

Activity

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Bernard Cushman filed by the Activity under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The Union filed a grievance in this case alleging that the Activity violated Article 22, Section 4 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement by refusing to pay the travel and per diem expenses of the chapter president and chief steward for attendance at a one-day negotiation session in Arlington, Virginia, held at the request of the Activity. The Arbitrator noted that Article 22 of the parties' agreement pertinently provides that "[t]he Employer shall pay travel and per diem costs incurred by the employee negotiators unless a statute or court order mandates otherwise." The Arbitrator further noted that the president had claimed expenses of $662.60 and the steward had claimed expenses of $75.02 and that the Activity had denied the claims. In denying the claims the Activity took the position that after the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983), payment of travel and per diem expenses was not required under the parties' agreement provision and that under the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5701 et seq., payment was precluded because there had been no specific agency head certification that the travel served the convenience of the agency or was otherwise in the primary interest of the Government. The Arbitrator, however, rejected the Activity's position. He found that the requirement of the parties' agreement to pay travel and per diem expenses was unaffected by the decision in BATF. He further found that payment of the expenses was not precluded by the lack of a specific agency head certification that the disputed travel served the convenience of the agency. In this regard he essentially concluded that consistent with the decision in BATF, the parties' agreement constituted the determination by the Activity that travel attendant to representing an exclusive representative in negotiations is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business. Accordingly, as his award, the Arbitrator sustained the grievance and, in doing so, in effect found that management was obligated to pay the grievants' travel and per diem expenses for attendance at the negotiation session in question.

III. EXCEPTION

As its exception the Activity contends that the award is contrary to law, specifically, the Travel Expense Act. In support of this exception, the Activity essentially repeats its position before the Arbitrator by arguing that payment of the travel and per diem expenses is precluded by the Travel Expense Act because there had not been a specific agency head certification that the travel was performed in the primary interest of the Government.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority finds that the Agency's exception fails to establish that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to the Travel Expense Act. The agreement provision enforced by the Arbitrator is essentially the same as the proposal found by the Authority to be within the duty to bargain in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986). In that decision the Authority pertinently ruled that provisions of the Travel Expense Act do not prohibit an agency from exercising through negotiations the discretion which it possesses to determine whether travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for purposes of reimbursement of appropriate travel expenses. Id. at 6. As has been noted, the Arbitrator in this case similarly found that the parties' agreement provision as to the payment of travel and per diem expenses constituted the determination by the Activity that travel attendant to representing an exclusive representative in negotiations is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business. Thus, in view of the Authority's decision in U.S. Customs Service, no basis is provided for finding the award deficient as alleged by the Activity.

In finding the proposal in U.S. Customs Service to be within the duty to bargain, however, the Authority concluded that the proposal would not require the agency to authorize the payment of expenses which do not comport with regulatory requirements and restrictions. Id. at 6. The Authority based its conclusion on the union's acknowledgment that payment of any travel expenses flowing from the proposal, if agreed upon by the parties, would be subject to the provisions of the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs).*/ In this case, the Arbitrator in directing that the claimants are entitled to payments for travel and per diem expenses for attendance at the negotiation session has not expressly addressed whether the claimants are to be authorized and paid the full amount of their respective claims and has not expressly provided for agency determinations regarding the propriety under the FTRs of those respective claims. Consequently, the Authority must modify the award to assure that it is consistent with the requirements of the FTRs.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2425.4 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and for the reasons stated above, the award is modified to provide as follows:

> The grievance is sustained. The claimants are entitled to payment of their travel and per diem expenses for attendance at the negotiation session in question insofar as consistent with applicable requirements of the Federal Travel Regulations.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Martin Lubow filed by the Veterans Administration (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The dispute before the Arbitrator arose when the Activity notified the local union president, the grievant, that official time for his representational activities was to be reduced from 100 percent to 15 percent because of workload demands. The grievant was instructed to return to his duties as a housekeeping aid for 85 percent of his work time. The Arbitrator identified the basic issue in the dispute as what was a reasonable amount of official time under the parties' collective bargaining agreement for the union president to carry out appropriate representational activities.

The Arbitrator issued a nine paragraph award in the matter. In paragraph 1, the Arbitrator determined that under the parties' national and local supplemental collective bargaining agreements the Activity was required to provide union officers with a reasonable amount of official time to enable them to carry out appropriate representational activities while not neglecting their responsibilities as employees to their assigned departments. In paragraphs 4, 5 and 6, here in dispute, the Arbitrator essentially provided as follows:

> 4. The supervisors shall grant sufficient [official time] to the grievant and other union officers to perform appropriate union work for reasonable periods of time, provided there is no work emergency. . . .
> 5. The decision to impose a 15% limitation of [official time] on the union president was arbitrary, capricious, discriminatory, retaliatory and unreasonable. It is revoked. While not granting 100% of official time, 50%, or 80%, I am holding that if the union president's list of anticipated representational duties and time required is 40 hours or more for a given time and if the matters listed are appropriate and the times required are reasonable, that he be granted such [official] time . . . not to exceed 40 hours a week. However, each week should stand on its own. If an anticipated event is cancelled, it shall be the union representative's responsibility to bring that to the attention of his supervisor and to make himself available for his regular duties. The VA may monitor the union official's duties by requiring a log after the fact of how time was actually spent. If a pattern of abuse is found, the VA would then not be acting arbitrarily to take that into account in considering future requests for [official time]. If the parties differ as to what is "appropriate" to work on or what is a "reasonable" amount of time to perform the task, they should negotiate such matters in good faith.

> 6. For each day of annual leave that [the grievant] can prove he spent a full day performing appropriate union work for reasonable periods of time, or part thereof, he shall be provided a substitute day, or part thereof, of annual leave. On the other hand, I see no reason why the grievant should not take a turn at weekend and holiday work, though I think it would impede his effectiveness as union president to put him into the normal shift rotation. The parties are directed to negotiate the details of such an arrangement.

III. EXCEPTION

As its exception, the Agency contends that the paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of the award are deficient because they contravene management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute to assign work. In support of its exception, the Agency argues that the disputed paragraphs are deficient because they prohibit the assignment of work to union officials engaged in representational activities except in emergencies and also prohibit the assignment of work to the union president on weekends and holidays except in emergencies. The Agency further argues that paragraph 6 of the award is also deficient because, by requiring the cancellation of annual leave taken by the union president, the award imposes a retroactive prohibition on management's right to assign work.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority finds that the Agency has misconstrued the Arbitrator's award. In paragraph 1 of the award, the Arbitrator expressly provides that Union officials are to receive only a reasonable amount of official time to carry out appropriate union activities, while not neglecting their assigned duties. Additionally, in paragraph 4, the Arbitrator only requires that supervisors grant "sufficient" time to enable union officers to carry out appropriate activities and then only if there is no work emergency.

Further, in paragraph 5 of the award, the Arbitrator again only provides for granting reasonable amounts of official time for appropriate representational activities, with any differences as to what is "reasonable" and "appropriate" subject to negotiation by the parties. Moreover, contrary to the Agency's second contention, the Arbitrator in paragraph 6 of the award clearly states that there is no reason why the grievant should not be assigned weekend and holiday work, even though, in the Arbitrator's view, it might impede his effectiveness as union president. Thus, the Authority finds, contrary to the Agency's assertions, that the Arbitrator's award does not in any way improperly interfere with management's right to assign work. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, New York-New Jersey Council of District Office Locals, Social Security Administration and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration District Office Operations, 7 FLRA 413 (1981). Furthermore with regard to paragraph 6 of the award, the Authority finds that the recrediting of annual leave taken for periods when official time should have been granted and was improperly denied is not deficient. See, e.g., American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1395 and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, 10 FLRA 18 (1982). The Authority therefore concludes that the Agency has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient as alleged.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Agency's exception is denied.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Arthur Eliot Berkeley filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The issues presented to the Arbitrator concerned, among other things, whether the Agency violated certain provisions of the parties' national agreement when it terminated the payment of travel and per diem expenses of employees who served as union negotiators in bargaining sessions. The Arbitrator noted that Article 4, section 4 of the agreement provided that travel and per diem would be authorized for union negotiators as required by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute. In interpreting this provision, the Arbitrator considered the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983), and determined that nothing in BATF precluded the Agency from agreeing to the payment of the travel and per diem expenses of union negotiators. Thus, he found that the Agency had bargained over and agreed to pay travel and per diem and that the Agency therefore was bound by its agreement. Consequently, the Arbitrator determined that the Agency violated Article 4, section 4 of the agreement and as a remedy ordered the Agency to reimburse union negotiators for travel and per diem expenses incurred retroactive to the date the Agency ceased making such payments. The Arbitrator also retained jurisdiction over implementation of the award for the limited purpose of resolving any reimbursement questions.

III. FIRST, SECOND, THIRD, AND FOURTH EXCEPTIONS

A. Contentions

In its initial exceptions, the Agency contends that the award is incomplete; that the award fails to draw its essence from the agreement; that the award is based on a nonfact; and that the Arbitrator exceeded his authority by retaining jurisdiction during implementation of the award.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that these exceptions fail to establish that the award is deficient on any basis as contended by the Agency. The first three exceptions constitute nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's interpretation and application of the collective bargaining agreement. The Agency in these exceptions is clearly seeking to have its own interpretation of the parties' agreement substituted for that of the Arbitrator and the Authority has held that such exceptions provide no basis for finding an award deficient. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1418 and U.S. International Communication Agency, Voice of America, 9 FLRA 980 (1982). Similarly, the Agency fails to establish that the retention of jurisdiction by the Arbitrator for the limited purpose of resolving any reimbursement questions in implementation of the award is deficient. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Immigration and Naturalization Service Council and U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, 15 FLRA 355 (1984). Accordingly, these exceptions must be denied.

IV. FINAL EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its final exception, the Agency contends that the award is contrary to applicable law. The Agency mentions in this regard, section 7131 of the Statute and applicable travel statutes.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that this exception fails to establish that the award is deficient as alleged by the Agency. In National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), the Authority found the following proposal to be within the duty to bargain:

> The employer agrees to pay the travel expenses incurred by employees while using official time available under the terms of this agreement.

In finding the proposal to be within the duty to bargain, the Authority stated that the Statute is silent on whether travel expenses incurred in the conduct of labor-management relations activities are payable from Federal funds. Id. at 3. The Authority concludes that the Arbitrator's interpretation of the parties' agreement in this case to find management's termination of the payment of travel and per diem expenses constituted a violation of the agreement is not contrary to section 7131 of the Statute.

Moreover, the Authority also ruled in U.S. Customs Service that the proposal in dispute was not inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5701 et seq., because that Act does not prohibit an agency from exercising, through negotiations, its discretion to determine whether travel related to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for purposes of reimbursement of the travel expenses. Id. at 6. The Authority similarly concludes that the Arbitrator's award in this case is not contrary to the Travel Expense Act. The Arbitrator ruled that the Agency agreed in the collective bargaining agreement to pay the travel and per diem expenses of employees serving as union negotiators. The Authority finds that the Arbitrator's interpretation of the agreement effectively constitutes, in terms of U.S. Customs Service, a determination under the agreement that the representational activities involved were sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business.

However, in finding the proposal in U.S. Customs Service to be within the duty to bargain, the Authority concluded that the proposal would not require the agency to authorize the payment of expenses which did not comport with regulatory requirements and restrictions. Id. at 6. The Authority based its conclusion on the union's acknowledgment that the payment of any tavel expenses flowing from the proposal, if agreed upon by the parties, would be subject to the provisions of the Federal Travel Regulations.*/ In this case, the Arbitrator, in directing the reimbursement of union negotiators for travel and per diem expenses retroactive to the date the Agency ceased making such payments, has not expressly provided for agency determinations regarding the propriety under the FTRs of those expenses. Consequently, the Authority must modify the award to assure that it is consistent with the requirements of the FTRs.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2425.4 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and for the reasons stated above, the Agency's first four exceptions are denied and that portion of the award directing the reimbursement of travel and per diem expenses is modified to provide as follows:

*/ The FTRs, 41 CFR part 101-7, have been held to be Government-wide rules or regulations within the meaning of the Statute. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 and U.S. Army Engineer District, Kansas City, Missouri, 13 FLRA 23, 24 (1983).

Due to the violation of the National Agreement found above, the Agency shall reimburse, insofar as consistent with applicable requirements of the Federal Travel Regulations, union negotiators for travel and per diem expenses retroactive to the date the Agency ceased making such payments and shall pay same pursuant to the agreed upon contract language.

Issued, Washington, D.C. April 21, 1986.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Robert J. Ables filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance protested the refusal of a supervisor to recommend the grievant, a GS-12 patent examiner, for a career-ladder promotion to GS-13. The grievant had been eligible for promotion for about two years, his productivity for the most recent six-month period had risen to the point where it was deemed sufficient for promotion to the next higher grade, and the supervisor had rated the grievant's performance as "fully satisfactory" in his most recent performance appraisal. However, the supervisor determined that he could not recommend the grievant for promotion to GS-13 because of the quality of his work. The supervisor based his determination upon a review of a six-case sample of the grievant's work. The Arbitrator found that the work contained a number of errors and insufficiencies and concluded that the grievant still required close review and further instruction.

The Arbitrator identified the immediate issue in the case as whether the grievant had demonstrated the ability to perform examiner duties at the GS-13 level. The Arbitrator found that while an eligible examiner in a career-ladder plan had a right under the parties' collective bargaining agreement to be "considered" for promotion, the terms of the agreement clearly implied that not all examiners could expect to be promoted. The Arbitrator noted that the parties estimated that promotions from GS-12 to GS-13 are authorized about 90 percent of the time. The Arbitrator further found that there was no evidence that the parties had agreed that satisfactory performance of all performance standards of an examiner's position required a decision that the examiner be promoted. The Arbitrator determined that the parties' agreement contemplated that management officials have the discretion to judge the ability of a career-ladder examiner to perform at the next higher level, but that the discretion was limited by a requirement that the exercise of that judgment not be arbitrary or capricious.

The Arbitrator concluded that the supervisor was arbitrary in this case. In reaching that conclusion, the Arbitrator found that the supervisor's review of the sampling of the grievant's work was made in anticipation of grievance litigation and after the six cases had already been routinely cleared in the usual course of business of the office. The Arbitrator further found that the time to judge the quality of the work was when it was first done, and he also noted that the supervisor himself had previously cleared four of the six cases that he afterwards subjected to the more careful quality review.

As to the quality of the grievant's work, the Arbitrator found that it was not essential to make a determination on the relative merits of the technical position of the parties as to each of the grievant's cases reviewed by the supervisor. The Arbitrator determined that it was sufficient to conclude, without an ultimate finding on the technical aspects of the grievant's work, that there was a sizable question as to whether the grievant's work performance was below the level of other GS-12 examiners, almost all of whom had been routinely promoted to GS-13.

The Arbitrator found that an examiner could expect to be promoted unless management showed a substantial basis for withholding the promotion, and that management had not made such a showing in this case. Consequently, the Arbitrator decided that the Agency was arbitrary in withholding the grievant's promotion to GS-13. The Arbitrator therefore sustained the grievance and, as his award, directed the Agency to promote the grievant to GS-13 retroactively with backpay.

III. EXCEPTION

In its exception, the Agency essentially contends that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to law. In support of this contention, the Agency primarily argues that the award is contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596, because the Arbitrator failed to make the necessary finding that but for the Agency violation of the parties' agreement, the grievant would have been promoted. The Agency further notes that an arbitrator can abridge management's right to promote under section 7106(a) of the Statute only if the arbitrator finds a direct connection between an improper agency action and the failure to promote the aggrieved employee.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

In order for an award of backpay to be authorized under the Back Pay Act, the arbitrator must find that an agency personnel action was unjustified or unwarranted, that such personnel action directly resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of the aggrieved employee's pay, allowances, or differentials and that but for such action, the grievant would not have suffered such a withdrawal or reduction. U.S. Army Missile Command Redstone Arsenal and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1858, 19 FLRA No. 38 (1985). In this case, the Authority concludes that the Arbitrator has not made the findings necessary for a proper award of backpay. The Arbitrator acknowledged that not all eligible GS-12 examiners could expect to be promoted to GS-13. In such circumstances, the Arbitrator's finding that the supervisor's failure to recommend the grievant for promotion was arbitrary does not constitute the requisite determination that but for the unwarranted or unjustified action, the grievant definitely would have been promoted to GS-13. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2502 and U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Prison System, Federal Correctional Institution, 17 FLRA No. 61 (1985). Accordingly, the Authority concludes that the Arbitrator's award of backpay is contrary to the Back Pay Act.

Moreover, with regard to filling positions, the Authority has specifically held that section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute reserves to management the right to make the actual substantive determination to select or not to select employees for promotion. See, e.g., Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Fort Knox Exchange, Fort Knox, Kentucky and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2303, AFL-CIO, 8 FLRA 256 (1982). In conjunction with the decisions of the Authority specifying when an award of a retroactive promotion is authorized under the Back Pay Act, the Authority has held that management's right may be constrained consistent with section 7106(a)(2)(C) and an agency ordered to select a particular employee for promotion only if the arbitrator finds that the employee was affected by improper agency action that directly resulted in the failure of the employee to be promoted when the employee otherwise would have been. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3553, AFL-CIO and Veterans Administration Medical Center, New Orleans, Louisiana, 18 FLRA No. 65 (1985). In this case, as indicated above, the Arbitrator did not make the findings necessary to constrain management's right to determine not to promote the grievant. The Authority therefore concludes that the Arbitrator's award directing the Agency to promote the grievant retroactively to GS-13 is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Arbitrator's award is modified by striking the provisions for retroactive promotion and backpay.

Issued, Washington, D.C., April 21, 1986.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Howard M. Golob filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievant objected to her performance evaluation rating of "Fully Satisfactory," under new performance standards, for a ten-month period ending on September 30, 1984, the end of the rating cycle established by the Agency. The grievant had received a rating of "Excellent" under previous standards. Article 21, Section 6A of the parties' collective bargaining agreement provided as follows:

> A. Performance appraisals are normally prepared on a regular cycle. For employees other than seasonal employees this will be a twelve (12) month cycle except for certain situations as set forth in SSA policy.

The Arbitrator found that under the agreement the grievant was entitled to receive a performance appraisal covering a full 12 months regardless of whether that period coincided with the rating cycle followed by the Agency. The Arbitrator concluded that the Agency violated the parties' agreement by rating the grievant's performance at the end of the regular Agency rating cycle rather than at the end of 12 months. He found a further violation of the agreement in the Agency's failure to provide informal discussions and progress reviews to inform the grievant that her performance was not at the previous level of "Excellent." As his award, the Arbitrator ordered that the ten-month rating be stricken from the grievant's personnel records and be used only as a progress review and that the grievant be given a new appraisal for the requisite 12-month period.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its primary exception, the Agency contends that the award is contrary to law and Government-wide regulation. More specifically, the Agency contends that the award violates section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute because the Arbitrator substituted his judgment for that of management with respect to the grievant's performance appraisal. As to its Government-wide regulation contention, the Agency specifically contends that the award violates 5 C.F.R. § 430.201(c)(3), which provides that positions for which employment is not reasonably expected to exceed 120 days in a 12-month period may be excluded from the requirement for a performance appraisal. In support of this latter contention, the Agency in essence argues that the regulation requires it to appraise an employee who is in a position for more than 120 days, does not require that an employee be in the position for a full 12 months before a performance rating can be made, and permits the appraisal of an employee after 120 days in a particular position.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority finds that the Agency fails to establish that the award is contrary to the Statute or Government-wide regulation. The Authority first concludes that the Arbitrator did not substitute his judgment for that of management as to what the grievant's performance appraisal should be, but merely directed that the grievant be reevaluated by management for the requisite period under the established elements and standards. Such an award is not contrary to the Statute as alleged. Bureau of Engraving and Printing, U.S. Department of the Treasury and Washington Plate Printers Union, Local No. 2, IPDEU, AFL-CIO, 20 FLRA No. 39 (1985).

Second, the Authority has previously decided that a proposal requiring annual performance appraisals is consistent with law and Government-wide rules and regulations and is within the duty to bargain. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3028 and Department of Health and Human Services, Public Health Service, Alaska Area Native Health Service, 13 FLRA 697 (1984); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1968 and Department of Transportation, Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, Massena, New York, 5 FLRA 70 (1981), affirmed as to other matters sub nom. AFGE, Local 1968 v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 565 (D.C. Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 926 (1983). The Arbitrator concluded in his interpretation of Article 21, Section 6A of the parties' agreement that the grievant was entitled to an annual performance appraisal covering the full 12 months. The Agency fails to show that the negotiated provision, as interpreted by the Arbitrator to require appraisals on an annual basis, is violative of the Statute or the cited regulation. Further, there is nothing in 5 C.F.R. part 430 which imposes a specific requirement that performance appraisals must be accomplished on particular dates. The Authority concludes that the Agency is merely disagreeing with the Arbitrator's reasoning and conclusions and with his interpretation of the parties' agreement. It is well-established that such disagreement provides no basis for finding an award deficient. E.g., Federal Correctional Institution, Petersburg, Virginia and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2052, Petersburg, Virginia, 13 FLRA 108 (1983).

IV. OTHER EXCEPTIONS

A. Contention

In its other exceptions, the Agency contends that the Arbitrator's finding that the appraisal should cover a 12-month period and that the grievant was not given required counselling is based on nonfacts and, further, that the award fails to draw its essence from the parties' agreement.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Authority concludes that the Agency's allegations merely constitute disagreement with the Arbitrator's interpretation of the collective bargaining agreement and as already indicated above, such disagreement provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Agency's exceptions are denied.

Issued, Washington, D.C., April 21, 1986.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Robert W. Smedley filed by the Agency pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The issue before the Arbitrator was whether the grievant was entitled to travel and per diem expenses when she performed certain representational activities on official time. The Arbitrator concluded that the parties had negotiated and agreed upon the payment of travel and per diem expenses for union representatives engaged in representational activities. In reaching that conclusion, the Arbitrator cited and discussed Article 27, Section 10 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement, which provided that travel would be paid in accordance with the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute; Article 6, wherein the parties had negotiated expense report requirements as set forth in Appendix A of the agreement; and Appendix A itself, which included provision for travel and per diem expense claims. As to Appendix A, the Arbitrator found that merely filling out the form did not guarantee payment of the expenses, but that a claim for such expenses is subject to the exercise of the sound discretion of both the union and management. The Arbitrator determined, however, that management cannot simply deny all payments when it definitely made a contractual commitment to pay the expenses in proper cases. As his award, the Arbitrator directed that the union representative be reimbursed for her reasonable and necessary travel and per diem expenses for the representational functions involved, upon submission of the information required in Appendix A.

II. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contention

In its first exception, the Agency contends that the Arbitrator's award fails to draw its essence from the parties' agreement. In support of this contention, the Agency argues that the Arbitrator did not set forth specifically where in the parties' agreement the Agency's obligation to pay travel and per diem is contained, other than Appendix A. The Agency further argues that the Arbitrator placed a great deal of weight on Appendix A and ignored language in the Appendix that it was not to be read as source of rights to official time or travel and per diem expenses.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

It is well-established that in order for an award to be found deficient as failing to draw its essence from the parties' agreement, the party making the allegation must demonstrate that the award cannot in any rational way be derived from the agreement; or that the award is so unfounded in reason and fact, so unconnected with the wording and purpose of the agreement, as to manifest an infidelity to the obligation of the arbitrator; or that the award evidences a manifest disregard for the agreement; or that the award does not represent a plausible interpretation of the agreement. E.g., American Federation of Government Employees, National Border Patrol Council and U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, Southern Region, Dallas, Texas, 3 FLRA 540, 543 (1980). In this case, the Authority finds that the Agency has failed to demonstrate that the Arbitrator's award does not draw its essence from the parties' agreement under any of the tests described. Rather, the exception merely constitutes disagreement with the Arbitrator's interpretation of the agreement and therefore does not provide any basis for finding the award deficient. E.g., The Philadelphia Regional Office, District Office Operations, Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3186, 15 FLRA 211 (1984).

III. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contention

In its second exception, the Agency in effect contends that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to section 7131 of the Statute because, as interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983), the Agency is not obligated under that provision to pay travel and per diem expenses for union representatives on official time.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Arbitrator in this case found that the Agency had agreed to pay the travel and per diem expenses of union representatives performing labor-management relations activities. The Authority therefore finds that while the Agency is correct in stating that section 7131 of the Statute does not require agencies to pay travel and per diem to union representatives on official time, in this case, as determined by the Arbitrator, the Agency negotiated and agreed to pay such expenses. In National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), the Authority found the following union proposal to be within the duty to bargain under the Statute:

> The employer agrees to pay the travel expenses incurred by employees while using official time available under the terms of this agreement.

In finding the proposal to be within the duty to bargain, the Authority stated that the Statute is silent on whether travel expenses incurred in the conduct of labor-management relations activities are payable from Federal funds. Id. at 3. In this case, the Authority concludes that the Arbitrator's award, based upon his interpretation of the parties' agreement that the Agency had agreed to pay travel and per diem expenses, is not contrary to section 7131 of the Statute as alleged by the Agency in its exception.

IV. THIRD EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its third exception, the Agency contends that even assuming that the Arbitrator was correct in finding that the Agency had agreed to pay the travel and per diem expenses of union representatives on official time, any such agreement is void because the subject of travel and per diem is outside the duty to bargain under the Statute. In support of its contention, the Agency argues that the duty to bargain only extends to matters which are not inconsistent with Federal law and Government-wide rules and regulations, and that negotiation of travel and per diem is inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5701 et seq., and Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs), 5 CFR part 101-7, which govern payment of such expenses. The Agency further argues that the Travel Expense Act requires an evaluation of each individual travel situation and a case-by-case determination by an agency as to whether an employee's travel is sufficiently within the interest of the Government so as to constitute official business warranting payment of related expenses and, moreover, that any blanket requirement to pay expenses such as the Arbitrator found the Agency had agreed to in this case would be contrary to that law.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

As indicated above in the analysis and conclusion concerning the Agency's second exception, the Authority expressly held in U.S. Customs Service that a proposal essentially to the same effect as the Arbitrator's interpretation of the parties' agreement here involved was within the duty to bargain under the Statute. Moreover, the Authority also expressly found that the proposal was not inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act because that Act does not prohibit an agency from exercising, through negotiations, its discretion to determine whether travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for purposes of reimbursement of related travel expenses. Id. at 6. In this case, the Arbitrator determined that the Agency agreed to pay the travel and per diem expenses related to labor-management relations activities. The Authority finds that the Arbitrator's determination effectively constitutes, in terms of U.S. Customs Service, a finding that the Agency had exercised its discretion under the Travel Expense Act through negotiations and had determined that the representational activities were sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business.

Additionally, in finding the proposal in U.S. Customs Service to be within the duty to bargain, the Authority concluded that the proposal would not require the agency to authorize the payment of expenses which did not comport with regulatory requirements and restrictions. Id. at 6. The Authority based its conclusion on the union's acknowlegment that the payment of any travel expenses flowing from the proposal, if agreed upon by the parties, would be subject to the provisions of the FTRs.*/ In this case, the Arbitrator provided that the travel and per diem expense claim of the union representative was subject to the review of the union and management in their sound discretion and expressly directed reimbursement of only reasonable and necessary expenses of the representative. Thus, the Arbitrator clearly directed the payment of travel and per diem expenses only to the extent the expenses are consistent with legal and regulatory requirements and restrictions. Accordingly, the Authority concludes that the Arbitrator's award is consistent with the Travel Expense Act and the FTRs and that the Agency has failed to establish that the award is deficient as alleged in this exception.

V. DECISION

Based on the foregoing analysis and conclusions, the Agency's exceptions are denied.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator H. Morton Rosen filed by the Department of the Navy (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance alleged that the Activity failed to allocate overtime impartially, in accordance with the parties' collective bargaining agreement, during a three-month period. The grievance claimed that an individual who had been temporarily promoted to foreman for the months in question, performed the work of a machinist during overtime, thereby depriving three other machinists of overtime work.

The Arbitrator determined that the Activity had violated the agreement by allowing the temporary foreman to do the work of nonsupervisory personnel during periods of overtime. The Arbitrator noted that it was not clear from the overtime record whether the entries constituted overtime that might have been offered and declined and, further, that there was no evidence that any of the three employees were actually available and willing to work on each occasion that the foreman worked overtime. Nevertheless, the Arbitrator found that the Activity's actions directly caused the three employees to be deprived of overtime pay that they might have earned had the foreman not worked overtime during that period. Accordingly, as his award, the Arbitrator awarded one hundred and six hours of retroactive overtime pay to be divided equally among the three affected employees.

III. EXCEPTION

In its exception, the Agency contends that the award violates the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596, because the Arbitrator made no finding that any of the employees would have worked any specific overtime had the Activity not violated the agreement, and that he therefore improperly awarded them backpay for overtime that they might have worked.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

It is well-established that in order for an award of backpay to be authorized under the Back Pay Act, the arbitrator must determine not only that the aggrieved employee was affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action, but also that such personnel action directly resulted in the withdrawal or reduction in the pay, allowances, or differentials that the employee otherwise would have earned or received. E.g., U.S. Army Aberdeen Proving Ground and Local 2424, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO, 19 FLRA No. 35 (1985).

In this case, although the Arbitrator determined that the Activity violated the parties' agreement and that the violation directly affected the three employees, he failed to make all of the findings necessary for an award of backpay. Specifically, he failed to find that but for the violation the grievants would have in fact performed the overtime work and received overtime pay. Jefferson Barracks National Cemetery, St. Louis, Missouri and National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-116, 13 FLRA 703 (1984). On the contrary, the Arbitrator found that there was no evidence that any of the three employees were actually available and willing to work every time the foreman worked overtime. Consequently, there is an insufficient legal basis for an award of backpay in this case. The Authority therefore concludes that the Arbitrator's award of retroactive overtime pay is deficient as contrary to the Back Pay Act.

IV. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Arbitrator's award is set aside.

Issued, Washington, D.C., April 22, 1986.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Albert J. Hoban filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievant, a GS-9 support service specialist claimed that he should have received a noncompetitive, career ladder promotion to GS-11. His position had previously been graded GS-11 and was identified as one with promotion potential to GS-11, subject to further classification review. However, when funds for the Agency were reduced, the grievant was assigned a number of duties of lower-graded positions that had been eliminated, duties that were not within his position description. When the grievant was eligible for a career promotion to GS-11, his supervisor forwarded a recommendation that he be promoted to the Personnel Office for review. When no action was taken on the recommendation after almost five months, the grievance in this matter was filed. The supervisor's recommendation eventually was disapproved based upon the findings of a classification desk audit that the grievant was working most of the time on duties at or below the GS-9 level. The Agency argued before the Arbitrator that the grievance was not arbitrable because it involved the classification of the grievant's position and, further, that even if the grievance was arbitrable, the grievant was not entitled to a promotion because two conditions for promotion had not been met, i.e., that the employee must demonstrate the ability to perform at the next higher level and that there must be enough work at the higher level.

The Arbitrator acknowledged that he had no jurisdiction over a classification matter but found that the dispute was arbitrable because the essence of the grievance was that the Agency violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement when it changed the grievant's duties and prevented him from demonstrating that he could perform satisfactorily at the GS-11 level. The Arbitrator found that under Section 13 of the parties' agreement an employee such as the grievant in a career ladder position with potential for a higher grade was entitled to a chance to demonstrate ability to perform at the higher grade. As his award, the Arbitrator provided as follows:

1. The grievance is arbitrable.
2. The grievant's present classification is correct.
3. The Agency violated the rights of the grievant as a career employee by assigning him to duties which were not in his position description and altering the balance between higher and lower rated duties causing a reduction in his opportunities to demonstrate his ability to perform at the GS-11 level.

4. The Agency must comply with the letter and intent of the collective bargaining agreement, particularly Section 13, by restoring as near as practical, the balance of higher and lower rated duties which the grievant performed [previously]; or in some other way provide him with the same opportunities he then had to demonstrate that he is able to satisfactorily perform at the GS-11 level.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception, the Agency contends that the award is contrary to section 7121(c)(5) of the Statute which precludes grievances concerning the classification of any position that does not result in the reduction in grade or pay of an employee. The Agency argues that this dispute concerns the classification of the grievant's position and, therefore, is not grievable or arbitrable.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority has held that a grievance and an award which pertain to whether a grievant is entitled to a noncompetitive promotion do not concern the classification of any position within the meaning of section 7121(c)(5). See, e.g., U.S. Army Missile Command and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1858, 15 FLRA 286 (1984). The Authority finds that the grievance and award in this case pertain to whether the grievant was entitled to a noncompetitive promotion and do not directly concern the classification of his position. In that regard, and particularly in view of the Arbitrator's acknowledgement that he was without jurisdiction to consider classification matters, the Authority finds that the Arbitrator's statement in paragraph 2 of his award that "[t]he grievant's present classification is correct[,]" constitutes nothing more than a recognition of the fact that the desk audit had determined that based upon the duties assigned and performed the grievant's position was properly classififed at GS-9. The Authority concludes that the Agency has failed to establish that the award is deficient as alleged. Accordingly, this exception must be denied.

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second exception, the Agency contends that the award interferes with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Authority has repeatedly recognized that the plain language of section 7106 provides that "nothing" in the Statute shall "affect the authority" of an agency to exercise the rights enumerated in that section. E.g., American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1968 and Department of Transportation, Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, Massena, New York, 5 FLRA 70, 79 (1981), aff'd sub nom. AFGE Local 1968 v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 565 (D.C. Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 926 (1983). Therefore, the Authority has consistently held that an arbitration award may not interpret or enforce a collective bargaining agreement so as to improperly deny an agency the authority to exercise its rights under section 7106 or result in the substitution of the arbitrator's judgment for that of the agency in the exercise of those rights. Id.; National Treasury Employees Union and U.S. Customs Service, 17 FLRA No. 12 (1985); U.S. Customs Service, Laredo, Texas and Chapter 145, National Treasury Employees Union, 17 FLRA No. 17 (1985). Section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, in particular, reserves to management officials the authority to assign work. In this case, to the extent that the Arbitrator restricts the assignment of duties to the grievant or directs the Agency to restore the mix of higher and lower-rated duties which the grievant had previously performed, the Arbitrator substituted his judgment for that of management as to the duties to be assigned to the grievant. Therefore, the Authority finds that to that extent the award is deficient as contrary to management's right to assign work pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(B).

V. DECISION

Accordingly, based on the above reasons, the Arbitrator's award is modified by striking paragraphs 3 and 4 and substituting the following:

3. The Agency violated the rights of the grievant as a career employee by causing a reduction in his opportunities to demonstrate his ability to perform at the GS-11 level.

4. The Agency must comply with the letter and intent of the collective bargaining agreement, particularly Section 13, by providing him with opportunities to demonstrate his ability to perform satisfactorily at the GS-11 level.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Richard H. Siegel filed by the Veterans Administration (Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievant alleged that she was not selected for vacant claims examiner positions for which she applied over a three-year period because of discrimination over an alleged "whistleblowing" incident and over her activities as a union representative. The Arbitrator determined that the grievant was fully qualified for positions up to and including that of Claims Examiner GS-11. He found that the selecting officials had used highly subjective criteria and had selected persons who were no more experienced or less experienced than the grievant. The Arbitrator concluded that the Activity violated the parties' agreement by repeatedly denying her applications for the desired position, and that the Agency's actions were discriminatory and based upon non-merit reasons rather than job related selection criteria. In his award, the Arbitrator sustained the grievance in its entirety and, as a remedy, directed the Agency to immediately select the grievant for the position of GS-11 Claims Examiner in the Adjudication Division. The Arbitrator added that if there was no GS-11 Claims Examiner position vacant at the time of his award, then the grievant was to be granted priority consideration for such a position as soon as one became vacant. The Arbitrator also denied the grievant's request for retroactive promotion and backpay.

III. EXCEPTION

A. Contention

As its exception, the Agency alleges that the award is contrary to law. Specifically, the Agency contends the award violates management's right to select under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute in that the Arbitrator failed to determine that the grievant would have been selected for any of the positions for which she applied had the Activity not violated the agreement.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Authority has consistently held in cases of this nature that management's right to make the actual selections for promotion can only be abridged if the Arbitrator finds a direct connection between improper agency action and the failure of a specific employee to be selected for promotion. E.g., Office of the Secretary, U.S. Department of Transportation and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3313, AFL-CIO, 17 FLRA No. 14 (1985); American Federation of Government Employees, Local 12 and United States Department of Labor, 15 FLRA 543 (1984). In terms of this case, the Authority concludes that the Arbitrator failed to make the necessary finding. Although the Arbitrator found that the Activity had violated the parties' agreement by failing to select the grievant and by actions that were discriminatory in nature and based upon non-merit reasons rather than job related selection criteria, he did not find that the grievant would have been selected but for the unwarranted actions. Consequently, that portion of the Arbitrator's award directing the immediate selection of the grievant for the position of GS-11 Claims Examiner is deficient as contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute.

IV. DECISION

Accordingly, based upon the above analysis and conclusions, the Arbitrator's award is modified by striking the portion found deficient.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Leo Weiss filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The parties submitted to arbitration the stipulated issue of whether the Union's claim for travel and per diem expenses for union negotiators was an arbitrable matter and, if so, whether Article I, Section 1.8, paragraph 2 of the Basic Agreement is null and void or unenforceable. That provision in part provided that "[e]mployees authorized to represent the Union shall be granted official time, travel and per diem for negotiations . . . and related activities." According to the stipulated facts, the Basic Agreement was approved by the Agency contingent upon the understanding that travel and per diem payments under Article I, Section 1.8 meet certification requirements that the travel is in the primary interest of the Government and in accordance with rulings of the Comptroller General. Upon issuance of the Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983), and relying on Office of Personnel Management (OPM) guidance contained in Federal Personnel Manual Letter 711-162, the Agency declared the language of Article I, Section 1.8 relating to payment of travel and per diem expenses to be null and void. Following this action, the Activity denied the claims of three employees for their travel and per diem expenses in connection with negotiations. The employees filed the grievances which are the subject of this arbitration.

The Arbitrator held that the grievances were arbitrable disputes over the interpretation and application of Section 1.8 of the Agreement. On the substantive issue, the Arbitrator rejected the Activity's interpretation of the Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF), and found that nothing in that decision prohibited agencies and unions from entering into an agreement to reimburse employee union negotiators for travel and per diem expenses. He also found that the guidance provided in FPM Letter 711-162 did not apply to prevent payment of travel and per diem in this case. Consequently, he ruled that Section 1.8 of the Basic Agreement was not null and void but an enforceable provision which the Activity had violated by refusing to pay the grievants for travel and per diem expenses related to attendance at negotiating meetings. He sustained the grievances and directed the Activity to make the grievants whole for any losses they may have suffered.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception, the Agency contends that the Arbitrator erred by finding that Section 1.8 was "negotiated" into the Basic Agreement, and further argues that the contract language was not the product of bargaining but merely incorporated the existing statutory entitlement.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority finds that the Agency in this exception has in no manner shown how the Arbitrator's award, based upon his interpretation of the parties' agreement, is deficient. Instead, the exception constitutes nothing more that disagreement with the Arbitrator's interpretation of the parties' agreement and therefore does not provide any basis for finding the award deficient. E.g., The Philadelphia Regional Office, District Office Operations, Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3186, 15 FLRA 211 (1984). Accordingly, this exception must be denied.

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second exception, the Agency contends that the Arbitrator failed to recognize that the Agency had constructively disapproved Section 1.8 as written, by making its approval contingent upon the understanding that any travel and per diem payments made pursuant to the provision must meet the certification requirements that travel is in the primary interest of the Government and in accordance with rulings of the Comptroller General. Consequently, the Agency maintains that the Arbitrator improperly resolved an issue relating to the duty to bargain.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

As to this exception, the Authority finds that contrary to the Agency's assertions, the issue decided by the Arbitrator in this case does not relate to the negotiability of a Union proposal or otherwise relate to the duty to bargain under the Statute. In this regard, the Agency's reliance on Federal Correctional Institution, Texarcana, Texas, Federal Prison System and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2429, Texarcana, Texas, 19 FLRA No. 26 (1985) is misplaced. The dispute in that case specifically involved management's refusal to approve certain provisions in a supplemental agreement on the ground that they interfered with management's rights under section 7106(a) of the Statute. The Authority held that the award in that case was deficient because the arbitrator, by deciding that the agency had an obligation to bargain over the disputed provisions, had necessarily decided a negotiability dispute, and such disputes can only be resolved by the Authority. In this case, however, the Arbitrator was asked to interpret a provision embodied in a negotiated agreement which had been approved by the agency head. The Authority therefore concludes that this exception constitutes nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's interpretation and application of the parties' collective bargaining agreement and provides no basis for finding the award deficient. Id.; National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1418 and U.S. International Communication Agency, Voice of America, 9 FLRA 980 (1982). Accordingly, this exception must be denied.

V. THIRD, FOURTH AND FIFTH EXCEPTIONS

In its third exception, the Agency alleges that the award is deficient because the Arbitrator erred in his interpretation and application of the Supreme Court's decision in BATF to the facts of this case. The Agency contends that the Arbitrator in making his award overlooked the essential requirement that before travel and per diem expenses can be approved an agency must make a determination that the travel serves the convenience of the agency or is in the primary interest of the Government. The Agency further contends that such a determination must be made on a case-by-case basis and, therefore, the provision in Section 1.8 of the agreement establishing a blanket policy of paying travel and per diem expenses is unenforceable.

Similarly, in its fourth and fifth exceptions, the Agency alleges again in essence that the Arbitrator erred in his interpretation of the BATF decision by failing to enforce the requirement that payment of travel and per diem expenses must be certified to be in the interest of the Government. The Agency maintains that Article I, Section 1.8 is unenforceable and therefore the Union's claim is not grievable or arbitrable and, further, the Arbitrator's award requires the performance of an illegal act, i.e., payment of travel and per diem without the required certification.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

In its decision in BATF, the Supreme Court held that there was no entitlement to travel and per diem expenses under section 7131(a) of the Statute, but the decision did not pertain to circumstances where, as here, an agency was found to have negotiated an agreement provision requiring it to pay such expenses. In this regard, Article 1, Section 1.8 of the parties' agreement in this case which the Arbitrator found to be binding on the Agency is essentially the same as the proposal found by the Authority to be within the duty to bargain in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986). The proposal in that case provided:

> The employer agrees to pay the travel expenses incurred by employees while using official time available under the terms of this agreement.

In that decision, which was rendered in light of the Supreme Court's decision in BATF, the Authority stated that the Statute is silent on whether travel expenses incurred in the conduct of labor-management relations activities are payable from Federal funds. Id. at 3.

Moreover, the Authority ruled in U.S. Customs Service, that the proposal in dispute was not inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5701 et seq., because that Act does not prohibit an agency from exercising, through negotiations, its discretion to determine whether travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for purposes of reimbursement of related travel expenses. Id. at 6. In this case, the Arbitrator determined that the Agency agreed to pay the travel and per diem expenses related to the labor-management relations activities covered by the official time provision of the parties' agreement. The Authority finds that the Arbitrator's determination effectively constitutes, in terms U.S. Customs Service, a finding that the Agency had exercised its discretion under the Travel Expense Act through negotiations and had thereby determined that the covered activities were sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business. Therefore, the Agency's third, fourth and fifth exceptions also fail to establish that the award is deficient as alleged. Accordingly, these exceptions must also be denied.

Additionally, in finding the proposal in U.S. Customs Service to be within the duty to bargain, the Authority concluded that the proposal would not require the agency to authorize the payment of expenses which did not comport with regulatory requirements and restrictions. Id. at 6. The Authority based its conclusion on the union's acknowledgment that the payment of any travel expenses flowing from the proposal, if agreed upon by the parties, would be subject to the provisions of the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs).[1] In this case, the Arbitrator in directing the payment of travel and per diem expenses in connection with the covered activities did not provide for the Agency to determine the propriety of particular travel and per diem expenses under the FTRs. Consequently, the Authority must modify the award to assure that it is consistent with the requirements of the FTRs.

VI. DECISION

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2425.4 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and for the reasons stated above, the Agency's exceptions are denied but that portion of the award directing payment of travel and per diem expenses is modified to provide as follows:[2]

[1] The FTRs, 41 CFR part 101-7, have been held to be Government-wide rules or regulations within the meaning of the Statute. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 and U.S. Army Engineer District, Kansas City, Missouri, 13 FLRA 23, 24 (1983).

> The Employer is hereby directed to make the Grievants whole for any losses they may have suffered as a result of its breach of Article 1, Section 1.6 of the Basic Agreement, insofar as consistent with applicable requirements of the Federal Travel Regulations.

[2] In view of this decision, the Authority finds that it is not necessary to rule on the Union's motion for leave to file a request for reconsideration of the Authority's Order of January 14, 1986, granting the Agency's request for a temporary stay of the Arbitrator's award.

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Stanford C. Madden filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.

Issued, Washington, D.C., April 16, 1986.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is nonnegotiable that for RIF purposes would award employees four years of additional service credit for a rating of outstanding and three years for a rating of excellent. Under OPM's RIF regulation [5 C.F.R. 351.504(d), 51 Fed. Reg. 318-326 (1986)], a Government-wide regulation, employees are to be credited with twenty additional years of service for a performance rating of outstanding; sixteen additional years for a rating of exceeds fully successful; and twelve additional years of a rating of fully successful.

The agency had also alleged that the proposal conflicted with an agency regulation for which there was a compelling need to preserve the merit principle of equal treatment between present and former employees who did not receive the same service credit. In addition the agency alleged that the proposal would require it to treat nonunit employees covered by its regulation differently in a RIF than unit employees covered by the proposal. The Authority held, in light of OPM's RIF regulation, that the agency neither established the compelling need for its regulation nor that the proposal would require it to treat unit and nonunit employees differently.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority adopts the Judge's decision that the agency violated sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) by refusing to furnish necessary information to the union as requested under section 7114(b). The Judge concluded that since the union had indicated to the agency that the information sought, the performance appraisals of all bargaining unit employees, would have allowed the union to determine whether certain employees' appraisals had been predetermined or based upon discriminatory considerations in violation of the parties' collective bargaining agreement, the union had not failed to provide the agency with sufficient reasons why the appraisals were necessary. The Judge also determined that the request for the appraisals was not burdensome and that it was not contrary to the Privacy Act because the Union clearly indicated to the Agency that it would accept the appraisals in a sanitized condition.

The Authority specifically did not adopt the Judge's dicta that "it is incumbent on the Respondent to offer some alternative means of providing the data pursuant to the request."

DIGEST NOTES

A final award by an individual arbitrator in interest arbitration is directly reviewable by the Authority even if the arbitration proceeding is at the direction of FSIP and the arbitrator is a FSIP Member. An impasse was reached in negotiations between the parties which was referred to the Panel under § 7119. The parties accepted the recommendation of the Panel that they submit the dispute to mediation-arbitration procedures in which the first attempt would be to resolve the matter through mediation. The Panel advised the parties that should the issue not be resolved in this manner, the mediator/arbitrator, who in this case was the Chairman of FSIP, would dispose of the matter by issuing a "final decision." Following a failure of the parties to resolve the dispute, the Chairman of FSIP issued an "Arbitrator's Opinion and Decision." The Authority held (that the decision was a final decision) that it was an interest arbitration award issued by an individual arbitrator and not a final action of the Panel under § 7119, and that the award was directly reviewable by the Authority on exceptions filed by the agency under § 7122.

As his award in an interest arbitration proceeding, the arbitrator directed that the union's proposal for a class A (AUTOVON) telephone line to be provided in the union's office at the employer's expense, be withdrawn. The arbitrator noted, however, that the union president who was located at another facility had an AUTOVON telephone line in his office and that the activity's labor relations officer used AUTOVON to communicate with him. Accordingly, the arbitrator directed that the union's chief representative be permitted to use the AUTOVON system for a reasonable amount of time for the purpose of communicating with the union's president.

In its first exception, the agency contended that the award was contrary to § 7106(b)(1) in that the award involves the technology of performing the work of the agency which is negotiable solely at the election of the agency. The Authority has previously held that a proposal, which would allow the union access to the agency's telephone system for purposes of administering the parties' agreement did not involve the technology of performing work because it did not determine whether the agency would adopt a particular technology, e.g., utilize telephones as opposed to some other communications technology.

In its second exception, the agency argued that the award violates § 7114 in that it deals entirely with matters pertaining to internal union business and does not deal with conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees. However, the award specifies that use of the AUTOVON by the union's chief representative at the activity is limited to communications concerning matters arising under the contract which affect bargaining unit employees at the activity. Therefore, the Authority concluded that the agency failed to establish that the award was contrary to § 7114.

In its third exception, the agency contended that the award is contrary to § 7117(a)(2) in that the award is inconsistent with a Department of Defense policy for which a compelling need exists. It was argued that the policy which limits the use of the AUTOVON system to primarily military operational needs, is essential to the accomplishment of the agency's mission. The Authority found that the agency did not demonstrate that the strictly limited award would interfere with the stated purposes of the agency policy.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority adopted the Judge's Decision that the Respondent violated sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) when it failed and refused to provide the union with the requested performance appraisal plans of certain named unit employees for the purpose of bargaining over the impact and implementation of a new performance plan. The Authority found that the Respondent had agreed to bargain over the impact and implementation of the newly adopted performance rating system on the affected employees; that the request for information was made by the Union's properly designated representative, and that the information requested was necessary in order for the Union to intelligently engage in such bargaining. Thus, the Authority, in agreement with the Judge, concluded that the Respondent was obligated under section 7114(b)(4) to provide the Union with the information requested.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority found, contrary to the Judge, that agency did not violate section 7116(a)(1) or (5) when some supervisors began using a new instructor evaluation sheet (IES) to evaluate employees' without first notifying the union and affording it an opportunity to bargain over the impact and implementation. Although the IES form had a different format and was more specific than another form currently used as a checklist for recording evaluations, the same concepts of classroom presentation and delivery techniques were measured. Moreover, the agency continued its policy of permitting individual supervisors to use any form to record their observations of instructor's in-class performance. In fact, the IES was developed by a supervisor for his use and other supervisors decided to use the new form without its use being required by the agency. In developing the IES form, the existing form was used as a guide, and the IES conformed exactly to the rating elements set forth in "Sample Guidelines." The Authority, therefore, concluded that the General Counsel failed to sustain the burden of proving that there was any change in unit employees' conditions of employment caused by the distribution and use of the IES.

The union did not waive its right under the Statute to negotiate procedures and appropriate arrangements when the union dropped its contractual proposal that the agency bargain about the impact and implementation of interstation transfers of employees. Although the union agreed that two weeks notice would be sufficient notice of such transfers, nothing in the record established or implied that the union was in any way giving up its statutory rights. In the absence of such a waiver, the agency violated §§ 7116(a)(1) and (5) by refusing to negotiate with the union concerning procedures and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by an interstation transfer that it implemented.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the underscored portion of the following Union proposal:

> Any employee appraised as outstanding in his/her current appraisal will receive four (4) years creditable service for RIF purposes. Employees with an excellent rating will receive an additional three (3) years of service for RIF purposes.

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal conflicts with an internal regulation which provides that employees having performance ratings below outstanding are not entitled to additional service credit in a reduction-in-force. It claims that a compelling need exists for this regulation under the illustrative standard set forth at section 2424.11(b) of the Authority's Rules. It argues that the proposal is, therefore, outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(2) of the Statute. The Agency also argues that the proposal is outside the duty to bargain because it would determine the conditions of employment of nonunit employees.

The Union contends that the Agency has not demonstrated a compelling need for its regulation, and that the proposal merely involves the right of the exclusive representative to negotiate conditions of employment for employees in the unit.

III. Analysis and Conclusions

A. OPM Regulations

The Authority finds that the proposal is nonnegotiable for a reason other than those raised by the Agency. The Office of Personnel Management (OPM) has issued new regulations concerning reductions-in-force (the RIF regulations) at 5 CFR Part 351. These regulations became effective February 3, 1986 and are published at 51 Fed. Reg. 318-326 (1986). The Authority has found that the OPM regulations concerning reductions-in-force are Government-wide rules or regulations within the meaning of section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, 18 FLRA No. 18 (1985). Although that case applied the previous OPM regulations, the revised RIF regulations similarly apply generally to civilian employees of the Federal government and are likewise Government-wide rules or regulations.

Section 351.504(d) of the RIF regulations provides that employees shall receive additional service credit for performance in the event of a RIF. That section states that employees are to be credited with twenty additional years of service for a performance rating of outstanding; sixteen additional years for a rating of exceeds fully successful; and twelve additional years for a rating of fully successful. The Union's proposal provides that employees shall receive four years of additional service credit for a rating of outstanding and three years for a rating of excellent. The proposal is inconsistent with section 351.504(d) and is, therefore, outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute.

B. Compelling Need

The Union's proposal conflicts with the Agency's regulation because the proposal would give employees with performance ratings below outstanding additional service credit in the event of a RIF. However, an agency regulation does not bar negotiation on a conflicting union proposal unless the agency demonstrates that its regulation is supported by a compelling need. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1928 and Department of the Navy, Naval Air Development Center, Warminster, Pennsylvania, 3 FLRA 450, 454 (1980).

The Agency contends that a compelling need exists for its regulation because "[e]quity and the maintenance of merit principles require that Department employees be treated the same in determining retention and assignment rights in reduction-in-force." Agency Statement of Position at 3. It argues that employees with ratings below outstanding would receive additional service credit under the Union proposal that employees with similar ratings did not receive in earlier RIFs. However, section 351.504(d) of the revised RIF regulations also requires the Agency to provide additional service credit to employees in addition to those with outstanding ratings. Consequently, the Authority finds that the Agency has not shown a compelling need for its regulation.

C. Effect on Nonunit Employees

The Agency contends that the Union's proposal would require it to treat nonunit employees covered by its regulation differently in a RIF than unit employees covered by the proposal. It argues that this disparate treatment would prejudice the nonunit employees. However, as stated above, the revised RIF regulations would require the Agency to amend its current regulation to provide additional service credit to employees having a rating of fully successful and above. Consequently, the Authority cannot conclude on the basis of the Agency's current regulation that the Union's proposal would require it to treat unit and nonunit employees differently.

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Issued, Washington, D.C. April 22, 1986.

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommending that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision, and the Charging Party filed an opposition to the Respondent's exceptions.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority adopts the Judge's findings,*/ conclusions, and recommended Order.

*/ However, in so concluding, the Authority specifically does not adopt the Judge's dicta that "it is incumbent on the Respondent to offer some alternative [means of providing the data pursuant] to the request."

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the Department of Health and Human Services, Region IV, Health Care Financing Administration shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to provide the National Treasury Employees Union, the employees' exclusive representative, with sanitized copies of each bargaining unit employee's performance evaluation for the evaluation period ending December 31, 1983, which are necessary for the National Treasury Employees Union to determine whether to process a grievance over alleged violations of the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute:

(a) Upon request, provide the National Treasury Employees Union, the employees' exclusive representative, with sanitized copies of each bargaining unit employee's performance evaluation for the evaluation period ending December 31, 1983, which are necessary for the National Treasury Employees Union to determine whether to process a grievance over alleged violations of the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

(b) Post at all facilities within Region IV, Health Care Financing Administration, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the Regional Administrator for Region IV, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director for Region IV, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. Section 7101 et seq. and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder.

Pursuant to an amended charge first filed on January 7, 1985, by the National Treasury Employees Union (hereinafter called the NTEU or Union), a Complaint and Notice of Hearing was issued on March 25, 1985, by the Regional Director for Region IV, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Atlanta, Georgia. The Complaint alleges that Department of Health and Human Services, Region IV, Health Care Financing Administration (hereinafter called the Respondent), violated Sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, (hereinafter called the Statute), by virtue of its actions in refusing to furnish the Union with copies of the employees performance evaluations for the period ending December 31, 1983.

A hearing was held in the captioned matter on May 8, 1985, in Atlanta, Georgia. All parties were afforded the full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witness, and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved herein. The General Counsel and the Respondent submitted post-hearing briefs which have been duly considered.

Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witness and his demeanor, I make the following findings of fact,[1] conclusions, and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

The Union is the exclusive representative of a unit of Respondent's employees working in Atlanta, Georgia. As of September 1984, Respondent employed approximately 125 bargaining unit employees in its three divisions, namely, Division of Program Operations, Division of Financial Operations and Division of Health Standards and Quality Control. The Regional Administrator for Region IV was Mr. George Holland. Mr. Richard Morris was the Associate Regional Administrator for the Division of Program Operations, Mr. James Pirkle was the Associate Regional Administrator for the Division of Financial Operations and Mr. Clarence Boone was Associate Regional Administrator for the Division of Health Standards and Quality Control.

On February 10, 1984, Chief Steward Richard Edwards directed a letter to Mr. George Holland, with copies to the Associate Regional Administrators, wherein he requested, pursuant to Section 7114(b) of the Statute, that the appropriate official fill out an attached form with data to be obtained from the employees' current performance appraisals. The letter went on to state that the data would be used to determine whether the appraisals "were done as provided by Article 12 of the negotiated contract, and the laws, rules and regulations that govern performance appraisals of government employees."

By memorandum dated February 24, 1984, Mr. Holland replied to the Union's February 10, 1984 request for information as follows:

> Your request amounts to a complete statistical listing of all appraisals given HCFA employees in January 1984. They fail to provide any information by which the Agency could make a determination whether the requests are relevant or material to a specific grievance or the administration of the agreement. Therefore, your requests are denied.

[1] The facts are not in dispute. The record consists of seven exhibits and the unrefuted testimony of Mr. Richard A. Edwards the Chief Steward for the Union and a unit employee.

> We are, however, attaching a copy of our EPMS Data Form, showing results of appraisals for employees, by grade band.

According to Mr. Edwards, the EPMS Summary Data Form was not responsive to the Union's February 10, 1984 request.

On September 11, 1984, Mr. Edwards directed another letter to Mr. Boone which reads in pertinent part as follows:

> On February 10, 1984, we requested HCFA furnish data on a form designed by NTEU, Chapter 210. HCFA, in a letter dated February 24, 1984, denied our request. We subsequently filed an Unfair Labor Practice charge (ULP) with the Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA).
> The FLRA recently ruled that HCFA was not obligated per the CSRA of 1978 to furnish the information in the request since HCFA does not keep that information in the type form requested. The FLRA also said that that type of information should be provided to the union.
> Based on the FLRA ruling, we are requesting HCFA supply us with the copy of every employee's performance evaluation for the period ending December 31, 1983.
> I also request this information in order to carry out my duties and responsibilities identified in 5 U.S.C. Chapter 71 and in order to investigate a grievance.
> P.S. If HCFA desires, I hereby agree that employee names may be sanitized.

The Union did not receive a written response to its request.

According to Chief Steward Edwards the Union requested the appraisals due to complaints from approximately eight employees that their respective appraisals appeared to be contrary to Articles 12 and 42[2] of the collective bargaining agreement which guaranteed that appraisals would not be subjective, predetermined on the basis of a bell curve, or based upon regard to race, color, religion, sex, age, marital status, or political affiliation. The Employer will promote full realization of equal employment opportunity for qualified handicapped persons.

(B) An employee who alleges discrimination may seek relief in accordance with the provisions of the negotiated grievance procedure contained in ARTICLE 60, GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE, or the statutory appeals procedure, but not both. However, the employee retains the right to appeal the final decision to the Merit Systems Protection Board, EEOC or U.S. Court of Appeals, as appropriate.

Article 12, Section (G)

(2) Performance standards will be specified in as objective, explicit and measurable terms as possible so that all parties officially concerned can reasonably agree that the performance expectation has or has not been satisfied.

Article 12, Section 2(G)

(3) Performance standards will be written to ensure accurate appraisals of performance.

(a) Objective means something which is observable or verifiable. Undefined concepts of quantity, quality, or timeliness would not meet this standard.

(b) They will ensure the accurate evaluation of job performance to the maximum extent feasible. They will be clearly worded so as to minimize potential for error or mistake to the maximum extent feasible in applying and interpreting them.

(c) To the maximum extent feasible and in accordance with the uniqueness of the position, performance expectations will be stated distinguishably and non-overlapping. They will recognize significant differences in the working conditions of employees who occupy the same position.

discriminatory considerations. Mr. Edwards further testified that his appraisal had been based on predetermined considerations. He further testified that appraisals were generally about 12 pages in length.

According to Mr. Edwards, because the complaining employees worked in all three divisions of the Respondent and since there were approximately 15 different employee classifications in such divisions with differing performance standards, it was necessary to view all the appraisals in order to determine if there had been any contract violations.

Following the first request for information in February 1984, Mr. Edwards met with Mr. Peter O'Donnell, Regional Labor Relations Officer, on several occasions and informed him that the Union wanted the data in order to determine whether there had been any pre-determination of grades or any EEO violations.

Subsequent to the September 1984 request Mr. Edwards met with Mr. O'Donnell three or four times in September and October. Mr. Edwards again explained the reasons for the requested data and Mr. O'Donnell expressed concern about his having to pull 1600 to 1700 files in order to retrieve the requested information. Mr. Edwards informed Mr. O'Donnell that this would not be a problem since each of the three divisions retained separate copies of its employees' performance appraisals.

According to Mr. Edwards uncontroverted testimony the Respondent maintains the performance appraisals of the unit employees in the regular course of business at four separate locations within 101 Marietta Tower, Atlanta, Georgia. Mr. Edwards further testified that each Associate Regional Administrator had from two to four clericals and the Regional Personnel Officer, Mr. Robertson, had approximately 25 clericals. Additionally, copying machines were located in the Regional Personnel Office and the three divisional offices.

Article 12, Section 2(C)

(3)(C) To the maximum extent feasible appraisals of performance will be fair and accurate and relate to specific, written performance requirements. Employees will be measured against the established performance expectations based on observable performance.

Article 12, Section 5(L)

(4) There will be no pre-established bell curves or fixed distributions of ratings.

Finally, Mr. Edwards testified that asking individual employees to present copies of their respective appraisals would not be an effective means of acquiring the requested data since Respondent prohibits employees from discussing, showing or comparing their evaluations.

Discussion and Conclusions

The General Counsel takes the position that Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Act by refusing to make the performance appraisals available to the Union. In support of this position he points out that the requested material meets all the criteria set forth in Section 7114(b), namely, normally maintained by Respondent in the regular course of business, necessary for the Union to perform its representational responsibilities and does not constitute guidance, advice, etc.

Respondent, in substance, takes the position that it was not required to supply the requested information under Section 7114(b) since the request failed to spell out how it was necessary for the performance of the Union's representational responsibilities, violated the privacy rights of the employees and was burdensome.

With respect to Respondent's defenses predicated on privacy considerations and the burdensome nature of the request, I find such defenses to be without merit. While it is true that the Authority in a number of recent cases[3] has asserted that the Union's need for the information must be balanced against the "intrusion on the individual's privacy interests," in the instant case the Union made it clear that it would take the requested information in a sanitized state. In such circumstances there would be no need to balance the Union's need for information against the individual employees right to privacy.

With respect to Respondent's defense based on the "burdensome nature" of the request, the only evidence in the record bearing thereon is Mr. Edwards' testimony that his appraisal numbers approximately 12 pages and is typical of the size of the appraisals of the approximately 125 unit employees. Given the amount of clerical employees and their access to sophisticated copying machines I cannot find that the record supports the conclusion that the duplication of some 1500 pages is necessarily burdensome. Moreover, to the extent that a contrary conclusion be reached, it is incumbent on the Respondent to offer some alternative to the request. While the Respondent alleges in its statement of position that it did offer an alternative, namely union access to the appraisals, no sworn testimony to that effect appears in the record.

[3] Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES) Fort Carson, Colorado, and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1345, 17 FLRA No. 92.

Turning now to the Respondent's third defense, i.e. that the Union's request did not demonstrate that the information was necessary in order to carry out its representational responsibility. While it is true that the Union's written request of September 18, 1984, did not set forth the exact reasons for the request and why the information was necessary, the ensuing conversation between Mr. O'Donnell and Mr. Edwards certainly cured any deficiency in the written request and put the Respondent on notice as to the concerns of the Union and the reasons for the request.

Thus as the Union pointed out it had received a number of complaints from its unit members that their appraisals had been predetermined or based upon discriminatory considerations in violation of the collective bargaining agreement. It was further pointed out that the only way for the Union to determine whether such allegations were true was to analyze the appraisals. Given the number of employee classification it would be impossible to determine same on the basis of a random sampling. Accordingly, I find that the appraisals of all unit employees were necessary for the Union to perform its representational responsibilities and determine whether or not the Respondent was abiding by the collective bargaining agreement. Having failed and refused to provide the Union with sanitized copies of the appraisals, I further find that the Respondent by refusing to abide by Section 7114(b) of the Statute has violated Sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute.

Having found that the Respondent has violated the Statute I hereby recommend that Authority issue the following order designed to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and Section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the Department of Health and Human Services, Region IV, Health Care and Financing Administration shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

    (a) Failing and refusing to furnish to the National Treasury Employees Union, the employees' exclusive representative, a sanitized copy of every unit employee's performance evaluation for the period ending December 31, 1983.

    (b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to affectuate the purposes and policies of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute:

(a) Furnish the National Treasury Employees Union, the exclusive representative of its employees, a sanitized copy of every unit employee's performance evaluation for the period ending December 31, 1983.

(b) Post at all facilities within Region IV copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by Regional Administrator for Region IV and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director for Region IV, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing within 30 days of the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the interest arbitration award of Arbitrator and Chairman of the Federal Service Impasses Panel Roy M. Brewer filed by the Department of the Air Force (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute[1] and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Union filed an opposition to the Agency's exceptions. The Federal Service Impasses Panel filed a submission on a jurisdictional issue raised by the Union in the case and the Agency filed a response to the Panel's submission.

[1] Section 7122 of the Statute provides:

> (a) Either party to arbitration under this chapter may file with the Authority an exception to any arbitrator's award pursuant to the arbitration (other than an award relating to a matter described in section 7122(f) of this title). If upon review the Authority finds that the award is deficient--
> (1) because it is contrary to any law, rule or regulation; or

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The dispute before Mr. Brewer involved an impasse in negotiations between the parties concerning a Union proposal that a "class A (AUTOVON) telephone line be provided in the union office at the employer's expense (installation and monthly charge)." The impasse was referred to the Federal Service Impasses Panel under section 7119 of the Statute.[2] The parties subsequently accepted the recommendation

> (2) on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations; the Authority may take such action and make such recommendations concerning the award as it considers necessary, consistent with applicable laws, rules, or regulations.

[2] Section 7119 of the Statute provides, in pertinent part:

> § 7119. Negotiation impasses; Federal Service Impasses Panel
> . . . .
> (b) If voluntary arrangements, including the services of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service or any other third-party mediation, fail to resolve a negotiation impasse--
> (1) either party may request the Federal Service Impasses Panel to consider the matter; or
> (2) the parties may agree to adopt a procedure for binding arbitration of the negotiation impasse, but only if the procedure is approved by the Panel.

of the Panel that they submit the dispute to Mr. Brewer for "med-arb" (mediation-arbitration) procedures, under which procedures he would first attempt to resolve the matter through mediation. The Panel advised the parties: "Should the issue concerning the Union's use of a telephone not be resolved in this manner, he [Mr. Brewer] will dispose of it by issuing a final decision." The dispute persisted after mediation and Mr. Brewer proceeded through arbitration to decide the matter. In an "Arbitrator's Opinion and Decision," Mr. Brewer found that he was not persuaded that an AUTOVON (an acronym for the Department of Defense's "Automatic Voice Network") phone line should be installed in the Union's office as proposed. However, the Arbitrator also found that the Union's president, who was located at another Air Force base in California, had an AUTOVON phone in his office and that

(i) recommend to the parties procedures for the resolution of the impasse; or

(ii) assist the parties in resolving the impasse through whatever methods and procedures, including factfinding and recommendations, it may consider appropriate to accomplish the purpose of this section.

(B) If the parties do not arrive at a settlement after assistance by the Panel under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the Panel may--

(i) hold hearings;

(ii) administer oaths, take the testimony or deposition of any person under oath, and issue subpoenas as provided in section 7132 of this title; and

(iii) take whatever action is necessary and not inconsistent with this chapter to resolve the impasse.

(C) Notice of any final action of the Panel under this section shall be promptly served upon the parties, and the action shall be binding on such parties during the term of the agreement, unless the parties agree otherwise.

the Activity's labor relations officer used AUTOVON to communicate with him. The Arbitrator concluded that the Union's chief representative at the Activity should have access to the system for reasonable periods of time for the same limited purpose, i.e., to discuss issues arising under the parties' collective bargaining agreement affecting bargaining unit employees at the Activity which must be decided by the Union president. Therefore, as his award, the Arbitrator directed that the Union's proposal be withdrawn and that the parties adopt wording in their agreement to the effect the Union's chief representative at the Activity be permitted to use the AUTOVON system for a reasonable amount of time for the purpose of communicating with the Union's president about matters arising under the parties' agreement which affect Activity employees represented by the Union. Mr. Brewer issued his decision as "Arbitrator and Chairman, Federal Service Impasses Panel."

The Agency then filed its exceptions and a request for a stay of the Arbitrator's decision with the Authority. In its opposition, the Union raises a threshold issue concerning the jurisdiction of the Authority in this matter. As indicated above, the Federal Service Impasses Panel filed a submission on that issue and the Agency filed a response to the Panel's submission.

III. JURISDICTIONAL ISSUE

A. Positions Presented

1. Union Position. The Union's position is that the Arbitrator's decision is an action of the Panel under section 7119 and, therefore, not reviewable by the Authority on exceptions filed under section 7122 of the Statute. The Union further maintains that such actions are reviewable only through unfair labor practice procedures on an alleged violation of section 7116 of the Statute[3] for non-compliance with the Panel action.

[3] Section 7116(a)(6) and (8) of the Statute provide:

> (a) . . . it shall be an unfair labor practice for an agency--
> (6) to fail or refuse to cooperate in impasse decisions as required by this chapter;

2. FSIP Position. The Panel's position is that the Arbitrator's decision is not a final action of the Panel. In the Panel's view, since the Air Force rejected the Arbitrator's decision, the impasse remains unresolved and the next appropriate step is for the Panel to take whatever action is necessary to end the impasse. The Panel contends that any review of Mr. Brewer's decision can be achieved only through unfair labor practice procedures after the Panel takes such final action. The Panel further expresses its opinion that Congress did not intend the arbitration award review procedures of section 7122 of the Statute to encompass decisions issued by Panel members or Panel staff employees pursuant to recommendations or directions of the Panel. The Panel concludes that filing exceptions to Mr. Brewer's decision is inappropriate and the Authority should decline jurisdiction over the matter.

3. Air Force Position. The Agency's position is that exceptions to awards which result from Panel-directed interest arbitration proceedings may properly be filed with the Authority under section 7122 of the Statute. The Agency contends that Panel Members who conduct such proceedings are not acting as Members of the Panel but, rather, as interest arbitrators the same as interest arbitrators who have been mutually selected by the parties and whose awards are subject to appeal under section 7122 of the Statute.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

Upon careful consideration of the positions presented, the relevant provisions of the Statute and related legislative history, the Authority concludes that it has jurisdiction to review the Arbitrator's Opinion and Decision under section 7122 of the Statute. In reaching this conclusion, the Authority determines as follows:

. . . . .

(8) to otherwise fail or refuse to comply with any provision of this chapter.

Section 7116(b)(6) and (8) cover unfair labor practices of the same type by unions.

First, the Arbitrator's Opinion and Decision excepted to by the Agency in this case was final and not an intermediate or interlocutory ruling. In that regard, the Panel expressly advised the parties, in acknowledging their acceptance of the Panel's "med-arb" recommendation, that if Mr. Brewer's mediation efforts failed to resolve the impasse, "he will dispose of it by issuing a final decision." [Emphasis added.] There is no mention in the Panel's letter or in Mr. Brewer's decision that his decision was subject to further review or any action by the full Panel. Thus, it is clear that the Arbitrator's decision was a final disposition of the matter.

Second, the Authority finds that the Arbitrator's Opinion and Decision is an interest arbitration award by an individual arbitrator and not a final action of the Panel under section 7119 of the Statute. In that regard, there is no showing in the record before the Authority that the Panel as a body or institution decided the merits of the impasse nor does the decision itself expressly purport to be a Decision and Order or other final action of the Panel.

Third, and finally, the Authority finds that the Arbitrator's Opinion and Decision is directly reviewable by the Authority on the exceptions filed by the Agency under section 7122 of the Statute. As set forth in footnote 1 above, section 7122(a) of the Statute provides that "[e]ither party to arbitration under this chapter may file with the Authority an exception to any arbitrator's award pursuant to the arbitration (other than an award relating to a matter described in section 7121(f) of this title)." [Emphasis added.] The legislative history of this provision reflects that Congress clearly intended that the Authority's review procedures set forth in section 7122 apply to interest arbitration awards resulting from impasse proceedings before the Panel under section 7119(b) of the Statute. The House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, in reporting on the language that ultimately was enacted into law as section 7122 of the Statute, reported as follows:

> Section 7122 sets forth the procedures under which a party may obtain review by the Authority of an arbitrator's award. The procedures apply in the case of . . . an award in an arbitration resulting from an impasse proceeding under section 7119(b) . . . .

H. Rep. No. 95-1403, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 54-55 (1978), reprinted in Legislative History of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 at 702 (1979).

The Authority has recognized the intent of Congress concerning interest arbitration awards resulting from Panel proceedings in a number of decisions. It is now well established that in impasses where the Panel grants the request of the parties for permission to refer their dispute to arbitration, any resulting interest arbitration award is reviewable by the Authority on exceptions filed under section 7122(a) of the Statute. United States Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio and Council 214, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, 15 FLRA 151, 153-54 (1984); Patent and Trademark Office and Patent Office Professional Association, 15 FLRA 990 (1984). Additionally, it is now clear that in impasses where the Panel directs the parties to submit their dispute to mediation-arbitration, any resulting interest arbitration award by an arbitrator who is not also a Panel member is reviewable by the Authority on exceptions filed under section 7122(a) of the Statute. Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio and American Federation of Government Employees, Council of Locals, No. 214, 18 FLRA No. 81 (1985), request for clarification denied March 11, 1986; Department of Housing and Urban Development and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 476, AFL-CIO, 18 FLRA No. 95 (1985).

Neither the Statute nor the legislative history distinguishes between interest arbitration awards of individual Panel members and awards of other interest arbitrators. Nor do they provide any basis for excluding interest arbitration awards of individual Panel members from direct review by the Authority under section 7122(a) of the Statute.

Accordingly, the Authority concludes from the plain language of section 7122(a) of the Statute and the intent of Congress as expressed in the related legislative history that a party to an interest arbitration proceeding directed by the Panel may file exceptions to any final award of the arbitrator with the Authority, including an award of a Member of the Panel serving as the arbitrator. The Authority therefore confirms its jurisdiction to review the Arbitrator's Opinion and Decision excepted to by the Agency in this case and will proceed to resolve the exceptions on the merits.

IV. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contention

In its first exception, the Agency contends that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute in that the provision ordered by the Arbitrator to be adopted by the parties involves the technology of performing the work of the Agency which is negotiable solely at the election of the Agency.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

In American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604, 610 (1980), enforced as to other matters sub nom. Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982), the Authority held that a proposal, which would allow the Union access to the Air Force telephone system for purposes of administering the parties' agreement did not involve the technology of performing the work of the agency because it did not determine whether the agency would adopt a particular technology of work, e.g., utilize telephones as opposed to some other communications technology. The Authority found that the proposal merely provided the union access to the system which the agency had selected and was in existence for use in connection with contract administration and other labor-management relations matters. The Authority therefore concluded that the provision did not concern a matter negotiable solely at the election of the agency. Accordingly, for the reasons set forth in Wright-Patterson, the Authority finds that the provision awarded by the Arbitrator in this case, which is materially the same as the pertinent proposal in Wright-Patterson, does not involve the technology of performing the work of the Agency and does not concern a matter negotiable solely at the election of the Agency. The Authority therefore concludes that the Agency has failed to establish that the award is contrary to section 7106(b) of the Statute as alleged.

V. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contention

In its second exception, the Agency argues that the award violates section 7114 of the Statute in that it deals entirely with matters pertaining to internal union business and does not deal with conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority finds that the provision awarded clearly pertains to labor-management relations issues affecting bargaining unit employees arising under the parties' agreement and not to internal union business. Moreover, in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3748 and Department of Agriculture, Science and Education Administration, Personnel Division, Hyattsville, Maryland, 11 FLRA 122 (1983), the Authority held that a proposal which would have permitted union use of the Federal Telecommunications System for labor-management relations purposes concerned a matter directly related to conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees and was within the duty to bargain under the Statute. In this case, the award specifies that use of the AUTOVON by the Union's chief representative at the Activity is limited to communications concerning matters arising under the contract which affect bargaining unit employees at the Activity. Thus, for the reasons set forth in Department of Agriculture, Science and Education Administration, the provision awarded by the Arbitrator in this case, which is materially the same as the proposal involved in the cited case, concerns a matter directly related to conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees. The Authority therefore concludes that the Agency has failed to establish that the award is contrary to section 7114 of the Statute as alleged.

VI. THIRD EXCEPTION

A. Contention

In its third exception, the Agency contends that the award is contrary to section 7117(a)(2) of the Statute. In support of its contention, the Agency argues that the provision imposed by the Arbitrator is inconsistent with a Department of Defense policy for which a compelling need exists. The Agency argues that the policy, which limits access to the AUTOVON system to military operational needs with certain exceptions, is essential to the accomplishment of the mission of the Agency and to the execution of Agency functions.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority finds that the Agency has not demonstrated that the strictly limited provision awarded by the Arbitrator would interfere with any of the stated purposes of the policy, particularly in view of the Arbitrator's finding that the Union's president had access to the AUTOVON system for labor-management relations purposes and that the system was otherwise used for such purposes. Therefore, without deciding whether the agency policy is a "rule, or regulation" within the meaning of section 7122(a)(1) of the Statute, the Authority concludes that the Agency has failed to establish that the award is contrary to section 7117(a)(2) of the Statute as alleged.

VII. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Agency's exceptions are denied. The Agency's request for a stay of the award is likewise denied.

Issued, Washington, D.C. April 24, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision, and the General Counsel filed an opposition to the Respondent's exceptions.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's decision and the entire record the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings,[1] conclusions, and recommended Order as modified herein.

[1] The Respondent excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Judge. The demeanor of witnesses is a factor of consequence in resolving issues of credibility, and the Judge has had the advantage of observing the witnesses while they testified. The Authority will not overrule a Judge's resolution with respect to credibility unless a clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence demonstrates such resolution was incorrect. The Authority has examined the record carefully, and finds no basis for reversing the Judge's credibility findings.

The Authority agrees with the Judge that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute by failing and refusing to provide the Union with the requested performance appraisal plans of certain named unit employees, for the purpose of impact and implementation bargaining at its National Service Training Center, Kansas City, Missouri (the Center). Thus, we agree with the Judge that the Respondent had agreed to bargain as to the impact and implementation of the newly adopted performance rating system on employees at the Center; that the request for information was made by the Union's properly designated representative; and that the information requested was necessary in order for the Union to intelligently engage in such bargaining at the Center.

With regard to the posting of the remedial unfair labor practice notice, the Authority finds that a posting limited to the Respondent's Kansas City, Missouri facility, where the employees involved are located, will best effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute, and we shall modify the Judge's recommended order accordingly.[2]

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the National Weather Service, Silver Spring, Maryland shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to furnish the National Weather Service Employees Organization, MEBA, AFL-CIO, the employees' exclusive bargaining representative, with the performance appraisal plans of Kent Mills, Paul Haskins and Ron Richardson implemented on April 1, 1984.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

[2] See, e.g., United States Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, 18 FLRA No. 8 (1985).

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute:

(a) Furnish the National Weather Service Employees Organization, MEBA, AFL-CIO, with the performance appraisal plans of Kent Mills, Paul Haskins and Ron Richardson implemented on April 1, 1984.

(b) Post at its facilities at Kansas City, Missouri, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by a responsible official and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region VII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This case arose under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq.

Upon an unfair labor practice charge filed by the National Weather Service Employees Organization, MEBA, AFL-CIO (hereinafter referred to as the Union or NWSEO) against the National Weather Service, Silver Spring, Maryland (hereinafter referred to as Respondent), the General Counsel of the Authority, by the Regional Director for Region VII, issued a Complaint and Notice of Hearing alleging Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute by failing and refusing to provide the Union with performance and appraisal information of three named unit employees.

A hearing on the Complaint was conducted in Washington, D.C. at which all parties were represented and afforded full opportunity to adduce evidence, call, examine and cross-examine witnesses and argue orally. Briefs were filed by Counsel for the General Counsel and Respondent and have been carefully considered.

Upon the entire record in this matter,[1] my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor and from my evaluation of the evidence, I make the following:

Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law

At all times since April 1981, the Union has been the exclusive collective bargaining representative of a nationwide unit of various of Respondent's employees including approximately 26 to 30 Instructors employed at the National Service Training Center, Kansas City, Missouri (herein the Center). The unit is not presently covered by a nationwide collective bargaining agreement although various elements of the unit, excluding the Center, are covered by agreements pre-dating unit consolidation. However, Respondent and the Union have been engaged in contract negotiations for a nationwide agreement since 1982, negotiations proceeding on a face to face basis in 1982 and early 1983 followed by negotiations by mail at least through 1984.

In early 1984 Respondent notified the Union that it was implementing a revision of its performance appraisal system. The new system restructured the prior plan by primarily providing a narrative description of performance standards as compared with the prior one word description; adding a new system of weighting standards; and adding a numerical scoring system. Information regarding the plan was given to the Union and the parties met on numerous occasions to discuss various aspects of the new plan. None of the discussions however dealt with specific application of the new system to Instructors at the Center. The new appraisal system was implemented agencywide on April 1, 1984 but Respondent and the Union continued to meet and discuss specific Union concerns regarding application of the plan. On May 26, 1984, representatives of Respondent met with Leo Harrison, President of the Union, and Richard Horn, the Union's General Counsel, to further discuss the matter. According to the testimony of Joseph Smith, Respondent's Chief of Workforce Management (Labor Relations Chief), during the meeting after the parties resolved a question concerning employee accountability, which apparently was the primary purpose of the meeting, the parties discussed core elements and performance standards for Meteorological Technicians. While weights were designated for some of the elements, one element did not contain any indication of the weight range to be assigned since the weight for that element would vary among the various field stations. According to Smith, Union President Harrison was concerned with this and the parties ". . . agreed at that meeting that there'd be no negotiation but the local union could discuss with the local supervisor that weight and then the supervisor would make the final decision on the weight for that particular element." Smith continued: "As I said we discussed this and agreed that local discussion would occur that was not negotiations on these particular weights or elements or standards." Smith went on to testify, without further explanation, that the parties agreed there would be no other negotiations at the local level concerning the appraisal system, but "(t)here would be discussion".2/

[1] Unopposed motions to correct the transcript filed by Counsel for the General Counsel and Respondent are both hereby granted.

Labor Relations Officer Pauline Shanker testified, in conclusionary fashion with no referance to the question of weights, that at the conclusion of negotiations on employee responsibility she ". . . made very certain that we understood there would be no negotiations at any level below national but encouraged both management and the union to discuss . . . ."

Union President Harrison denied that he ever indicated there would be no negotiations, only discussions, below the national level on matters concerning the new appraisal plan. Harrison denied any agreement or even any discussion on this subject. He testified that when considering the weighting that was to be accorded critical elements, only the range of weights was discussed. Harrison explained that the assignment of specific weights could only be determined by workload and importance of a particular job in a particular station and accordingly he "assumed" that such matters would be left to local impact and implementation bargaining.3/

2/ Smith testified without contradiction that at some undisclosed time since May 26 a Union Regional Councilman in Tennessee attempted to meet with area managers to negotiate further on performance plans. According to Smith, subsequent communications between Respondent's Regional management and the Union's Regional Council Chairman indicated that use of the word "negotiate" was "unfortunate" and the parties agreed to "discussion" only.

3/ Harrison testified without contradiction that upon receiving information that a local unit in Alpena, Michigan had been denied "input" regarding the new performance plan and told Harrison had agreed to waive local bargaining, Harrison called Smith and denied any such agreement. According to Harrison, Smith indicated he would call Central Region Management to correct the situation.

Meanwhile, on March 9, 1984 Michael Silvestri, an Instructor at the Kansas City Training Center and the Union's Region 6 Chairman since October 1983[4] received from management the performance plan under the new system for which he would be rated for the April 1, 1984 through March 31, 1985 appraisal period. The plan set out specific performance elements and assigned designated numerical weights for those elements.[5] The other Instructors at the Center also received their particular performance plans around this time.

Sometime after March 9, 1984, Silvestri met Union President Harrison at a Union meeting and questioned whether there had been any discussion with management on the new performance appraisal plan. Harrison acknowledged he talked to management about the plan but added that Silvestri, as the representative of employees at the Center, was free to negotiate on the plan at the Center.[6]

[4] The Union's Region 6 represented employees at the Center and other national elements in the Kansas City area and national headquarters elements in Washington, D.C. To "clarify" representative contacts at the Center, Harrison wrote Respondent on March 15, 1984 and notified Respondent, inter alia:

> "Mr. Silvestri will serve as my representative to receive notification of all proposed changes in working conditions at the Kansas City Training Center and other matters which may require impact and implementation bargaining. He is also designated by the national level of this organization to negotiate on its behalf on those proposed changes or impact and implementation bargaining peculiar to the Training Center, Reconditioning Center and NWS SELS.
> "Mr. Silvestri will also serve as the union representative for all other matters on behalf of those Weather Service Employees who are TDY at the Training Center and all permanent employees of the Reconditioning Center and SELS."

[5] The form states, inter alia: "Weights reflect the level of importance and/or amount of time devoted to accomplishing the element."

[6] Around the time of this conversation Silvestri was notified he would be a member of the Union's national bargaining team. Silvestri testified Labor Relations Chief Smith was notified of this in March or April 1984. Smith testified he first received such notification from Silvestri in July 1984. In any event, a letter from Smith to Silvestri dated July 25, 1984 indicates that Smith was aware of Silvestri's status as national bargaining team member at least by July 20. Written notification from the Union that Silvestri was a member of the national negotiating team was given to Respondent by letter dated December 17, 1984.

By letter of May 16, 1984 to B.L. Braden, Respondent's Labor-Management Relations Designee at Kansas City, Silvestri requested copies of the new performance appraisal plans of four named Center Instructors, all members of the bargaining unit. Silvestri indicated that the request was ". . . in accordance with U.S.C. Title 5, Chapter 71" and the information was ". . . needed for evaluation for the purpose of negotiations by NWSEO." Braden, on instructions from Labor Relations Chief Smith, responded on June 1, stating:

> "Before a response to your inquiry can be made, clarification is needed as to what "negotiations" you are referring to, and the stated purpose for which the documents are needed. The second paragraph in your letter reads, "This request is in accordance with U.S.C. Title 5, Chapter 71," but it is a section which encompasses many areas. Please be specific."

On June 18, 1984 the Union was notified by Respondent that it was changing its method of conducting business with NWSEO Region 6 and, in the future, the contact for all matters not covered by a negotiated agreement would be Labor Relations Chief Smith. Accordingly, by letter to Smith of August 12, 1984 Silvestri requested the new performance appraisal plans for three of the employees referred to in his prior letter of May 16,[7] again indicating the data was, ". . . requested pursuant to 5 U.S.C. of Chapter 71" and was ". . . necessary for review for possible submissions on negotiations." On August 21, 1984 Smith replied to Silvestri, with language identical to that in Braden's June 1 letter, supra.

At no time thereafter did the Union clarify or explain its need for the information nor did Respondent furnish the data to the Union.

Silvestri testified that he requested the performance plans of the three Instructors: to ascertain whether they varied in such matters as weighting factors for possible impact and implementation bargaining on the new performance appraisal system at the local level; to determine whether safety related items in the plans might require attention during national negotiations;[8] to determine whether the particular needs of unique and small groups of employees in the unit such as Instructors might require special provisions in a national contract; and, being of the opinion that the national agreement should contain some provision relating to performance plans, to prepare himself for those negotiations. Silvestri further testified that he did not respond to Smith's request that he clarify his need for the documents since Respondent was aware of Silvestri's authority to bargain on impact and implementation at the local level and that he was a member of the national negotiating team.

[7] One of the four employees was no longer employed at the Center. The documents requested for the three employees (Kent Mills, Paul Haskins and Ron Richardson) totaled 30 pages.

[8] Face to face negotiations were tentatively scheduled in April 1984 to commence in late November 1984 or January 1985.

Smith gave the following reasons for the response given to Silvestri's request for the documents: a concern for the "privacy nature" of the information; no negotiations were being conducted at that time[9] except national negotiations which did not ". . . involve the training center per se except . . . from a general standpoint;" and, Respondent ". . . had already negotiated with Mr. Harrison over the implementation of this system."

Section 7114(b)(4) provides that an agency must:

> ". . . furnish to the exclusive representative involved, or its authorized representative, upon request and, to the extent not prohibited by law, data -
> "(A) which is normally maintained by the agency in the regular course of business; [and]
> "(B) which is reasonably available and necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding, and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining[.]"

In the case herein Silvestri was an "authorized representative" of the Union within the meaning of the Statute. As the Union's Region 6 Chairman, Silvestri was authorized to engage in "impact or implementation bargaining peculiar to the Training Center," as Harrison's letter to Respondent of March 15, 1984, supra, clearly states. Further, Silvestri was also a member of the Union's national negotiating team whose function was to bargain with Respondent on a nationwide agreement which fact had been communicated to Smith by July 20, 1984. Accordingly, Respondent was aware of Silvestri's representative status on the local and national level on August 12, 1984 when Smith failed to comply with Silvestri's request for documents.

[9] In January 1984 Respondent notified the Union that since the parties were engaged in negotiations for a nationwide agreement, Respondent did not intend to negotiate for an interim agreement relating to the Center.

Production of the documents was not prohibited by law notwithstanding that Smith testified he had "privacy concerns" with providing Silvestri the specific requested performance appraisal plans of named individuals. While providing unsanitized information to a union might, in some situations, run afoul of the Privacy Act,10/ in my view privacy considerations are not present herein. Thus, the performance plans requested do not contain any personal information other than the position and grade of the individual nor contain any "stigmatizing information"11/ concerning the employee. Rather, the documents only set forth the performance elements and objections for each position with an assigned weight for each particular element; the major activities or results which need to be accomplished in support of the performance element; and a blank item entitled "Criteria for Evaluation" for generic standards or supplemental performance standards. When Silvestri requested the documents none of the employees had yet been rated as to their particular job performance since the actual rating would not have taken place until March or April 1985.

Next for consideration is whether the information sought was necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding, and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining.12/ The Union and the General Counsel contend the information requested was necessary for possible local negotiations on implementation and impact aspects of the new performance appraisal system and for possible negotiations at the national level. Respondent contends that Union President Harrison essentially waived the right to negotiate on impact and implementation aspects at local levels when he agreed on May 26, 1984 there would be no "negotiations," only "discussions" at local levels. With regard to use of the information by Silvestri in preparation for national negotiations, Respondent contends Smith did not formally know until December 1984 that Silvestri was a member of the Union's national negotiating team and, in any event, it was Smith's understanding that negotiations were conducted through the Union's chief negotiator. Accordingly, Respondent argues that in light of these circumstances Smith's request for clarification was reasonable regarding what negotiations Silvestri was referring to in his request for information.

10/ Silvestri testified he did not particularly need the plans to be identifiable to an individual employee.

11/ Cf. Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES), Fort Carson, Colorado, 17 FLRA No. 92 (1985) at 628.

12/ Clearly the performance plans were normally maintained by Respondent and were reasonably available and production of the data would not be burdensome to Respondent.

In my view the information requested by Silvestri was necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding and negotiation on the impact and implementation at the local level of the newly adopted performance rating system. At a minimum the information was necessary to ascertain whether the performance criteria in each of the Instructor's performance plans were uniform and whether the weights were uniformly applicable. Such information was therefore required before Silvestri could determine whether any employee was adversely affected and what, if any, proposals should be made.

I reject Respondent's contention that Harrison waived all rights of the Union to impact and implementation at the local level. Rather, I credit Union President Harrison's testimony over that of Labor Relations Chief Smith and Labor Relations Officer Shanker and find Harrison did not agree on May 26, 1984 that no negotiations, only discussions, would occur on all matters relating to performance plans at the local level. I found Harrison's testimony to have the "ring of truth" to it whereas Smith's and Shanker's did not. Thus, Harrison's testimony that while the range of weights was discussed, he, in fact, did not have sufficient specific knowledge to bargain on the application of the weights to particular job tasks and therefore assumed such matters would be left to negotiations at the local level. This approach is reasonable and understandable. On the other hand, Smith testified that the parties agreed, for some unstated reason, that only local discussion and not negotiation on weights or the appraisal system itself would be permitted at the local level. Shanker similarly gave no indication of why Harrison would enter into such an agreement. The record contains no evidence of a quid pro quo for such a waiver and one would expect to find some explanation or reason for a conscious yielding sufficient to establish a waiver as alleged.[13]

Even if I were to find that the parties agreed on May 26 that only discussion on the new performance plan would occur at the local level, I would conclude nevertheless that Respondent was obligated to provide Silvestri with the information he requested. Smith testified that there was agreement to discuss ". . . that weight and then the supervisor would make the final decision on the weight for that particular element." The discussion, which would have been a substitute for the Statutory right to negotiate, could only occur in an intelligent fashion if the local Union had knowledge of the elements and weights from which to make meaningful judgements. That knowledge could only come from viewing the elements and weights for each job, i.e. the performance plans themselves. Indeed, section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute specifically requires the production of data ". . . necessary for the full and proper discussion, understanding and negotiations" (emphasis supplied) of bargaining subjects. Further, there is neither claim nor evidence that Union President Harrison waived the Statutory right to information in connection with whatever "discussion" might take place as Respondent contends.

[13] What might well have occurred on May 26 was an agreement on the range of weights to be applied to performance elements and objectives but no discussion or yielding on how the weights would be specifically distributed among the activities comprising that performance element. For example, Silvestri's performance plan, placed in evidence at the hearing, indicates "classroom Instructions" is a performance element with a total weight of 30. However, no distribution of this weight has been assigned to the "Major Activities" under this element such as "Lectures," "Discussions," "Technical Proficiency," etc.

Accordingly, I conclude Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute by its failure to provide the Union with data as alleged. In view of this conclusion I need not treat the parties arguments regarding the information request for national negotiations preparations as it will have no impact on the remedy recommended herein. In any event, I reject Respondent's contention that in the circumstances herein Smith's request for clarification regarding what negotiations Silvestri was referring to in his request for information was "reasonable." Since the data Silvestri requested was necessary for a purpose relating to a subject within the scope of collective bargaining then, in my opinion, an agency is obligated to furnish the data upon demand without engaging in the type of "endless bickering and jockeying" referred to by National Labor Relations Board Chairman Guy Farmer, when discussing a similar issue in Whitin Machine Works, 108 NLRB 1537 at 1541 (1954), enf'd, NLRB v. Whitin Machine Works, 217 F. 2d 593 (4th Cir. 1954), cert. denied, 349 U.S. 905 (1955). In that case Chairman Farmer stated:

> "I would not require that the union show the precise relevancy of the requested information to particular current bargaining issues. It is enough for me that the information relate to the wages or fringe benefits of the employees. Such information is obviously related to the bargaining process, and the union is therefore entitled to ask and receive it.
> "My interpretation of the employer's obligation under Section 8(a)(5) in this respect, of course, also presupposes that the bargaining agent, in this area as in all others, will seek the wage-rate information as a good-faith act in the discharge of its duty as the representative of the employees. I would, therefore, hold that, short of evidence that union requests for wage data are used as an harassing tactic and not in good-faith effort to secure pertinent bargaining information, the employer has a continuing obligation to submit such data upon request to the bargaining agent of his employees. . . . I am > convinced, after careful consideration of the impact of the problem on the collective-bargaining process, that this broad rule is necessary to avoid the disruptive effect of the endless bickering and jockeying which has theretofore been characteristic of union demands and employer reaction to requests by unions for wage and related information. The unusually large number of cases coming before the Board involving this issue demonstrates the disturbing effect upon collective bargaining of the disagreements which arise as to whether particular wage information sought by the bargaining agent is sufficiently relevant to particular bargaining issues. I conceive the proper rule to be that wage and related information pertaining to employees in the bargaining unit should, upon request, be made available to the bargaining agent without regard to its immediate relationship to the negotiation or administration of the collective-bargaining agreement."

Based upon the entire foregoing, I recommend the Authority issue the following:

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the National Weather Service, Silver Spring, Maryland shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

   (a) Failing and refusing to furnish National Weather Service Employees Organization, MEBA, AFL-CIO, the employees exclusive representative, with the performance appraisal plans of Kent Mills, Paul Haskins and Ron Richardson implemented April 1, 1984.

   (b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and the policies of the Federal Labor-Management Relations Statute:

   (a) Furnish National Weather Service Employees Organization, MEBA, AFL-CIO, with the performance appraisal plans of Kent Mills, Paul Haskins and Ron Richardson implemented April 1, 1984.

(b) Post at its facilities in Kansas City, Missouri and where unit employees are located copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommending that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision and the General Counsel filed an opposition thereto.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations only to the extent consistent herewith.

The complaint alleges that the Respondent, National Weather Service, violated the Statute when, in October 1981, it unilaterally implemented the use of an instructor evaluation sheet to evaluate unit employees at its National Weather Service Training Center (NWSTC) in connection with a critical element of their performance standards without first notifying the Charging Party and affording it an opportunity to bargain over the impact and implementation of such change. The Judge concluded that the Respondent's implementation of the use of such form was a violation of the Statute. The Authority disagrees.

The Authority finds that the General Counsel has failed to sustain the burden of proving that the Respondent unilaterally changed a condition of employment without notifying and bargaining with the Charging Party, as alleged in the complaint. The facts are essentially not in dispute. As found by the Judge, it had long been the practice of NWSTC supervisors to conduct in-class evaluations of instructors. Such practice allowed supervisors to use whatever methods they wished to accomplish these evaluations, including the use of "cuff" records, personal notes, "Sample Guidelines," forms such as an "Observation Report" (OR) and a lesson evaluation sheet, as checklists for recording such evaluations. Supervisor James Nelson developed the form at issue here, the Instruction Evaluation Sheet (IES), because he believed the OR form to be incomplete and not in the exact form he wanted to use. He distributed copies of the IES to some of the other supervisors, and started to use the form himself in October 1981. The Respondent thereafter continued to allow supervisors to use any or all of the above tools to record evaluations of instructors.

In the Authority's view, the General Counsel has not shown that the nature of the supervisory evaluations or the criteria to be applied in evaluating instructor performance changed because Nelson (and possibly other supervisors) began using the IES form. Although the IES had a different format and was more specific than the OR, the same concepts of classroom presentation and delivery techniques were measured. Thus, the record also shows that, in developing the IES form, Nelson used the OR form as a guide, and the IES conformed exactly to the rating elements set forth in the "Sample Guidelines." Additionally, the record indicates that, at all times material herein, there was no change in the Respondent's policy of permitting individual supervisors to use any form to record their observations of the instructors' in-class performance.

The Authority therefore concludes that it has not been demonstrated that there was a change in unit employees' conditions of employment caused by the distribution and use of the IES. Consequently, the Respondent was under no obligation to notify or bargain with the Charging Party concerning the use of such form. Thus, no violation of section 7116(a)(1) or (5) of the Statute has been established, and we shall order that the complaint be dismissed. See Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland, 19 FLRA No. 79 (1985). See also United States Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Chicago, Illinois, 13 FLRA 636 (1984).

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 7-CA-40108 be, and it hereby is, dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This decision concerns an unfair labor practice complaint issued by the Regional Director, Region Seven, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Denver, Colorado against the National Weather Service, Silver Spring, Maryland (Respondent), based on a charge filed by the National Weather Service Employees Organization (Charging Party or Union). The complaint alleged, in substance, that Respondent violated sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 5 U.S.C. § 7101 et seq. (the Statute), by unilaterally implementing on or about October 1981, the use of an instructor evaluation sheet to evaluate unit employees in connection with a performance appraisal critical element without first notifying the Union and affording the Union an opportunity to bargain over the impact and implementation of such change. The complaint further alleged that the Union first discovered the unilateral change on or about September 1, 1983. Respondent's answer denied the unfair labor practice alleged in the complaint.

A hearing was held in Kansas City, Missouri. The Respondent, and the General Counsel were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce relevant evidence, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and file post-hearing briefs. Based on the entire record,[1/] including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

In approximately May 1981, the Union was certified as the exclusive representative of a nationwide consolidated unit of Respondent's employees. Respondent's National Weather Service Training Center (NWSTC), Kansas City, Missouri, which is part of the consolidated unit, is charged with the responsibility of providing training programs for Respondent's employees. The Training Center is divided into two branches, only one of which, the Engineering Branch, is at issue in this case. There are approximately 16 instructors in the Engineering Branch. The nonsupervisory instructors are part of the bargaining unit.

Instructor Michael Silvestri has served in various representational capacities for the Union on behalf of the Training Center employees from the Union's certification to the present and has been the only Union official empowered to receive notice from Respondent's agents concerning matters affecting, and to bargain on behalf of, the Training Center employees. Respondent has been aware of Silvestri's authority to receive notice and to bargain on behalf of the Union.

Prior to October 1981, there was a longstanding NWSTC practice of conducting in-class evaluations of instructors. Supervisors, or program instructors as they were known after the reorganization of 1981, were free to use whatever methods they wished to accomplish the in-class evaluations. Some used "cuff" records, or personal notes, others used forms as a checklist for the evaluations.

Since approximately 1973, a form entitled, "Observation Report" (OR) had been available for supervisory use. The OR was an optional form which was originally issued by the Federal Aviation Administration. The OR is a one-page document horizontally printed on both sides. The top of the front page has a space for the name of the instructor and the lesson observed. The remainder of the front page is divided into three vertical blocks. The left block lists the following items: Identification and Clarification of Objectives, Development and Maintenance of Interest and Motivation, Evaluative Techniques, Lesson Development, Provision for Student Application and Delivery Techniques. The middle block contains a five-element evaluation system (outstanding, excellent, good, satisfactory and unsatisfactory), along with blank spaces for checking the rating for each item. The right block has blank spaces for comments. On the back, the top-third of the OR contains a continuation of the three-block pattern: Summarization Techniques, Utilization of Training Aids and Materials, and Total Instructional Effectiveness. The middle third is a blank space entitled Recommendations for Development. The bottom third sets forth the "adjective rating" and a comparative description of the five rating elements.

Also available for supervisory use during this period was a document entitled, "Sample Guidelines," which was also obtained from the Federal Aviation Administration. This document set forth standards for use with a lesson evaluation sheet. Most of the specific rating elements set forth in these guidelines were not identical to those set forth in the OR.

Although the record reflects that the OR and sample guidelines were available for use, unlike the Instructor Evaluation Sheet (IES), to be discussed later, there is only hearsay evidence in the record of any actual use of the OR form. It was reportedly not retained by the supervisors.

Since October 1981, instructors have been evaluated on their performance on an annual basis under a system known as the General Workforce Performance Appraisal System or GWPAS. Of the performance elements expected of instructors, one of the critical elements is instruction which consumes approximately 40% of an instructor's time.

During June 1981, James D. Nelson, a program instructor-supervisor, developed an Instruction Evaluation Sheet (IES) to evaluate instructors. He used the available OR form as a guide, but believed the OR to b incomplete and not in the exact form he wanted to use. In the process of developing the IES form, Nelson first made nonsubstantive changes in the sample guidelines. Then he made the IES conform exactly to the rating elements set forth in the guidelines.

The IES is a one-page document horizontally printed on both sides. The top of the front page has a space for the name of the instructor and the course being observed. The remainder of the front page is divided into three vertical blocks. The left block lists the following items: Initial Readiness, Statement of Objectives, Ability to Explain Subject, Development and Stress of Key Points, Use of Questioning Techniques, Use of Training and Class Participation and Summarization Techniques. The middle block contains a five-element evaluation system (outstanding, very good, average, fair, and poor), along with blank spaces for checking the rating for each item. The right block has blank spaces for comments. The back of the IES contains, in addition to the brief continuation of the three-block pattern from the front page (Voice, Diction, Delivery and Enthusiasm, Appearance, Mannerisms), a large blank space for summary comments, as well as the rating standards (numerical score ranges and description of each range), and a space for the supervisor's signature.

Neither the IES nor the sample guidelines used the same format as the GWPAS. The same concepts of classroom presentation and delivery techniques are measured, but the IES is more specific, particularly in terms of specific delivery techniques. The IES rating system uses categories of outstanding, very good, average, fair and poor which are achieved by attaining the appropriate numerical score within a range of scores identified on the back of the IES form. The GWPAS uses categories of outstanding, commendable, satisfactory, minimally satisfactory and unsatisfactory which are achieved by attaining a certain proportion of the Exceeded, Met and Not Met ratings for all of the performance elements listed in the GWPAS. The use of the IES can result in an evaluation which would be different than an evaluation reached by using the GWPAS without reference to the IES. The IES and the GWPAS are two different evaluation systems which concern the critical element of instruction.

Nelson distributed copies of the IES and its sample guidelines to at least three of the five other program instructors/supervisors at the Training Center, including the two other supervisors in the Engineering Branch. The IES was first used by them or him in October 1981. Nelson evaluated five different unit employee/instructors by using the IES, and at least two of these instructors were twice evaluated by Nelson using the IES. Within a few days after Nelson completed the IES concerning a particular instructor, he would give a copy to that instructor, discuss the ratings given to the instructor, and make suggestions for improvement. Such in-class evaluation occurred on an irregular basis.

Richard F. Myers, as director and Respondent's principal agent at the Training Center, was aware of the development of both the IES and sample guidelines and condoned their use. It is undisputed that Respondent never notified the Union of the institution of the IES and Sample Guidelines prior to its implementation in October 1981.

On September 1, 1983, Nelson evaluated Silvestri by using the IES. After Silvestri reviewed the IES, he told Nelson that he had never seen that form and that he was unaware of the procedures to be used in connection with the IES or the areas in which he was to be evaluated. Nelson agreed and tore up Silvestri's IES. This was the first time that Silvestri saw the IES.

By letter dated October 21, 1983, Respondent advised the Union's National President, Leo Harrison, of Respondent's intent to revise the IES and Sample Guidelines which, it stated, "is used to rate instructors in the classroom . . . ." (G.C. Ex. 7). Respondent concedes that this was the first time that it gave the Union any notice concerning any form of the IES or its use. Sometime after receiving a copy of the proposed revisions, Silvestri realized the connection between the proposed revision and the IES given to him by Nelson in September. Based on this realization, Silvestri sent a letter dated November 18, 1983, to Respondent objecting to the proposed revision because the Union had never been notified of the initial IES implementation.

The Union has concerns as to how the IES would be used in connection with an instructor's rating under GWFAS or otherwise, the frequency of use, application to the style of training in engineering, whether the instructor would be notified in advance, and what consideration would be given to such matters as an instructor's first time teaching a course, or having a group of difficult students, or of the rating instructor's familiarity with the course.

Discussion, Conclusions and Recommendations

The General Counsel contends that Respondent's implementation of the IES in October 1981 was a unilateral change in conditions of employment of unit employees without prior notice or an opportunity to bargain being afforded to the Union, thus violating sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. The General Counsel asserts that the impact and implementation of the IES, which had a reasonably foreseeable impact on unit employees, was negotiable.

Respondent defends on the basis, inter alia, that the use of the IES was not a departure from longstanding practice of allowing individual supervisors to accomplish in-class evaluation by use of forms, notes, or other methods; the changes made to the pre-existing form were not substantive changes giving rise to a bargaining obligation; and the IES had no impact, or de minimus impact, on bargaining unit employees.2/

The evidence establishes that the implementation of the IES was a change in conditions of employment. There is little persuasive evidence of actual use of the OR form or FAA sample guidelines on the engineering side. Moreover, the specific items evaluated were different than the OR previously available for use. Initial readiness, class participation, and personal elements, such as voice, diction, enthusiasm, appearance, and mannerisms, were not on the OR form. Aside from the different descriptive words used, the IES rating system has a numerical score range within which an instructor must fall in order to receive a particular rating. The OR rating system was merely descriptive, so receipt of any given score on the OR was strictly subjective. It is concluded that the creation of the IES was a major alteration of the OR, with additions of several job-related evaluation considerations and a new rating system. Accordingly, especially in light of the fact that the IES was specifically to be used in conjunction with the GWFAS which did not come into existence until October 1981, this change cannot be construed as a mere reaffirmation of existing policy.

2/ Respondent does not appear to contest the General Counsel's assertion that the complaint meets the requirements of section 7118(a)(4)(B) and was, therefore, timely filed. In any event, I so find.

as The IES had no impact, or reasonably foreseeable impact, on unit employees. I cannot accept Respondent's position that the forms of the [illegible], [illegible], and the evaluation forms all conveyed the same meaning, or that the in-house evaluation is an insignificant aspect of instructor evaluations. As noted, the Union had concerns as to just how the IES would be used, the frequency of use, application to the style of training in engineering, whether advance notice would be given, and what consideration would be given to such matters as an instructor's first time teaching a course, or having a group of difficult students, or of the rating instructor's familiarity with the course.

A performance appraisal system is clearly an appropriate matter for bargaining. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769 (1980), enforced sub nom National Treasury Employees Union v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982). While the establishment of performance standards or the identification of critical elements is not bargainable, procedures and adverse impact on unit employees due to these matters are negotiable. Department of the Air Force, Air Force Systems Command, Electronic Systems Division, 14 FLRA No. 63, 14 FLRA 390 (1984); Environmental Protection Agency, 16 FLRA No. 87 (1984). For example, where a union proposed that management be required to notify employees regarding which performance elements would be subject to appraisal, the Authority held that the proposal was negotiable. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3028 and Department of Health and Human Services, Public Health Service, Alaska Native Health Service, 13 FLRA No. 112 (1984). Likewise, a proposal to give notice to employees concerning which performance elements are deemed critical is a negotiable matter. Alaska Native Health Service, supra. Other negotiable matters related to performance appraisal systems include informing the union should management elect to conduct a study of performance appraisals, requiring management to discuss a proposed evaluation or appraisal with an employee prior to sending it to higher level supervisor or reviewer, requiring that employees be evaluated solely on duties contained in their position descriptions, and insisting on uniform application of performance standards for identical duties in similar circumstances. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3483 and Federal Home Loan Bank Board, New York District Office, 13 FLRA No. 80 (1983); National Federation of Federal Employees and Department of the Army, Fort Monmouth, New Jersey, 13 FLRA No. 75 (1983); American Federation of Government Employees Council of Social Security District Office Locals and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, 11 FLRA No. 103 (1983); National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 9 FLRA 983 (1983). Furthermore, a requirement that performance standards for critical elements be objective and directly related to an employee's position is negotiable. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2192 and Veterans Administration Regional Office, St. Louis, Missouri, 9 FLRA 716 (1982). Thus, it is clear based on the above that the impact and implementation of a form which was used in evaluating a critical element of an employee's performance appraisal was an appropriate matter for bargaining.

It is concluded that Respondent's implementation in October 1981 of an instructor evaluation sheet to evaluate unit employees in connection with a performance appraisal critical element without first notifying the Union and affording it an opportunity to bargain over the impact and implementation of such change in conditions of employment violated sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, as alleged.

Based on the foregoing findings and conclusions, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following Order:

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and Section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the National Weather Service, Silver Spring, Maryland, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Changing any instructor evaluation sheet at the National Weather Service Training Center, Kansas City, Missouri, or otherwise changing existing terms and conditions of employment with respect to evaluation forms used in conjunction with performance appraisal systems, without first notifying the National Weather Service Employees Organization (MEBA/AFL-CIO), the exclusive bargaining representative of its employees, and affording such representative the opportunity to bargain, upon request, to the extent consonant with law.

(b) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute.

(a) Rescind the Instructor Evaluation Sheet implemented in October 1981.

(b) Rescind and remove or expunge from its files all references to ratings issued to bargaining unit employees as a result of the implementation of the Instructor Evaluation Sheet at the National Weather Service Training Center, Kansas City, Missouri.

(c) Notify the National Weather Service Employees Organization (NWSEO/AFL-CIO) the exclusive bargaining representative of its employees, of any proposed change in existing terms and conditions of employment with respect to evaluation forms used in conjunction with performance appraisal systems, and, upon request, bargain in good faith to the full extent consonant with law.

(d) Post at its facilities at the National Weather Service Training Center, Kansas City, Missouri copies of the attached Notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Director, National Weather Service Training Center, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Director shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Pursuant to 5 C.F.R. Section 2423.30 notify the Regional Director, Region VII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Denver, Colorado, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

Chapter XIV, § 2410 et seq.

Pursuant to a charge filed on May 24, 1984, by American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2513, AFL-CIO (hereinafter called AFGE Local 2513) against U.S. Department of Labor, Employment Standards Administration, Wage and Hour Division (hereinafter called DOL and Respondent) the General Counsel of the FLRA by the Director of Region II issued a Complaint and Notice of Hearing on August 31, 1984, alleging that Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by reassigning employees between offices without affording the National Council of Field Labor Locals of the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (hereinafter called the Council) an opportunity to bargain over the impact and implementation of the reassignment. Respondent filed an Answer denying it had violated the Statute.

A hearing in this matter was conducted before the undersigned in New York, New York. Respondent, AFGE Local 2513 and General Counsel of the FLRA were represented and afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce evidence and to argue orally. Briefs were filed and have been fully considered. Based upon the entire record in this matter, my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and my evaluation of the evidence I make the following:

Findings of Fact

The Employment Standards Administration and its Wage and Hour Division are constituent entities of the Department of Labor. At all times material herein the Council has been recognized as the exclusive collective bargaining representative for a unit of employees stationed throughout the nation in field duty stations of the Department of Labor, including employees in DOL's Employment Standards Administration, Wage and Hour Division. At all times material Kathleen Becker has been Vice-President of AFGE Local 2513 and a designated regional representative of the Council and an agent acting on its behalf.

Bargaining History and Collective Bargaining Agreement

On August 17, 1978, the DOL and the Council signed a collective bargaining agreement. This agreement, including the attached appendices and memoranda of understanding is still binding on the parties.[1]

[1] Article 24 of the collective bargaining agreement entitled "Interstation Transfers," provides in relevant part:

> Section 5 - Notice to NCFLL.
> The NCFLL President or his/her designee will be notified of all proposed transfers of bargaining unit employees at least 2 weeks in advance.

On July 18, 1977 the Council submitted its initial proposals which included, inter alia, Section h of Article 31 which provided that where employees were to be involuntarily transferred, the Council would be notified and negotiations would be held with respect to the impact of the transfer on unit employees. The Council also proposed that supplemental agreements regarding interstation transfers could be negotiated. The Council maintained its position with regard to the language in Section h all through 1977. The assistance of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service was requested by the Council in late 1977. Management during this period had submitted two proposals, dated July 17, 1977 and October 19, 1977, which did not provide for such a bargaining obligation. On December 23, 1977, management submitted a third proposal which also did not require bargaining on the impact and implementation of involuntary reassignments. During this period the DOL had been adamant that it was not going to agree to bargain on impact and implementation of reassignments. On April 21, 1978 the Council submitted a second proposal on interstation transfer and reassignment. This proposal accepted management's proposals in a number of areas and in proposed Section 5 of Article 24 omitted reference to negotiations on impact and implementation, providing only that management would notify the Council of all proposed transfers "at least three (3) weeks in advance." This was the first time the Council had been willing to drop its efforts to get contractual recognition of bargaining rights in this area. The parties' final proposal in this area was dated May 4, 1978. It was a joint proposal and its only change from the Council's April 28, 1978 proposal is to be found in Section 5 wherein the notice period of transfers to be furnished the Union was reduced to two weeks. The May 4, 1978 Joint Proposal is the current wording of Article 24 of the parties' national agreement which deals with interstation transfers.2/

The Closing of the Brooklyn Wage-Hour Office
And Interstation Transfer of Employees

On September 2, 1984 Respondent's local Labor Relations Officer, Brenda Judson, notified the Council that Respondent intended to reassign all unit employees of the Brooklyn Area Office to the Bronx and Manhattan Area Offices. Becker, on behalf of the Council, requested negotiations on the implementation of the move and its impact on the affected unit employees. This request also contained a list of initial proposals. These initial proposals sought, among other things, to bargain regarding familiarizing employees with their new work sites; evacuation plans; the location and use of fire extinguishers; the methods (including seniority) by which employees would be assigned desk and work locations at their new work site; the utilization of partitions in the new space; parking arrangements for employees at the new site; telephones; territorial assignments of employees; office equipment; the ability to keep personal items; new business cards for employees; ventilation; window drapes; desk lamps; a non-smoking area; office availability to employees outside of normal duty hours; keys to the restroom and office; and administrative time for moving and relocating which would not be counted as time under the employee's productivity standards.

2/ DOL's chief negotiator testified that he felt that when the Council agreed to the final language this constituted a clear and unequivocal waiver of the Council's right, during the term of the agreement, to negotiate over the impact of interstation transfers. The Council negotiators testified that the Council had no intention of waiving its statutory rights.

On September 20, 1983, Judson wrote to Jesse Rios, the President of the Council, stating that management would not relocate employees until bargaining over the impact and implementation of the relocations was completed. On September 29, 1983, Respondent, at the national level, repudiated the local official's offer and announced that DOL had no obligation to bargain over the impact and implementation of the relocation and that the relocation had no material effect on bargaining unit employees. On October 4, 1984, the Council again requested negotiations but the Council received no response from Respondent. No negotiations ever took place.

On January 18, 1984, the Council received notification of the reassignments of employees and on January 23, 1984, employees received their reassignment notifications. On February 6, 1984, the reassignments took place as scheduled. Two employees were transferred to the Bronx Wage and Hour Area Office and seven employees were transferred to the Manhattan Wage and Hour Area Office.

With regard to the impact of the relocation on employees, (1) travel time has been significantly increased both in terms of getting into the office from home and in traveling to investigate work sites in the boroughs of Queens, Brooklyn, and Staten Island; (2) there is increased cost due to parking and a lack of available parking spaces; (3) because there are now 17 compliance officers in the Manhattan Office there is greater noise and crowding than before; and (4) there are now proportionately fewer clerical employees providing support to compliance officers than before the relocation. The Brooklyn office employees had partitions to divide work spaces, increase privacy and reduce noise levels. Now employees have no partitions and fewer phones per employee than before. There were serious ventilation problems in the Manhattan Area Office which were made more serious by the introduction of additional employees in the same space. Prior to the move there had been no discussion as to how the move would occur or when employees would be able to pack. The move caused some employees to use more time in traveling in to and out from Manhattan to investigate work sites in Queens, Brooklyn and Staten Island. With respect to one employee extra time amounted to between 20 minutes and 45 minutes each way. Depending on the number of visits one would have to make to a particular site, this could add several hours to the time it took to investigate each case. Performance standards require employees to close a certain percentage of cases in 45 days and all cases by 180 days. In addition employees are held to a certain standard of effective time utilization which would also be effected by increased travel time. There was more on-street parking available in Brooklyn than in Manhattan, 12 DOL reserved parking spaces in Brooklyn verses none in Manhattan. Five of the seven employees transferred from the Brooklyn office used their privately owned vehicles in conducting their investigations and trying to find a parking space around the Manhattan Area Office could take from 5 minutes to two hours to locate, depending on the time of day. Management apparently had made no adjustments in performance standards based on the increased travel time or the difficulty in locating parking spaces. There were some asbestos hazards in the new location and, unlike the old work site where there were phones within reach of every desk, in Manhattan there were fewer phones per employee and many employees now had to leave their desk area to get to a phone. Manhattan also had a problem with pests. Certain office procedures which were different from the Brooklyn office had an impact on an employee's ability to be in the field for investigations. One of these was the requirement that each employee do technical assistance for an entire day. In Brooklyn no employee was assigned this task but employees who happened to be in the office would pick up this responsibility. After the transfer, the former Brooklyn Area Office employees had to perform technical assistance one day a week until they caught up with the time already served by the other Manhattan employees in that endeavor. Such employees perform technical assistance two times a month. One employee lost 24 field days due to this requirement between the transfer of February 6, 1984 and the date of the hearing.

Discussion and Conclusions

The interstation transfer by DOL of the employees of the Brooklyn Wage-Hour Office to the Bronx and Manhattan Wage-Hour Offices was a change in the working conditions that affected, or could reasonably be foreseen to affect, the transferred employees. Absent any privilege Respondent would be required to notify the Council of the change and to bargain concerning its impact and implementation. Cf. U.S. Department of Labor, Occupational Safety and Health Administration, Chicago, Illinois, 19 FLRA No. 60 (1985).

Respondent contends that it had no obligation to bargain concerning the implementation and impact of the interstation transfer because the Council allegedly waived its statutory right for such bargaining when the Council dropped its contractual proposal that Respondent bargain about the impact and implementation of interoffice transfers. Respondent's argument confuses a statutory right as opposed to a contractual right. The latter is a right set forth and secured in the collective bargaining agreement and it is enforced by utilizing the means for enforcing contractual rights, including grievance and arbitration procedures. Rights granted by the Statute must be enforced utilizing the methods provided by the Statute including unfair labor practice procedures. The procedures for the enforcement of contractual rights are often more speedy and effective than those for enforcing rights provided by the Statute.

In the instant case, when the Council dropped its contractual demand to bargain about the impact and implementation of interstation transfers the Council was merely abandoning its attempt to secure a contractual right which it could then enforce through the contract. Nothing in the record establishes or implies that the Council was in any way giving up its statutory rights. This distinction between statutory rights and contractual rights has long been recognized in the field of labor relations it has similarly been recognized that giving up the securing of a contractual right does not constitute the waiver of a statutory right. Cf. Timber Roller Bearing Company v. NLRB, 325 F 2d 746 (6th Cir 1963) at 751.

The waiver of a statutory right must be clear and unmistakable. U.S. Department of Labor, Occupational Safety and Health Administration, Chicago, Illinois, supra. The record in the subject case shows no such clear and unmistakable waiver of the Council's statutory right to bargain about the impact and implementation of the interoffice transfer of employees. Agreeing that two weeks notice would be sufficient notice of such a transfer hardly constitutes a waiver of the right to bargain about the implementation and impact of such a transfer. Thus, I conclude the Council did not waive its right to bargain after the implementation and impact of the interoffice transfer of papers.

I conclude, further, in the absence of such a waiver, DOL violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by refusing to negotiate with the Council concerning the impact and implementation of the interoffice transfer of employees from the Brooklyn Wage-Hour Office to the Manhattan and Bronx offices.

Having found and concluded that DOL violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, I recommend that the Authority issue the following:

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and Section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby Orders, that the United States Department of Labor, Employment Standards Administration, Wage and Hour Division, Chicago, Illinois, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

    (a) Failing and refusing, upon request, to bargain with American Federation of Government Employees, National Council of Field Labor Locals, AFL-CIO, the exclusive collective bargaining representative of its employees, concerning the impact and implementation of any interoffice transfer of employees.

(b) In any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise of right assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purpose and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request bargain with American Federation of Government Employees, National Council of Field Labor Locals, AFL-CIO concerning the impact of the inter office transfer of employees from the Brooklyn Wage-Hour Office to the Bronx and Manhattan Offices and concerning the impact and implementation of any future interoffice transfers of employees.

(b) Post at its Bronx and Manhattan facilities copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receiving such forms, they shall be signed by an appropriate official of the Respondent and shall be posted and maintained by such official for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including bulletin boards and all other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region II, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps are being taken to comply herewith.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is negotiable which provides that employees working on a shift at the time of conversion to daylight savings time will have the option of using one hour of annual leave or working an additional hour as a method of maintaining their regular 8 hour shift. Minor changes in starting and quitting times of previously established shifts is a matter subject to the duty to bargain. The proposal does not interfere with management's right under § 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign work, i.e. management's right to determine what particular duties to assign; to determine when work assignments will occur; and to determine to whom or to what position duties will be assigned. Also the proposal does not interfere with management's elective right under § 7106(b)(1) to determine the numbers, types and grades of employees or positions assigned to a tour of duty.

DIGEST NOTES

The grievance in this case arose when the activity discontinued payment of night differential pay to employees paid from Corps of Engineers Special Power Rate Schedules. The arbitrator concluded that the activity violated the parties' agreement by discontinuing payment of shift differentials. As a remedy, the arbitrator awarded backpay.

As one of its exceptions, the agency contended that the award was contrary to the Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1982 [Pub. L. No. 97-257, 96 Stat. 832]. That statute clearly and unequivocally requires that prevailing rate employees of the Corps of Engineers paid from the Corps of Engineers Special Power Rate Schedules shall be paid wages as determined by the Department of Defense Wage Fixing Authority [DOD WFA] to be consistent with wages of employees of the Departments of Interior and Energy who perform similar work in the corresponding area. Further, the DOD WFA, the agency exclusively authorized to establish the appropriate wage schedules and rates for Corps of Engineers prevailing rate employees, determined that Interior and Energy employees in comparable positions were not paid a shift differential. Therefore shift differentials cannot be paid affected Corps of Engineers employees. Consequently, the Authority set aside the award.

An exclusive representative cannot claim that it is entitled to the allocation of official time to a particular employee without regard to management's needs and requirements regarding the performance of assigned work. Thus the agency did not violate section 7116(a) (1) and (5) by refusing to grant official time to one of the union's five designated representatives for negotiating a new contract. The agency indicated to the union that the employee-representative at issue possessed a particular expertise that was was essential to the accomplishment of the agency's work and the agency was operating under a Congressional mandate which included time constraints. On the other hand, the union neither alleged nor showed that the employee was essential to the functioning of the union's bargaining team so that his absence required the union to discontinue negotiations or that the right to name another representative in his place was requested or denied.

DIGEST NOTES

The District of Columbia Court of Appeals set aside a supplemental decision of the Authority that the Respondent was not obligated under section 7114(a)(2)(A) to afford an exclusive representative of its employees notice of and the opportunity to be present at an interview of a unit employee in preparation for a hearing before the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) and therefore did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (8). The Court held, contrary to the Authority, that the subject matter of the interview concerned a grievance as that term is used in section 7114(a)(2)(A), that the interview constituted a formal discussion within the meaning of that section, and that the Respondent's failure to notify the exclusive representative and provide it with an opportunity to be present at the interview therefore was contrary to the requirements of section 7114(a)(2)(A) and thus in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8). The Authority accepted the opinion of the Court as the law of the case and issued an appropriate remedial order.

DIGEST NOTES

The union's bare assertion that it needs data to process a grievance does not automatically oblige the agency to supply such data. The Authority rejected the contention that the union's request for information was "presumptively relevant" or that § 552(a)(b)(3) of the Privacy Act permits the disclosure of the requested information. The duty to supply information under § 7114(b)(4) turns upon the nature of the request and the circumstances in each particular case. The union had sought the names of all employees in the district who were under a performance improvement plan and related information. However, the union would only state that the information was necessary in connection with the processing of a possible grievance despite management's reasonable request for clarification so that it could make an informed judgment as to whether or to what extent the information sought was necessary for collective bargaining purposes. Under these circumstances, the Authority found that the agency did not refuse to furnish data in violation of § 7114(b)(4), § 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8).

DIGEST NOTES

The union's bare assertion that it needs data to process a grievance does not automatically oblige the agency to supply such data. The Authority rejected the contention that the union's request for information was "presumptively relevant" or that § 552(a)(b)(3) of the Privacy Act permits the disclosure of the requested information. The duty to supply information under § 7114(b)(4) turns upon the nature of the request and the circumstances in each particular case. DIGEST NOTES

A request was too broad that sought information relating to all agency disciplinary actions involving the misuse of time clocks in order to determine for grievance purposes whether a one-day suspension given an employee for punching his supervisor's time card was fair. The information sought was located in seven separate field activities; involved files maintained on unit employees by over 6000 supervisors; was not maintained by type of disciplinary action; would have required at least three months to produce and involved a minimum screening expense of $30,000. Moreover, the information sought included offenses other than the one involved in the grievance. Thus the Authority concluded that the information request sought data that was neither reasonably available nor necessary under § 7114(b)(4) for the processing of the grievance. Accordingly, the Authority affirmed the Judge's conclusion that the agency did not violate § 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) for not providing the requested information.

Given the agency's regulation providing for "like penalties for like offenses in like circumstances," specific information relating to the discipline by a diverse group of managers of employees who punched time cards for other employees is necessary [§ 7114(b)(4)] for the union to fulfill its representational duties.

Evidence pertaining to settlement discussions may not be utilized to prove the truth or falsity of any allegation set out in the complaint, the Judge ruled in a decision adopted by the Authority.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), and concerns the negotiability of the following Union proposal:[1]

Article 13, Section 6 (Shift Work)

> Unit employees working on a shift at the time of conversion to daylight savings time will have the option of using one hour of annual leave or working an additional hour as a method of maintaining their regular 8 hour shift.

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency alleges the proposal is nonnegotiable because (1) it interferes with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) and (2) it interferes with management's elective right to determine the numbers, types and grades of employees assigned to a work project or tour of duty under section 7106(b)(1).

[1] The petition as originally filed requested review as to 2 Union proposals. Subsequently, the Union withdrew its request as to one proposal. That proposal will not be considered further here.

The Union argues that the proposal is not contrary to law, rule or agency regulation. The Union contends, without controversion, that the proposal would affect a maximum of five employees working on their regular shift when standard time changes to daylight savings time each year. The Union's intent is to insure that those few employees would not lose an hour of pay due to this artificially created circumstance.

III. Analysis

A. Right to Assign Work

In the present case, contrary to the Agency's contention, the proposal would not interfere with management's right to assign work by giving employees the option of working an additional hour. That right set forth in section 7106(a)(2)(B) includes the right to determine (1) what particular duties will be assigned, (2) when work assignments will occur, and (3) to whom or to what position duties will be assigned. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769, 775 (1980), aff'd sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982). Prior to the change from standard to daylight savings time the Agency had already assigned work to these employees to be done during their normal shift. There is no showing in the record to indicate that the proposal would interfere with that previous work assignment. It would not interfere with management's right to assign particular duties, management's determination of when work assignments will occur or who will be assigned certain work. Further, the Authority concludes that the proposal does not require the Agency to grant an employee annual leave where mission needs dictate otherwise. See National Treasury Employees Union and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, 14 FLRA 179 (1984). Therefore, contrary to the Agency's argument, the Authority finds that the proposal does not interfere with the Agency's right to assign work by granting employees the option of taking annual leave.

B. Elective Right to Determine Numbers, Types, and Grades

The Agency argues that the proposal has the effect of allowing employees to decide that twice the number of employees management has determined necessary would be assigned to a tour of duty. It alleges that this concerns the "numbers, types, and grades of employees or positions assigned to any organizational subdivision, work project, or tour of duty," which is a matter negotiable only at the election of the Agency.

The Authority has consistently held that a proposal would be negotiable only at the election of an agency under this provision of section 7106(b)(1) if (1) the language of the proposal explicitly relates to the numbers, types, and grades of employees or positions assigned to a tour of duty so as to come within the literal language of that section, or (2) the agency demonstrates that the proposal is directly or integrally related to the numbers, types, and grades of employees or positions assigned to a tour of duty so as to be determinative of numbers, types, or grades. See, for example, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2875 and Department of Commerce, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, National Marine Fisheries Service, Southeast Fisheries Center, Miami Laboratory, Florida, 5 FLRA 441, 444-45 (1981). The proposal here does not on its face explicitly relate to the numbers, types, and grades of employees or positions assigned to a tour of duty nor has the Agency demonstrated that a yearly one hour shift adjustment for 5 employees has a direct or integral relationship to the assignment of employees to tours of duty. Specifically, there is no indication in the record that the yearly adjustment would establish a new shift or tour of duty or effect changes in the numbers, types, and grades of employees or positions assigned to shifts.

In the Authority's view, implementation of the proposal would amount to a minor, once-a-year adjustment in the quitting time of the affected employees assigned to this tour of duty. The Authority has held in a number of cases that minor changes in starting and quitting times of previously established shifts is a matter subject to the duty to bargain. See, for example, Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Washington, D.C., and its Chicago Airways Facilities Sector and Professional Airways Systems Specialists, AFL-CIO, 16 FLRA 479, 481 (1984) and cases cited therein. We therefore determine that the Agency has failed to demonstrate that the proposal interferes with its elective right to determine the numbers, types, and grades of employees assigned to a work project or tour of duty under the Statute.

IV. Conclusion

The Authority finds, based on the foregoing analysis, that the Union's proposal is within the duty to bargain under the Statute.2/

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain on this proposal.3/

2/ We note that the Comptroller General has determined that an agency may by union agreement or agency policy permit employees to work an additional hour on the day that daylight savings time begins as a method of maintaining the regular 8-hour shift and normal pay. 57 Comp. Gen. 429 (1978). Our conclusion here is consistent with that decision. However, we agree with the Agency's view that the Comptroller General decision is not dispositive of the issue decided in this case concerning the negotiability of the proposal under the Statute.

3/ In deciding that the proposal is within the duty to bargain, the Authority makes no judgment as to its merits.

Case No. 0-AR-960

UNITED STATES ARMY CORPS OF

Activity

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Gary L. Axon filed on behalf of the Activity by the Department of the Army (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance arose when the Activity discontinued payment of night differential pay for certain power plant operational personnel who worked night shift hours. The Activity based its action on the 1983 Pacific Northwest Regional Power Rate Schedule issued by the Department of Defense Wage Fixing Authority.

The wages of the employees involved are governed by the Prevailing Rate Systems Act of 1972, which is codified at 5 U.S.C. §§ 5341-5349 and which is commonly referred to as the prevailing rate statute.[1] Section 5341 provides that the general policy of the prevailing rate statute is that the rates of pay of prevailing rate employees are to be fixed and adjusted from time to time, as nearly as is consistent with the public interest, in accordance with the prevailing rates paid for comparable work in the local area by private sector employers. Under section 5343, which establishes the basic mechanism to carry out this policy, the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) is responsible for defining geographical wage areas and for designating a lead agency for each area. 5 U.S.C. § 5343(a)(1) and (2). Lead agencies are responsible for conducting wage surveys, analyzing wage survey data, and developing and establishing appropriate wage schedules and rates for prevailing rate employees. 5 U.S.C. § 5343(a)(3). The head of each agency having prevailing rate employees in a wage area is required to apply to those employees the wage schedules and rates established by the lead agency. 5 U.S.C. § 5343(a)(4). OPM has implemented the prevailing rate statute in 5 CFR part 532, Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) chapter 532 and FPM Supplement 532-1. Section 5343(f) of the prevailing rate statute and FPM Supp. 532-1 provide for the payment of a night differential for prevailing rate employees.

[1] Watervliet Arsenal, Department of the Army and National Association of Government Employees, Local R2-98, 10 FLRA 670 (1982).

With regard to the prevailing rate employees involved in this case, OPM designated the Department of Defense Wage Fixing Authority (DOD WFA) as the lead agency to conduct wage surveys among private electric utilities in the area in which the Activity operated hydroelectric power producing plants and to develop and establish the appropriate wage schedules. DOD WFA's Pacific Northwest Power Rate Schedule established the rates of pay for the Activity's prevailing rate employees. In addition, the employees were authorized night shift differential pay as provided for in the prevailing rate statute and FPM Supp. 532-1. Moreover, the parties' collective bargaining agreement provided that night differential would be paid in accordance with FPM Supp. 532-1.

In 1982, the Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1982 was signed into law (Pub. L. No. 97-257, 96 Stat. 832). That Act provides, in part:

> Without regard to any other provision of law limiting the amounts payable to prevailing wage rate employees, United States Army Corps of Engineers employees paid from Corps of Engineers Special Power Rate Schedules shall be paid, beginning the effective date of each annual wage survey in the region after the date of enactment of this Act, wages as determined by the Department of Defense Wage Fixing Authority to be consistent with > wages of the Department of Energy and the Department of the Interior employees performing similar work in the corresponding area. . . .

The legislative history of the provision indicates that Congress was concerned that Corps of Engineers power plant employees were being paid less than employees of the Departments of Interior and Energy in the same geographic area who were doing comparable jobs, and that Congress intended to correct that inequity. Thus, the Senate Committee Report on the Act provides:

> The Committee has been informed that certain Corps of Engineers power plant operational personnel are paid less than personnel of the agencies doing comparable jobs in nearby locations. The Committee believes that all Federal employees should receive comparable compensation for performing comparable work and has concurred with the House provision in the bill that would remove the inequity.

S. Rep. No. 97-516, 97th Cong., 2nd Sess. 80 (1982).

In 1983, DOD WFA issued the first Pacific Northwest Regional Power Rate Schedule pursuant to the Supplemental Appropriations Act, following wage surveys at Interior and Energy facilities in the region. Those surveys revealed that while Interior and Energy employees in comparable positions were compensated at higher rates than Corps of Engineers employees in some respects, such as overtime pay, they were not paid shift differential. Accordingly, DOD WFA's 1983 Rate Schedule and subsequent amendments provided for pay rates for Corps of Engineer employees consistent with the rates for Interior and Energy employees and specifically excluded shift differential pay. The Activity implemented the Rate Schedule and discontinued payment of shift differential to its prevailing rate employees. The Union then filed the grievance in this case alleging that the Activity had thereby violated the parties' agreement.

The Arbitrator determined that the parties' agreement expressly provided for payment of shift differential and that nothing in the Supplemental Appropriations Act required covered employees to forego the benefits of the agreement.

Accordingly, as his award, the Arbitrator concluded that the Activity had violated the parties' agreement by discontinuing payment of shift differential. As a remedy, the Arbitrator awarded the affected employees backpay from the date the shift differential was discontinued and directed the Activity to reinstitute shift differential pay until the execution of a new agreement.

III. EXCEPTION

As one of its exceptions, the Agency contends the Arbitrator's award is contrary to the Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1982.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSION

The Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1982 clearly and unequivocally requires that prevailing rate employees of the Corps of Engineers paid from the Corps of Engineers Special Power Rate Schedules shall be paid wages as determined by the DOD WFA to be consistent with wages of employees of the Departments of the Interior and Energy who perform similar work in the corresponding area. Further, the DOD WFA, the agency exclusively authorized to establish the appropriate wage schedules and rates for Corps of Engineers prevailing rate employees, determined that Interior and Energy employees in comparable positions were not paid a shift differential. Therefore, in view of the clear language of the Supplemental Appropriations Act and the intent of Congress as expressed in the related legislative history, shift differential could no longer be paid to the affected Corps of Engineers employees after DOD WFA made its determination. The Authority finds that because the Supplemental Appropriations Act effectively prohibited payment of a shift differential to the Activity's prevailing rate employees after DOD WFA's determination, the Arbitrator was precluded from directing otherwise. Consequently, the Authority concludes that the Arbitrator's award is deficient as contrary to the Supplemental Appropriations Act of 1982.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Arbitrator's award is set aside.[2/]

ORDER DISMISSING PETITION FOR REVIEW

This case is before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2424.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations on a petition for review of negotiability issues filed by the Union. For the reasons indicated below, it has been determined that the Union's petition for review was untimely filed and must be dismissed on that basis.

Under section 7117(c)(2) of the Statute and section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the time limit for filing a petition for review of negotiability issues is 15 days after service on the Union of the Agency's allegation that the duty to bargain in good faith does not extend to the matter proposed to be bargained. Further, under section 2429.23(d) of the Authority's rules of procedure, the time limit established in section 7117(c)(2) of the Statute may not extended or waived by the Authority.

As part of its petition for review, the Union submitted a copy of the Agency's allegation of nonnegotiability dated January 22, 1986, which allegation apparently was served on the Union by mail on the same date. Therefore, under section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations as well as sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 which also are applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, the petition for review had to be filed, that is, received in the national office of the Authority, no later than the close of business on February 11, 1986.

However, the petition for review was mistakenly addressed to the Authority's Washington Regional Office and sent by certified mail on February 6, 1986. The regional office has no record of receipt of such appeal, and the Union advises that it does not have proof of receipt. Although another copy of the petition for review was later sent to the Authority at its national office in Washington, D.C., it was not filed until March 19, 1986, and thus was untimely.

Accordingly, as the Union's petition for review was untimely filed, and apart from other considerations, it is hereby dismissed.

For the Authority.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority, in accordance with section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, based on a stipulation of facts by the parties, who have agreed that no material issue of fact exists. Briefs for the Authority's consideration were filed by the Respondent and by the General Counsel.

The complaint alleges that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by refusing to recognize and bargain in good faith with a representative designated by the Charging Party (the Union) for collective bargaining purposes. Specifically, the complaint alleges that on or about April 1, 1985,*/ supervisor Brenda Hooks told Union President Fiori Perdichizzi that employee Joel Litzky could not serve as a member of, and would not be available to serve on, the Union negotiating team.

II. The Facts

On or about January 14, the parties agreed to ground rules for the negotiation of a new collective bargaining agreement which provided, in part, for negotiations to begin on April 16, to be conducted in two-week sessions, with two weeks between each session, until completed. The Union's team members were to be granted official time to participate in the negotiations. The Union then designated its negotiating team, which included Litzky. Litzky was part of the Respondent's Conrail Division, whose function was to give support to the Secretary of Transportation in accomplishing, by Congressional mandate, including deadlines, the transfer of Conrail to the private sector. On April 1, Hooks orally advised Perdichizzi that Litzky would not be given official time to serve as a member of the Union negotiating team because of workload considerations. Litzky then informed Perdichizzi that his current workload should not prevent him from participating in negotiations as, in his opinion, he was up to date on all overdue or urgent correspondence. On April 9, Hooks informed Perdichizzi by memorandum that, due to workload constraints, Litzky would not be given official time to serve on the Union negotiating team. By memorandum dated April 12, Perdichizzi notified the Respondent that, due to its actions, the Union would not proceed with negotiations as scheduled.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent states that, after being informed that Litzky had been selected by the Union, it thoroughly reviewed both his current and anticipated workload; estimated that Litzky's participation as a member of the bargaining team would require that at least one half of his duty time be devoted to the negotiating sessions; noted that Litzky already held the position of grievance chairperson, which position itself would require some duty time; and concluded that Litzky's function as the sole person who, among other duties, had been answering Congressional inquiries, was critical to the Conrail Division's mandate. The Respondent argues that its actions did not constitute either an interference with the rights of the Union or Litzky, or a failure to negotiate in good faith, but rather were a proper exercise of management's right to determine that its workload in view of all these considerations would not permit it to release Litzky from his assigned duties to allow him to participate in negotiations at that time.

The General Counsel argues that management interfered with the Union's right to designate its own representative(s) for collective bargaining purposes, noting that the ground rules agreed to by the parties said nothing more than that the parties would designate their respective representatives, and argues that Litzky, having been designated by the Union, must therefore be accepted by management as a member of the Union's team. The General Counsel also argues that Litzky's duties at the time were not so demanding or critical as to justify management's argument that he could not be spared to serve on the Union's team.

IV. Analysis

The actions of the Respondent complained of here arose out of a conflict between the right of employee Litzky to official time, under section 7131 of the Statute, to serve as a designated member of the Union's bargaining team and the right of management, under section 7106 of the Statute, to manage consistent with an effective and efficient Government. Section 7101 of the Statute provides both for the right of employees to participate in the collective bargaining process through labor organizations of their own choosing and for the safeguarding of the public interest in maintaining an effective and efficient Government. Thus, the Authority has held that management cannot deny official time for representational functions, including negotiations, to a representative of the exclusive representative unless it can show that the use of official time will interfere with the accomplishment of the agency's work. On the other hand, the Authority has also explained that an exclusive representative cannot claim that it is entitled to the allocation of official time to a particular employee without regard to management's needs and requirements regarding the performance of assigned work. See Department of the Navy, Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, Virginia, 15 FLRA 867 (1984); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council of Locals No. 214 and Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 19 FLRA No. 23 (1985); petition for review filed, sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, Council of Locals No. 214 v. FLRA, No. 85-1500 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 12, 1985); Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, 20 FLRA No. 89 (1985), petition for review filed, sub nom. National Association of Government Employees, Local R7-23 v. FLRA, No. 86-1011 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 7, 1986).

In light of these principles, it is the Authority's view that the Respondent's denial of official time to employee Litzky was not unlawful, as it has demonstrated that the use of official time by him at the time requested, would have interfered with the accomplishment of the agency's work. In this regard, it is noted that the Respondent was operating under a Congressional mandate which included time constraints. Litzky was performing a function which in management's judgment was essential, and which required his particular expertise. This was explained to the Union in management's April 9 memorandum. Conversely, Litzky was but one of five designated members of the Union's negotiating team, and it is neither alleged nor shown that Litzky was essential to the functioning of the Union's bargaining team so that his absence required the Union to discontinue negotiations or that the right to name another representative in his place was requested or denied. In short, it appears that the argument of the General Counsel is that the right to choose employees as members of a union bargaining team is absolute. As noted above, however, the Authority has previously held to the contrary.

V. Conclusion

The Authority has considered all the facts and circumstances of this case, including the positions of the parties, and concludes that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1) or (5) of the Statute, as alleged, and therefore we shall dismiss the complaint.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 3-CA-50265 be, and it hereby is, dismissed in its entirety.

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

Subsequent thereto, the Union petitioned for review of the Authority's decision in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit (No. 83-2180). Thereafter, the Authority filed and the court granted a motion to remand in order to allow the Authority an opportunity to address with more particularity in a supplemental decision the application of Internal Revenue Service and Brookhaven Service Center, 9 FLRA 930 (1982), to the instant case.

The Authority accepts the court's opinion as the law of the case and, consistent with that opinion, shall issue the following remedial order:

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the Bureau of Government Financial Operations, Headquarters, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Conducting formal discussions with employees in the bargaining unit exclusively represented by the National Treasury Employees Union, concerning grievances or any personnel policy or practices or other general conditions of employment, without affording the NTEU prior notice of, and the opportunity to be represented at, such formal discussions.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter;

(8) to otherwise fail or refuse to comply with any provision of this chapter[.]

(a) Notify the National Treasury Employees Union of, and afford it the opportunity to be represented at, formal discussions with members of the bargaining unit exclusively represented by the NTEU concerning grievances or any personnel policy or practices or other general conditions of employment.

(b) Post at its facility where employees in the bargaining unit are located copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by an appropriate official of the Respondent, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

Issued, Washington, D.C., April 28, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions filed by the General Counsel to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The issue concerns whether the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by failing and refusing to furnish the Charging Party (the Union) with information it had requested pursuant to section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute.

II. Background and Judge's Conclusion

The basic facts in this case are not in dispute, and were stipulated to the Judge at the hearing. Based upon various "complaints" allegedly reported to it by employees of the Respondent's Downtown New York District Office, the Union requested that the Respondent furnish to the Union certain information pursuant to section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute. Basically the Union asked that it be furnished the names of all employees in the District Office who had been during the past 12 months, or were currently, under a performance improvement plan; the operative dates of the plans; and the race, sex, color, national origin, religion and age of all those identified. The Union stated only that the information requested was "necessary in connection with the processing of a possible grievance." By an exchange of letters, it became clear that the Union would accept only unsanitized information, and that the Respondent refused to furnish the requested information unless the Union supplied enough of an explanation that would allow management to make an informed judgment as to whether or to what extent the information sought was necessary for collective bargaining purposes.

The Judge found that the Respondent was entitled to know why the information requested was needed by the Union, that the only reason given was insufficient, and that, in the face of the Union's refusal to clarify the request the Respondent was not obligated under the Statute to furnish the information.

The Judge further addressed the arguments raised by the parties in connection with the Privacy Act, particularly the Respondent's assertion that the "presumptive relevance theory" asserted by the General Counsel was inapplicable to the information requests because of Privacy Act considerations and the General Counsel's contention that the requirements of the Privacy Act had been met. In Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration and Social Security Administration, Field Operations, New York Region, 21 FLRA No. 35 (1986), the Authority basically adopted its Administrative Law Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended dismissal of the complaint. In that case, involving these same parties, the Judge noted that even assuming the information requested was presumptively relevant, since the Union was seeking unsanitized data of a personal nature, the Respondent's obligation to adhere to the Privacy Act had to be balanced against the Union's need for the information. Considering the Respondent's obligations under the Privacy Act and the Statute, he found no merit to the General Counsel's "presumptive relevance theory" in the circumstances of the case, where the necessity of the data to the Union was never conveyed to the Respondent and such necessity was not apparent from the surrounding circumstances. The Judge here cited to and adopted the analysis and reasoning of the Judge in 21 FLRA No. 35, and in the circumstances of this case recommended that the complaint be dismissed.

III. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel basically argues that the information sought by the Union was necessary to enable it to determine whether a grievance or EEO complaint should be filed under the parties' agreement or to take other appropriate action; that the Union's explanation that the information was "necessary in connection with the processing of a possible grievance" was sufficiently precise, i.e., the requirement of establishing relevancy and necessity was met because the information was "presumptively relevant"; and that the Judge erred by failing to find the violations as alleged. Further, the General Counsel asserts that the "routine use" exception in the Privacy Act permits the disclosure of the requested information. More specifically, the General Counsel asserts that section 552(a)(b)(3) of the Privacy Act permits the disclosure of the requested information which is contained in a system of records maintained by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) identified as OPM/GOVT-2, "Employee Performance File System Records." The Respondent, whose arguments before the Judge were basically adopted, did not file an opposition brief with the Authority.

IV. Analysis

In agreement with the Judge, the Authority finds that the General Counsel has not met the burden of proving that the Respondent failed to comply with section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute in violation of section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute when it failed to furnish the requested information to the Union. In reaching this conclusion, the Authority rejects the General Counsel's contention that the information sought was presumptively relevant. Rather, as the Authority has previously held, section 7114(b)(4)(B) of the Statute requires that the information requested be "reasonably available and necessary," Social Security Administration, Office of Hearings and Appeals, Region II, New York, New York, 19 FLRA No. 47 (1985), and that a union's bare assertion that it needs data to process a grievance does not automatically oblige the agency to supply such data, but the duty to supply data under section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute turns upon the nature of the request and the circumstances in each particular case. Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES), Fort Carson, Colorado, 17 FLRA 624 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1345 v. FLRA, No. 85-1378 (D.C. Cir. June 21, 1985). In the instant case, the record reveals that the Union failed and refused to explain why it was seeking the information despite management's reasonable requests for clarification so that it could make an informed judgment as to whether or to what extent the information sought was necessary for collective bargaining purposes. Thus, under such circumstances, the Authority finds that the Respondent did not unlawfully refuse to furnish the data sought by the Union. See Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration and Social Security Administration, Field Operations, New York Region, 21 FLRA No. 35 (1986); Internal Revenue Service, Buffalo District, Buffalo, New York, 7 FLRA 654 (1982).*/

V. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions to that Decision, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order except as noted in the footnote. We therefore conclude that the Respondent did not fail to comply with section 7114(b)(4) in violation of section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute when it refused to provide the information sought by the Union. Accordingly, the complaint shall be dismissed.

*/ In view of the finding that the information sought by the Union was not shown to be necessary within the meaning of section 7114(b)(4)(B) of the Statute, the Authority finds it unnecessary to pass upon the Judge's findings pertaining to his consideration of the Privacy Act or the contention that the "routine use" exception in the Privacy Act permits the disclosure of the requested information.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 2-CA-40326 be, and it hereby is, dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding arising under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101 et seq., 92 Stat. 1191, (hereinafter referred to as the Statute) and the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA), 5 C.F.R. Chapter XIV, § 2410, et seq.

The charge in this matter was filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (herein called the Charging Party or the Union) against the Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, and Social Security Administration Field Operations, New York Region (herein collectively called the Respondent), on May 1, 1984. On June 29, 1984, the General Counsel of the FLRA by the Regional Director for Region II issued a Complaint and Notice of Hearing alleging that Respondent has engaged in, and is engaging in, unfair labor practices within the meaning of Sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute, by failing and refusing to furnish the Union certain necessary and relevant information relating to the issuance of Performance Improvement Plans (PIPs) at Respondent's Downtown New York District Office, which information was necessary and relevant in order to determine whether a grievance should be filed under the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

On July 17, 1984, Respondent filed an answer denying the substantive allegations of the complaint.

A hearing was held before the undersigned in New York, New York and the Union, Respondent and General Counsel of the FLRA were represented. All parties had the opportunity to examine witnesses, submit documents and other evidence. All parties entered into an extensive stipulation of facts. Post-hearing briefs have been filed and duly considered.

Based upon the entire record herein I make the following:

Findings of Fact

At all times material herein, the Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration (herein called DHHS SSA), has been, and is now, an agency within the meaning of Section 7103(a)(3) of the Statute. Additionally, SSA Field Operations, New York Region, has been, and is now, a constituent entity within DHHS SSA and an agent acting on its behalf. The SSA Downtown New York District Office has been, and is now, a constituent entity within DHHS SSA and an agent acting on its behalf.

At all times material herein, the Charging Party has been, and is now, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 7103(a)(4) of the Statute. Additionally, the Union has been, and is now, the certified exclusive collective bargaining representative for a consolidated, nationwide unit of certain employees of Respondent, including all employees employed in the District and Branch Offices of DHHS SSA in the States of New York and New Jersey, with exclusions not relevant herein. Pursuant to appropriate delegations of authority, the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3369, AFL-CIO (AFGE Local 3369), has been recognized by Respondent as the agent of the Union for the purposes of collective bargaining at the SSA Downtown New York District Office. The parties are operating under a national collective bargaining agreement (herein called the Agreement) effective June 11, 1982.

During late February and March of 1984, several unit employees from Respondent's Downtown New York District Office contacted AFGE Local 3369 President John Riordan. Riordan subsequently discussed complaints made by these employees with AFGE Local 3369's on-site representative at Respondent's Downtown New York District Office. Based on the complaints of the employees and the discussion with the on-site representative, the Union believed that potential discrimination complaints and/or grievances existed regarding Equal Employment Opportunity (herein called EEO) matters or the issuance of Performance Improvement Plans (herein called PIPs) at Respondent's Downtown New York District Office. A PIP may have serious consequences for an employee, including possible denial of a within-grade-increase, an adverse action or a reassignment. A PIP is a written plan prepared for an employee who in his or her supervisor's judgment is failing to meet one or more critical elements of his or her generic job tasks (performance standards) and/or may be denied his or her next within-grade-increase (herein called a WIGI). A PIP may result in a possible denial of a WIGI. It may also lead to an adverse action or a reassignment. For probationary employees, a PIP may lead directly to termination. PIPs last for a specific period of time, usually 60 or more days.

Article 24 of the Agreement concerns grievance procedures. Under Section 9 of Article 24, an employee, or the Union on behalf of an employee or employees, can file a grievance regarding EEO matters or PIP issues. Section 10 of Article 24 permits the Charging Party to file a Union-Management grievance concerning EEO matters or PIP issues. Additionally, Article 18, Section 5 of the Agreement provides for the filing of an EEO complaint under Respondent's "agency EEO complaint procedure." Finally, Article 24, Section 8 of the Agreement provides for discussion with an EEO counselor prior to the filing of an EEO complaint.

Based on the information from the employees of the Downtown District Office and the Union's belief that potential grievances or complaints existed, Riordan, by letter dated March 30, 1984, requested certain information from the District Manager of Respondent's Downtown New York District Office, Jefferson Woodcox. Pursuant to Section 7114(b) of the Statute, Riordan requested:

> 1. Names and positions of all employees in the Downtown district office currently under a performance improvement plan (PIP) in accordance with Article 21, Section 7, C of the National Agreement.
> 2. Dates that PIPs were initiated for each employee.
> 3. Names and positions of all employees in the Downtown district office that were placed on a PIP in the last twelve months but not currently on a PIP.
> 4. Dates that PIPs were initiated and concluded for each employee.

> 5. Please provide the race, sex, color, national orgin (sic), religion (if known) and indicate if employee is age forty or above for all employees given PIPs in (1) and (3) above.

Additionally, the letter stated that the information requested was "necessary in connection with the processing of a possible grievance." This was the sole reason made known to the Respondent for the data requested.

The information requested in the March 30, 1984 letter in numbered paragraphs (1) through (4) and in paragraph (5) as to race, sex and age was normally maintained by Respondent in the regular course of business and did not constitute guidance, advice, counsel or training provided for management officials or supervisors relating to collective bargaining. Additionally, the information sought was not available to the Union from any other source.

Charging Party requested the names and positions of employees currently on PIPs and the dates the PIPs were initiated because it would enable the Union to determine whether management had issued a disproportionate number of PIPs and because such information would be relevant in determining whether to file a grievance or an EEO complaint. The Union also sought the dates that PIPs were initiated for the purpose of correlating the PIPs and other possible contemporaneous actions by, against or involving the unit employees. The Union sought the identification of employees on PIPs in the prior twelve months and the dates of the PIPs because only a few employees might have been on PIPs at the time of the March 30, 1984 request, but additional employees might have been on and completed PIPs prior to that date. The information was relevant for determining whether a disproportionate number of employees were on PIPs and whether such PIPs were related to other actions involving the employees. These facts would help determine whether a grievance or complaint would be filed. Finally, the information regarding the race, sex, color, national origin, religion and age of the employees issued PIPs in the prior twelve months was requested to enable the Union to determine whether to file a grievance or an EEO complaint. The information requested was required and requested in unsanitized form in order to permit the Union to investigate and pursue fully any potential grievances or EEO complaints under the negotiated grievance procedure or the agency EEO procedure.

By letter dated April 10, 1984, District Manager Woodcox refused to furnish the information requested by Riordan in the March 30, 1984 letter. Woodcox stated that Riordan's request appeared to address the same issue as an information request made by another official of AFGE Local 3369. Woodcox also indicated if that were not the case, he wanted to know the issue and whether it related to an EEO complaint. Woodcox explained that this information would assist him in deciding whether or not to release, in an unsanitized format, some or all of the data the Union had requested.

By letter dated April 16, 1984, Riordan replied to Woodcox's letter of April 10, 1984. Riordan indicated his information request did not address the same issues as the request Woodcox had received from another Union official. He repeated that the sole purpose for the information was a "possible grievance." He also explained that information in a sanitized format would not allow the Union to determine whether it should file a grievance. Riordan acknowledged that a small part of his request may have been duplicative of the request of the other Union official, but he asked Woodcox to furnish to him all the information that he had requested that was not duplicative after furnishing the duplicative information to the other Union official.

By letter dated April 24, 1984, Woodcox again refused to furnish the information requested by the Union in the March 30 and April 16, 1984 letters. Woodcox stated in the letter that duplication of information was no longer a problem. Additionally, he informed Riordan that in order to provide data in an unsanitized form, he needed to know "the precise nature of the potential grievance" so that he could determine whether the requested information in unsanitized form was necessary and relevant. Woodcox further stated that unless he was informed of the precise nature of the potential grievance, he could only provide Riordan with a sanitized list of employees currently under a PIP. Finally, concerning the Union's request for data on race, national origin and religion, Woodcox stated that he could not visually ascertain these characteristics and would not consider asking such questions of the employees involved.

Since April 24, 1984, Respondent has failed and refused to furnish to the Charging Party the information requested by it in numbered paragraphs (1) through (4) and paragraph (5) as to race, sex and age of the March 30, 1984 letter. Other than the correspondence referred to above, no other communications between the parties regarding Charging Party's information request have occurred. At no time has Respondent contended that the information, requested in paragraph (1) through (4) and paragraph (5) as to race, sex and age of the March 30, 1984 information request, is not reasonably available.*/ Respondent never advised the Charging Party as to the availability of the information requested in the March 30, 1984 letter relating to the color, national origin and religion of the employees on PIPs in the prior twelve months.

Discussion and Conclusions of Law

General Counsel of the FLRA contends that the information requested by Charging Party regarding the PIPs was necessary and relevant to enable Charging Party to determine whether to file a grievance or EEO complaint under the agreement and therefore Respondent's failure to furnish the data violated Sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute.

*/ In fact, information was maintained as to race, sex and age.

Section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute sets forth the duty of Respondent to furnish data, upon request, to the Charging Party, the exclusive collective representative or its authorized agent, AFGE Local 2369. The obligation to provide data encompasses information that: (A) is normally maintained by the agency in the regular course of business; (B) is reasonably available; (C) is necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining; (D) does not constitute guidance, advice, counsel or training provided for management officials or supervisors relating to collective bargaining; and (E) is not prohibited from disclosure by law. The record is clear in this case that the Union requested the names and positions of all employees currently on PIPs and the dates such PIPs were initiated; the names and positions of all employees on PIPs in the prior twelve months and the dates of such PIPs; and the race, sex, color, national origin, religion and age of the above employees. Further, the record clearly demonstrates that all of the information, with the exception of the data regarding color, national origin and religion, was normally maintained by Respondent in the regular course of business. Equally clear from the record is the fact that the information, with the same exceptions mentioned above, does not constitute guidance, advice, counsel or training provided to management officials or supervisors relating to collective bargaining. Finally, it appears from the record that the requested information, with the same exceptions noted above, was reasonably available to Respondent. Respondent has not claimed otherwise and it is reasonable to assume that the information, relating as it does to the identity and work performance of unit employees, would be reasonably available to the supervisors of those employees, including District Manager Woodcox.

Respondent essentially contends that the Union was obligated to advise Respondent at the time of the request of the relevancy and necessity of obtaining the information in an unsanitized form and the Union's failure to do so, when so requested, privileged Respondent's refusal to furnish the data. General Counsel of the FLRA argues the information sought was of such a nature as to be presumptively relevant and necessary and therefore, the Union was not required to provide Respondent with any specific showing of relevancy and necessity. Respondent argues that the presumptive relevance theory is inapplicable to the requests herein, especially in view of the requirements of the Privacy Act of 1974, 5 U.S.C. § 552 a. In Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, and Social Security Administration Field Operations, New York Region, OALJ 85-56 (1985), Administrative Law Judge Salvatore J. Arrigo analyzed in detail the state of the law with respect to the Section 7114(b)(4) rights of labor organizations to information, Respondents' rights to know why the information is needed and the area of presumptive relevancy. Judge Arrigo discussed, in detail, both the cases under the Statute and in the private sector. I adopt his analyses, reasoning and conclusions in this regard, especially when he states at page 23 of his decision:

> "Rather I conclude that under the Statute when unsanitized personal information is sought wherein Privacy Act considerations are legitimately raised, sufficient facts demonstrating a union's need must be available to an agency as the employer can balance the union's need for the information against the employer's duties and obligations under the Privacy Act and the Statute."

In light of the foregoing conclusion, in the subject case Respondent had a legitimate Privacy Act concern as to whether to provide the Union with the unsanitized PIPs and the requested information concerning race, sex, age, etc. of the employees involved. Respondent was therefore entitled to know why the Union needed the requested information so Respondent could balance the Privacy Act considerations with those of the Statute. The Union's mere statement that the information was "necessary in connection with the processing of a possible grievance" was not sufficiently precise to have permitted Respondent to balance its various duties and obligations under the Privacy Act and the Statute. Thus Respondent had no obligation to produce the requested information until advised of the precise reason the unsanitized information was needed.

Accordingly I conclude that Respondent did not violate the Statute when it refused to furnish the Union with the requested data and I recommend the Authority issue the following:

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority because the General Counsel filed exceptions to the Decision of the Administrative Law Judge which dismissed the complaint. The Respondent filed an opposition. The case arose as a result of the Respondents' refusal to supply the Charging Party with certain documents relating to employee misuse of time clocks, which the Union had requested in connection with the processing of a grievance. The request for information was made under the provisions of section 7114(b)(4) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). The refusal is alleged to have violated section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute. The issue is whether, in the facts of this case, the information requested was normally maintained, reasonably available, and necessary to enable the exclusive representative to fulfill its representational obligations.

II. Facts

The American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1592 (Union) is an affiliate member of AFGE Council 214, the exclusive representative of a nationwide bargaining unit of nonsupervisory and nonprofessional employees of the Air Force Logistics Command which encompasses employees located at Hill Air Force Base.

The grievance which gave rise to the information request in this case arose as the result of a one-day suspension given to a unit employee for punching in his supervisor's time card on several occasions while the supervisor was parking a car used by them in a car pool. On June 5, 1984, the Union requested from Respondent Hill Air Force Base "[a] copy of any and all records, from bargaining unit members and managers, throughout AFLC, in regards to misuse of time clocks and the disciplinary action proposed as a result of such." It was noted that the records sought would be used for the purpose of "Grievance processing or other representational activity."

Three or four days after receipt of the June 5 request, the Respondent called the Union seeking to clarify the nature of the information sought. As found by the Judge, the Union repeated its request for the records of all AFLC disciplinary actions and decisions relating to the misuse of time clocks in order to process the grievance in question, making it clear that the Union was seeking records of all AFLC disciplinary actions relating to the misuse of time clocks. The Judge found that the Union did not otherwise limit its request. Although the Union testified that it needed the disciplinary records to ascertain whether or not the penalty imposed on the unit employee conformed to the parties' negotiated agreement and relevant portions of Air Force Regulation 40-750, entitled "Discipline and Adverse Actions," its request was phrased in broad language "[t]o obtain all the records, not just the ones that management wanted to send up," and the Union conceded that "misuse of time clocks" could refer to a number of possible violations other than the one involved in the grievance at issue.

The information sought by the Union is located throughout the Air Force Logistics Command which consists of seven separate field activities. Each of the field activities has a Central Civilian Personnel Office which maintains records of proposed and final disciplinary actions for a three-year period. The Judge noted in detail the facts concerning records requested and the amount of time and staff work which would be necessary to produce the information. In addition, the facts, as found by the Judge, show that files maintained on unit employees by over 6,000 supervisors contain certain kinds of discipline for time clock misuse, and found that the Union's request contemplated the production of these files. Respondent Hill Air Force Base denied the information request, stating that it did not maintain the information sought and that the request did not "meet the criteria of 5 USC 7114(b)(4)."

III. Administrative Law Judge's Decision

The Judge concluded that the General Counsel did not sustain the burden of proving that the data sought was reasonably available and necessary within the meaning of section 7114(b)(4)(B) of the Statute for the purpose of processing a grievance. Therefore, he recommended dismissal of the complaint. In reaching this result, he found that the Union's request for information included all disciplinary records from all elements of the Air Force Logistics Command relating in any way to the misuse of time clocks, a request so broad that it encompassed circumstances and violations far different from the specific one involved in the grievance in this case. In addition, the Judge found that as the Air Force regulations for penalties do not require "mathematical rigidity," in his opinion a comparison of penalties would not be relevant and necessary to processing the grievance, despite the guiding principle of "like penalties for like offenses in like circumstances." He also determined that the information was not reasonably available because it would require a search of the "hundreds of disciplinary files" in seven different locations and the individual files maintained by more than 6,000 first level supervisors.

IV. Exceptions to the Judge's Decision

The General Counsel excepted to a number of the Judge's findings of fact which led to disagreement with his findings and conclusions.

V. Analysis

The Authority finds, in agreement with the Judge's conclusion, that the information request by the Union was too broad because it sought data which was neither reasonably available nor necessary for the processing of the grievance involved in this case. While management requested clarification of the information sought, the Union nevertheless did not limit its request for all disciplinary records relating to the misuse of time clocks. This request could have included information contained in personnel files maintained by over 6,000 first level supervisors, as well as hundreds of disciplinary files from the various civilian personnel offices. Moreover, because the request was so general, it sought data about proposed and imposed disciplinary actions for offenses other than the one involved in the grievance. Thus, the Authority agrees with the Judge that the request was so broad that much of the data sought was unnecessary to the processing of the grievance,*/ and additionally was not reasonably available. It should be emphasized, however, that a narrowly framed request for information about proposed and actual disciplinary actions in like circumstances might have been deemed to be necessary, and that a request for necessary data separately maintained in the Personnel Offices of the various facilities where unit employees are located might have been deemed reasonably available. See Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Washington, D.C. and Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Germany Region, 19 FLRA No. 96 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. North Germany Area Council, Overseas Education Association v. FLRA, No. 85-1595 (D.C. Cir. Sept. 20, 1985).

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings made by the Judge at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms the rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision and the entire record, including the parties' contentions, and, except as noted, adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order. Therefore, we shall dismiss the complaint.

*/ The Authority does not agree with the Judge's finding that "the comparison of penalties imposed by a diverse group of AFLC management officials in different environments would not be relevant and necessary to the processing of the . . . grievance." Rather, given the general mandate of "like penalties for like offenses in like circumstances," the Authority would find such data necessary for the Union to fulfill its representational duties if the information related to discipline of unit employees for similar offenses.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This case arose as an unfair labor practice proceeding under the provisions of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 92 Stat. 1191, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq. (hereinafter referred to as "the Statute"), and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder.

The complaint alleged that on or about June 12, 1984, and thereafter, the Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, Air Force Logistics Command, (AFLC), Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio; and Department of the Air Force, Ogden Air Logistics Center, Hill Air Force Base, Utah (Respondents), have refused to supply the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1592 (Charging Party or Union), with certain documents relating to employee misuse of time clocks. It was further alleged that the request was appropriately made under the provisions of Section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute, and that such refusal constituted violations of Sections 7116(a)(1), (5), and (8) of the Statute.

Counsel representing the Respondents contends that the General Counsel failed to establish a violation of Section 7114(b)(4), and argues that the record does not reflect by a preponderance of the evidence that the information sought was necessary for the performance of Union representational responsibilities; or that it was reasonably available. Lastly, the Respondents contend that any obligation to provide the Union with the information was satisfied by the furnishing of certain documents after the filing of the charge.[1]

[1] Following the filing of the charge on July 26, 1984, representatives of the Union and Respondents engaged in settlement discussions to resolve issues generated by the charge. As a result of these settlement discussions, certain Hill Air Force Base disciplinary records were supplied to the Union. Evidence relating to these settlement discussions was introduced by counsel representing the General Counsel in an effort to establish that the production of all similar AFLC records would not be burdensome. (Tr. 72-74). This evidence was not otherwise questioned by opposing counsel. Copies of documents supplied to the Union after the filing of the charge and copies of related correspondence were made a part of the record as G.C. Exh. Nos. 11, 11(a), 11(b), 11(c), 11(d), 11(e), 11(f), 11(g), 11(h), 11(i), 11(j), 11(k), 11(l), and 12.

Testimony and documents relating to settlement discussions occurring after the filing of the charge herein is deemed to be admissible only insofar as it relates to the remedy sought by the General Counsel, inasmuch as the Respondent argued that obligations imposed by Section 7114(b)(4) were fully met by production of relevant Hill Air Force Base disciplinary records after the filing of the charge. However, such evidence is not otherwise admissible, and should not have been received without appropriate limitation. It is well settled that evidence pertaining to settlement discussions may not be utilized to prove the truth or falsity of any allegations set out in the complaint. (Footnote continued)

The parties were represented by counsel during the hearing and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce relevant evidence, and examine and cross-examine witnesses. Based upon the entire record herein, including exhibits, and other relevant evidence adduced at the hearing, and briefs filed by the parties, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.[2]

Findings of Fact

Information Request Relating to Employee Misuse of Time Clocks

The American Federation of Government Employees, Council 214, is the exclusive representative of a nation-wide bargaining unit of nonsupervisory and nonprofessional employees of the AFLC. Certain employees in these categories at the Ogden Air Logistics Center, Hill Air Force Base, Utah are included in the unit. At all times material herein, the Union was an affiliate member of Council 214, and an agent of the Council and AFGE. (G.C. Exh. Nos. 1(c), 1(d), and 13; Tr. 21).

The grievance which gave rise to the information request arose as a result of a disciplinary action brought against Harry Dubach, a Hill Air Force Base employee and bargaining unit member. Dubach received a "Notice of Proposed Suspension" dated April 11, 1984 for punching in his supervisor's time card on several occasions while the supervisor was engaged in parking a car used in a carpool. (G.C. Exh. No. 2). The Notice proposed that Dubach be suspended for one day.[3] Dubach sought Union representation in connection with the matter, and an informal grievance was pursued in an effort to reduce the proposed one-day

The fact that the parties involved offered such evidence or otherwise acquiesced concerning its admission would not operate to modify the rules outlined in authorities cited. Accordingly, such evidence and argument relating thereto have been given no consideration for the purpose of determining the truth or falsity of the allegations of the complaint.

[2] Counsel representing the General Counsel moved to correct errors in the hearing transcript. Under authority reflected in 5 C.F.R. § 2423.19(r), the proposed corrections are approved.

[3] The supervisor was also subjected to disciplinary action for involvement in the practice.

suspension. (Tr. 22-23). However, Dubach's Foreman decided to carry out the proposed penalty. A May 23, 1984, "Decision to Suspend" letter issued, and Dubach served the suspension on May 25, 1984. (G.C. Exh. No. 3, Tr. 23).

Under the provisions of Article 5 of the Master Labor Agreement governing the labor relations of the Union and management officials at Hill Air Force Base, the term "disciplinary action" is defined as "oral admonishment, written reprimands, suspensions, and removals." (G.C. Exh. No. 13, at page 16, Section 5.01(a)). The agreement reflects that discipline is the responsibility of the Employer; and that disciplinary actions, "shall be based on just cause and [shall be] in accordance with applicable regulations." (G.C. Exh. No. 13, at page, 16, Section 5.01(b)).

Air Force Regulation 40-750, dated July 23, 1982, defines "disciplinary action" in substantially the same terms as the Master Labor Agreement. (G.C. Exh. No. 5, Section A, Paragraph (2)(g)). First-level supervisors have been delegated authority to take disciplinary action. (G.C. Exh. No. 5, Section A, Paragraph (6); Tr. 30, 59). Section F, Paragraph (34)(a) of Air Force Regulation 40-750 provides:

> a. Governing Criteria. In determining the appropriate penalty, management observes the principle of "like penalties for like offenses in like circumstances." This means that penalties will be applied as consistently as possible considering the particular circumstances of the cause of disciplinary action. It does not mean that penalties will be applied with ". . . mathematical rigidity or perfect consistency regardless of variations in circumstance or changes in prevailing regulations, standards, or mores," (Douglas v. Veterans Administration, et al., MSPB Decision No. AT075299006, 10 April 1981). The penalty selected should not be disproportionate to the offense, should contribute to the solution of the problem and to the attainment of an effective management environment, and should take into consideration all relevant penalty selection factors.

Section F, Paragraph 34(b) of Air Force Regulation 40-750 lists some factors that may be relevant in penalty selection, and a "Guide to Disciplinary Actions" is provided as an attachment to Air Force Regulation 40-750. The Guide lists typical penalties for various offenses. The one-day suspension imposed on Dubach was consistent with the "Guide to Disciplinary Actions." (Tr. 61-62).

After issuance of the "Decision to Suspend," the Union's representational role was undertaken by Brent Weyland, a Union Steward. Through Weyland, Dubach pursued his effort to effect a reduction of the penalty; and with this objective in view the Union, by letter dated June 5, 1984, submitted an information request to R. Riley Skeen, Chief of Labor Relations, Ogden Air Logistics Center, Hill Air Force Base. (G.C. Exh. No.4). It requested the following:

> A copy of any and all records, from bargaining unit members and managers, throughout AFLC, in regards to misuse of time clocks and the disciplinary action proposed as a result of such.

It was noted that the records would be used for the purpose of "Grievance processing or other representational activity."

Initially management had difficulty in understanding the June 5th letter. The unlimited request for "any and all records throughout AFLC," regarding the "misuse of time clocks," included a very broad and far-ranging category of documents. (Tr. 98).[4]

Clarification of Information Request by Hill Air Force Base Staff Judge Advocate General's Office

Under the terms of a settlement agreement reached in April of 1984 by the Charging Party and the Ogden Air Logistics Center in another unrelated case; the Respondents were obligated to either grant the information request, deny the request with supporting reasons, or request clarification to determine the nature of information requested. (G.C. Exh. No. 14 at paragraph 3, Tr. 165). Accordingly, three or four days after receipt of the June 5th request, and before denial of the request and the filing of the charge, S. Reed Murdock, Chief of General Law, Hill Air Force Base Staff Judge Advocate, phoned Wayland for clarification, and to inquire concerning the nature of the information sought.[5] (Tr. 32,

[4] Wayland's testimony established that the reference to records "from bargaining unit members" was a mistake and that the latter should have referred to records "on bargaining unit members." (Tr. 55). This error was not specifically corrected by the Union. However, as a result of clarification hereinafter described it became clear to Hill Air Force Base officials that the request contemplated AFLC records only, and not records obtained "from bargaining unit members."

[5] It is clear that the Murdock call was initiated in an attempt to ascertain more detail concerning documents sought by the Union. Counsel representing the General Counsel acknowledged that the Murdock call was an attempt to clarify an ambiguous request, and that after the call the Respondents were aware of the nature of the records being sought. (Tr. 74-75, 109-110). Testimony concerning the call was supplied by Wayland. Murdock was unable to recall the conversation. (Tr. 163-164).

69-70, 90-91). Weyland explained that the information was needed in connection with the processing of the Dubach grievance. (Tr. 86). Weyland made it clear to Murdock that he was seeking records of all AFLC disciplinary actions and decisions relating to the misuse of time clocks. (Tr. 25, 32-33, 55, 70, 77, 90). 6/ Weyland did not otherwise limit the request, and did not advise Murdock that the Union did not wish to obtain relevant "971 files" dealing with disciplinary actions taken in connection with the misuse of time clocks. (Tr. 57, 70, 84, 89). 7/ Murdock stated that he had "a better picture" of what Weyland was requesting and the conversation ended. (Tr. 77).

Weyland testified that he requested the disciplinary records to ascertain whether or not the penalty imposed upon Dubach conformed to general criteria outlined in Section 5.01(a) of the Master Labor Agreement, and relevant portions of Air Force Regulation 40-750. (Tr. 31). He wanted to compare the penalty imposed on Dubach with penalties in other similar cases in the AFLC to ascertain whether or not Dubach's penalty was unduly severe. (Tr. 31, 49). His request was phrased in broad language "[t]o obtain all the records, not just the ones that management wanted to send up." (Tr. 57). He acknowledged that disciplinary records relating to the misuse of time clocks involved a general category of violations and that a "myriad" number of "time card type violations" might be involved. (Tr. 55-56). He also admitted that the phrase "misuse of time clocks" involved a number of possible violations other than the offense specifically involved in the Dubach disciplinary action.

Information Request Denied and Formal Grievance Filed

By letter dated June 12, 1984, Kay Self, Acting Chief, Hill Air Force Base, Employee Relations Section, Civilian Personnel Branch, denied the

6/ By its terms the request was also designed to include relevant disciplinary records pertaining to managers.

7/ Weyland admitted that the request could have been interpreted as including "Air Force Forms 971's [sic]" (Tr. 71-72), and as noted the apparent scope of the request would have included such forms. These documents were described as Air Force records maintained for each employee by supervisors for a specific period to document significant information. Weyland acknowledged that these records would have been helpful to him in connection with the processing of the Dubach grievance. (Tr. 93-94). Weyland indicated that he was endeavoring to show that an oral admonishment would have been a more appropriate penalty, and oral admonishments, a form of disciplinary action, would have been reflected in 971 files. (Tr. 86-87, 92-93, 151, 153).

information request. (G.C. Exh. No. 6). The denial noted that Self's office did not maintain the information sought, and that the request did not "meet the criteria of 5 USC 7114(b)(4)." 8/

On June 14, 1984, Weyland filed a formal second-step grievance on Dubach's behalf. (G.C. Exh. No. 7, Tr. 35). He requested that the one-day suspension be overturned because of unfairness, and suggested that a written reprimand be issued as a penalty. The one-day suspension was thereafter affirmed at the second and third stages of the grievance procedure. (G.C. Exh. Nos. 8, 9, and 10).

Facts Concerning Records Requested

Information sought by the Union is located throughout the Air Force Logistics Command, consisting of seven separate field activities. (Tr. 99, 125) 9/ Each of the Air Force Logistics Centers are roughly comparable to Hill Air Force Base. (Tr. 129). It was estimated that it would take more than three months to respond to a request for records relating to just one type of disciplinary action. (Tr. 135). It would be necessary to divide the request down into component parts in order to reach the systems of records involved, and then the AFLC Headquarters would have to mandate necessary compliance. Field activities would have to receive instructions concerning the gathering of the information, and the processing of the information for eventual return to the Ogden Air Force Logistics Center. The procedure would necessarily involve instructing personnel office staff and supervisors; preparation of instructions; dissemination of instructions and guidance to Air Force Logistics Command field activities; searching of files and records; sanitizing records where warranted; processing and transmitting information to the Air Force Logistics Command Headquarters; collation of information; preparation for delivery to Hill Air Force Base; and the actual transmission of the information to the Union. (Tr. 134-135).

Records sought are maintained in part in Central Civilian Personnel Offices servicing Air Force Logistics Command installations. (Tr. 25, 41). These offices maintain records of proposed disciplinary actions, and decisions on such proposals for a three-year period. (Tr. 105, 125, 151-153). Other relevant documents embraced within the wide scope of the request are also maintained in these files stored in Central Civilian Personnel Offices. (Tr. 155-157).

8/ Self was not directly involved in handling the request. She merely signed the denial as a responsible official. (Tr. 96-97, 101).

9/ Included were Hill Air Force Base containing the Ogden Air Logistics Center, four other Air Force Logistics Centers, the 2750th Air Base Wing that hosts the Air Force Logistics Command Headquarters; and the Aerospace Ground Metrology Center.

Central Civilian Personnel Office case files are retained for a three-year period. (Tr. 126). They are maintained by year in alphabetical order by name. Files are not established by subject or offense involved. (Tr. 127, 152-154). The system would not permit direct retrieval of time clock violations. Alphabetical systems of case files relating to each calendar year would have to be screened to locate the disciplinary records sought. (Tr. 152-154). The screening would have to be meticulous to avoid overlooking time clock violations in cases involving multiple charges. (Tr. 153). Each Central Civilian Personnel Office would have to screen several hundred case files in order to respond to the request. (Tr. 125-126).

By its terms the request also contemplated the production of 971 Files reflecting disciplinary action relating to the misuse of time clocks. Oral admonishments for such offenses would be reflected in 971 Files. (Tr. 100, 124, 132, 151). Since 971 Files are maintained for a prescribed period by first-level supervisors, the request would necessarily involve the screening of these files to locate relevant documents. (Tr. 124, 152-153). The screening of AFLC 971 Files maintained by approximately 6,000 supervisors in several different installations would involve an estimated cost of more than $30,000. (Tr. 124-125, 129-132). The process would involve 2,000 supervisors at Hill Air Force Base alone. (Tr. 100).

Discussion and Conclusions

Section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute provides in pertinent part:

> "(b) The duty of an agency and an exclusive representative to negotiate in good faith under subsection (a) of this section shall include the obligation -
> . . .
> "(4) in the case of an agency, to furnish to the exclusive representative involved, or its authorized representative, upon request and, to the extent not prohibited by law, data-
> "(A) which is normally maintained by the agency in the regular course of business;
> "(B) which is reasonably available and necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding, and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining; and
> "(C) which does not constitute guidance, advice, counsel, or training provided for management officials or supervisors, relating to collective bargaining. . . ."

Authority decisions have made it clear that management must furnish a Union with data needed by a union to carry out representational obligations relating to the processing of a grievance, provided the information sought meets criteria prescribed in Section 7114(b)(4). Failure to furnish such information constitutes an unfair labor practice. However, an analysis of the facts presented in this case discloses that the complaint must be dismissed because the information sought does not fall within the purview of Section 7114(b)(4). Here the record failed to reveal a showing that the information sought was "necessary" for the purpose of processing a grievance. Such a showing is essential. Internal Revenue Service, Buffalo District, Buffalo, New York, 7 FLRA No. 102 (1982), 7 FLRA 654; United States Customs Service, Region IV, Miami, Florida, 3 FLRA No. 127 (1980), 3 FLRA 876; and Department of the Navy, Naval Underwater Systems Center, Newport Naval Base, 3 FLRA No. 64 (1980), 3 FLRA 413. The record also revealed that the information sought was not "reasonably available."

The broad scope of the request is reflected in the Union's insistence upon the production of disciplinary records from all elements of the AFLC. An attempt by management to clarify the Union's request was only partially successful. At most the clarification resulted in limiting the request to AFLC records.[10/] As modified the request still operated to include all disciplinary records relating to the misuse of time clocks even though this record category also related to types of disciplinary action unlike the specific charge involved in the Dubach grievance. The Union's avowed purpose in obtaining the records was to determine whether the penalty imposed on Dubach was unusually severe. The Dubach matter involved an employee punching a time card on behalf of his supervisor. The record clearly established that the phrase "misuse of time clocks," used in the request, could have included a large number of offenses unlike the offense of punching a time clock on behalf of another employee. Such information would not be "necessary" in connection with the Union's processing of the Dubach grievance.

Air Force Regulation 40-750, specifically mandated that managers follow the general principle of "like penalties for like offenses in like circumstances." Information concerning violations other than one associated with the Dubach grievance would not have assisted the Union because there would be no logical basis upon which to base a comparison of penalties.

Assuming that the request were in fact limited to violations involving the punching of a time card on behalf of another employee, it still would not be possible to conclude that it would be "necessary" to furnish all AFLC records of such infractions. Air Force Regulation 40-750 specifically provides that the principle guiding management in fashioning penalties, "does not mean that penalties will be applied with mathematical rigidity or perfect consistency regardless of variations in circumstances or changes in prevailing regulations, standards, or mores.'" In light of the foregoing, the comparison of penalties imposed by a widely diverse group of AFLC management officials in different environments would not be relevant and necessary to the processing of the Dubsch grievance.11/

As noted, the Union's request for any and all AFLC disciplinary records dealing with the misuse of time clocks was overly broad, and included a very large variety of documents ordinarily maintained in such files. Hundreds of disciplinary files maintained in AFLC Central Civilian Personnel Offices in seven different locations, and 971 files maintained by over 6,000 AFLC supervisors, were identified as possible sources of documents sought. All of these files would have to be meticulously screened in order to comply with the request. Inasmuch as files are not maintained by type of disciplinary action, the task of screening these files would be unusually burdensome.12/ The screening of AFLC 971 files alone would involve an expenditure in excess of $30,000. It would take over three months to process the entire request. Compliance would impose an extremely heavy administrative burden on AFLC Headquarters personnel. The broad scope of the request, together with attendant factors related to production of documents sought leads to the conclusion that in the special circumstances presented the documents were not "reasonably available." This case is unlike the factual pattern presented in Social Security Administration, 15 FLRA No. 180 (1984), 15 FLRA 969, where a similar defense was rejected because of a failure to show that compliance with a request would be unduly burdensome. Here, the record reflects the unusual difficulty that management would encounter in complying with the request.

This element of the request would have had to be apparent to the Union. Moreover, even if the apparent burdensomeness was not sufficient to put the Union on notice, the Respondent's denial clearly indicated to the Union that documents sought did "not meet the criteria of 5 U.S.C. 7114(b)(4)." Among other things, Section 7114(b)(4) imposes the requirement that data requested be "reasonably available." Thus, the Union was apprised of deficiencies in the request within a short period of time, but took no action to limit the request in appropriate ways.

11/ In the context of this case it is unnecessary to determine the precise limitations which the Union should have, or could have, placed upon documents requested in order to assure compliance with Section 7114(b)(4).

12/ It should also be noted that the Union's request was not in any way limited as to time frame.

In summary the information request herein goes far beyond what would be needed by the Union to process the Bubach grievance. The request is much broader in scope than what would reasonably be needed to fulfill the Union's representational obligations. Management's attempt to obtain clarification of the request was met with a demand for most, if not all of the documents originally requested. The Union was thereafter generally apprised of Respondents' reasons for denying the request. About a week after receipt of the information request, management apprised the Union that the documents sought did not meet criteria set out in Section 7114(b)(4). The Union made no further effort to modify the request, or to establish a showing of relevance and necessity, nor was inquiry made by the Union concerning the matter in order to perfect the request made.

The nature of the request was finally made clear; however, the overly broad scope of the demand placed management in the position of having to engage in speculation and conjecture concerning exactly which documents to furnish to the Union.[13] The task of complying with the Union's request under the circumstances would have necessarily involved management's revision of the request so as to include only documents which were reasonably available and necessary for the purpose of enabling the Union to perform representational activity.

Although it would have been advisable for the parties to negotiate their differences at this point, it is not possible to impute blame to Respondents for the failure to pursue further efforts to reach agreement; nor is it possible to find wrongdoing on the part of Respondents for not volunteering to furnish information of some sort to the Union prior to the filing of the charge. It is true that a more reasoned approach by either party might have made a significant difference, and might have led to a resolution of the matter prior to the filing of a charge. However, this determination does not affect the disposition herein.

Under the circumstances outlined it is concluded that the General Counsel has not sustained the burden of showing that the data sought was "reasonably available and necessary" within the meaning of Section 7114(b)(4)(B); and further that the evidence does not establish violations of Sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) as alleged in the complaint.

It is recommended that the Authority issue the following Order pursuant to 5 C.F.R. § 2422.29.

[13] See Director of Administration, Headquarters, U.S. Air Force, 6 FLRA No. 24 (1981), 6 FLRA 110, wherein the Authority affirmed the dismissal of a complaint based on Section 7114(b)(4), for refusing to furnish information in response to an overly broad data request calling for much more than what would have been needed by a union to administer or police a collective bargaining agreement.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, that the complaint in Case No. 7-CA-40682, be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

    Status Quo Ante Remedy Rejected

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority adopted the Judge's decision in a consolidated case that both activities violated sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) by relocating their offices without negotiating over the union's proposals concerning the procedures and appropriate arrangements for unit employees adversely affected. The entire Syracuse and Buffalo offices were moved a distance of some five and four city blocks, respectively, from their former locations, and the moves brought about differences in such things as building structures and office space. The duration of the moves was permanent and the moves involved the displacement and relocation of the entire office staffs in two of the Activities offices. Thus, based upon the totality of the facts and circumstances presented in the instant case, the Authority concluded that the relocations of the two offices had more than a de minimis impact on conditions of employment and imposed a duty to bargain on the activities concerning procedures and appropriate arrangements for adversely affected employees.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal seeking official time for more union negotiators than the number designated by management is negotiable under § 7131(d). The Authority also noted that types of activities for which union representatives may receive official time under § 7131(d) include time to prepare for negotiations, impasse resolution and counter proposals. Also under § 7131(a), employees representing unions in negotiation of a collective bargaining agreement are entitled to official time for such purposes as attendance at impasse proceedings.

A part of a proposal is moot that concerns whether travel and per diem is within the parties' duty to bargain under the Statute where there is a valid, binding agreement disposing of this aspect of the proposal. Responding to a PSIP recommendation, the parties had previously submitted their ground rules dispute to mediation/arbitration. The mediator/arbitrator directed, among other things, that the parties choose between alternative dispositions of their travel and per diem dispute. The parties agreed to the alternative in which negotiations would be held at the union's preferred location with each side bearing the travel expense for its own team.

DIGEST NOTES

A union may file a petition for review of a negotiability issue even though an agency has requested FSIP to resolve an impasse. Negotiability issues which arise during the collective bargaining process must be resolved through appeal to the Authority.

The failure of an agency to respond to a union's written request for an allegation of nonnegotiability constitutes a constructive declaration of nonnegotiability which gives rise to the right of appeal to the Authority.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

Overtime payments and compensatory time are not authorized as official time under § 7131(a) to union representatives for time preparing for and participating in negotiations outside the employee's normal working hours. Entitlement to overtime pay is governed by 5 U.S.C. § 5542, and 5 U.S.C. § 5543 addresses eligibility for compensatory time off in lieu of the monetary compensation to which the employee would be entitled under § 5542. Representational activities performed by a union official outside his or her workday do not constitute the performance of "hours of work" within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 5542. Accordingly, proposals providing for such payments are nonnegotiable. (proposals 1 and 2)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would require, with certain exceptions, negotiations over impact and implementation of management proposed changes in working conditions to be combined with negotiations over the basic agreement. The proposal does not distinguish between those management initiated changes which have no more than a de minimis impact on bargaining unit employees for which management does not have a duty to bargain, and those changes which have more than a de minimis impact. Thus the proposal would effectively impose on the agency a duty to bargain which is broader than that prescribed by the Statute. (proposal 3)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that requires the agency's head management official to attend all mediations sessions. It is within the discretion of both agency management and labor organizations holding exclusive recognition to designate their respective representatives when fulfilling their responsibilities under the Statute. The designation of those individuals who will attend mediation sessions on behalf of the agency is not a matter directly related to the conditions of employment of unit employees. While the agency may elect to bargain concerning this proposal, it did not. (proposal 4)

The Authority dismissed the union's exceptions as untimely because they failed to comply with § § 2425.1, 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, applicable to the computation of time limits.

Overtime payments and compensatory time are not authorized as official time under § 7131(a) to union representatives for preparing for and participating in negotiations outside the employees' normal working hours. Entitlement [illegible] government [illegible] eligibility [illegible] in lieu of the monetary compensation [illegible] would be entitled [illegible] § 5542. DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is negotiable that permits employees who are students at the National Weather Service Training Center to arrange for their own housing instead of being required to stay in agency-arranged housing. The proposal would pay those employees, in addition to per diem given to all students for food and other expenses, the same amount of money as the agency pays per employee for the housing it arranges. The agency did not support its allegation that the proposal interfered with management's right under § 7106(a)(1) to determine its budget by demonstrating that the proposal would result in a significant and unavoidable increase in costs which is not offset by compensating benefits. Nor does the proposal interfere with the agency's ability to contract for services under 41 U.S.C. § 252(a). Also, the agency's contention that the proposal is inconsistent with a policy determination (i.e. to provide housing by contract) made pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e), does not provide a basis for finding the proposal nonnegotiable. Under 5 U.S.C. § 5911(3) the matter is strictly within the agency's discretion and concerns a condition of employment affecting unit employees. Finally, there is no inconsistency between the proposal and 41 C.F.R. § 1-3.409(b) which sets forth the description and application of "requirements" contracts.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority adopted the Judge's Decision that the Respondent did not violate sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) when it refused to provide the union with requested information. The union had requested information under § 7114(b) concerning the procedures for the filling of supervisory or other non-bargaining positions for the purpose of determining whether to file grievances concerning the nonselection of a bargaining unit employee for a supervisory position.

The Judge concluded that under § 7114(b)(4), a refusal to supply information within the scope of that section constitutes a violation of the Statute irrespective of whether the refusal might also constitute a breach of the parties' agreement.

The Respondent's contention that since the information sought does not constitute a condition of employment and concerns a matter which is nongrievable under the parties' negotiated agreement, the union was not entitled to such information, was also rejected by the Judge. The fact that matters pertaining to non-bargaining unit positions do not relate to conditions of employment of unit employees and are outside the duty to bargain under the Statute does not preclude disclosure of information relating to non-bargaining unit positions to an exclusive representative if such information is otherwise shown to be necessary and relevant to the performance of the statutory rights and duties of the exclusive representative.

However, the Judge concluded that as the union did not specify the grievant's charges or indicate the issues involved in the potential grievance, it failed to demonstrate the relevance and necessity for the information to the Respondent at the time the request was made. Therefore, it was not established that the agency failed to comply with the Statute when it refused to furnish the requested information.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority because of exceptions filed by the Respondents to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The General Counsel filed a response in opposition and cross exceptions. The issue concerns whether the Respondents violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by refusing to bargain concerning the procedures to be observed in implementing the relocations of their Hearings and Appeals offices in Buffalo and Syracuse, New York, and concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such relocations.

II. Background

These consolidated cases involve the displacement and relocation of the entire office staffs in Respondents' Region II Hearings and Appeals Offices in Syracuse and Buffalo, New York, a distance of some five and four city blocks, respectively. The Union requested impact and implementation bargaining and submitted a number of proposals. Agreement was reached on several of the proposals but the Respondents refused to bargain on others, claiming that those proposals involved working conditions which were either unchanged or improved as a result of the move.

III. Judge's Decision

The Judge concluded that the Respondents improperly refused to bargain over the impact and implementation of the office relocations and thereby violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. In reaching such conclusion, the Judge found that the foreseeable impact of the relocation of the Syracuse and Buffalo offices was "substantial." Once the impact test was met, the Judge concluded that the Respondents were obligated to bargain over the Union's proposals submitted in connection with and relating to the office relocations which all concerned working conditions, even if a particular proposal addressed a situation where no change or an improvement in preexisting working conditions resulted from the relocation of the offices.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The Respondents except to the Judge's Decision, asserting essentially that the relocations had no substantial adverse impact on unit employees as a whole. They further take issue with the Judge's finding that they must bargain over specific proposals, contending that each proposal must address substantial adverse impact. Finally, they assert that those proposals involving issues under negotiation at the national level could not be negotiated at the regional or local level. The General Counsel's opposition to the Respondents' exceptions fully agrees with the Judge's findings, conclusions and rationale.

V. Analysis

With respect to the Respondents' initial contention pertaining to the impact of the relocations on unit employees, after the Judge issued his Decision in this case, the Authority held that "where an agency in exercising a management right under section 7106 of the Statute, changes conditions of employment of unit employees . . . , the statutory duty to negotiate comes into play if the change results in an impact upon unit employees or such impact was reasonably foreseeable." [Footnote omitted.] U.S. Government Printing Office, 13 FLRA 203, 204-05 (1983). The Authority thereafter held that "no duty to bargain arises from the exercise of a management right that results in an impact or a reasonably foreseeable impact on bargaining unit employees which is no more than de minimis." Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Chicago Region, 15 FLRA 922 (1984). Further, the Authority looks to the totality of the facts and circumstances presented in each case in determining whether the impact or reasonably foreseeable impact of the exercise of a management right on bargaining unit employees is more than de minimis. Thus, in Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Region V, Chicago, Illinois, 19 FLRA No. 101 (1985), the Authority looked to such factors as the nature of the change (e.g., the extent of the change in work duties, location, office space, hours, loss of benefits or wages and the like); the temporary, recurring or permanent nature of the change (i.e., duration and frequency of the change affecting unit employees); the number of employees affected or foreseeably affected by the change; the size of the bargaining unit; and the extent to which the parties may have established, through negotiations or past practice, procedures and appropriate arrangements concerning analogous changes in the past. The Authority also emphasized that the factors considered in the circumstances of that case were not intended to constitute an all-inclusive list or to be applied in a mechanistic fashion. Moreover, where there is no indication that the nature and degree of impact is at issue in the case, the Authority will not necessarily require in every case a determination as to whether the exercise of the management right results in a change in a condition of employment having an impact or a reasonably foreseeable impact on bargaining unit employees which is more than de minimis. However, in cases where it must be determined whether the nature and degree of impact is more than de minimis, factors such as those listed above will be considered.

In applying the above factors to this case, the Authority finds, based upon the totality of the facts and circumstances presented, that the relocation of the Syracuse and Buffalo offices did have an impact or a reasonably foreseeable impact on the conditions of employment of unit employees and that such impact or reasonably foreseeable impact was more than de minimis. Therefore, the Respondents were obligated to notify the Union and bargain upon request over the procedures they would observe in exercising its section 7106 rights and concerning appropriate arrangements for adversely affected employees. In reaching this result, the Authority notes that the nature of the change involved the movement of the entire Syracuse and Buffalo offices a distance of some five and four city blocks, respectively, from their former locations, and that the moves brought about differences in such things as building structures and office space. Further, the duration of the moves was permanent. Although the employees are part of a consolidated unit, the Authority notes in the particular circumstances of this case that the moves involved the displacement and relocation of the entire office staffs in two of the Respondents' Region II Hearings and Appeals Offices. Accordingly, based on the totality of the facts and circumstances presented, the Authority finds that the relocation of the two offices imposed a duty upon the Respondent to bargain with the Union concerning procedures and appropriate arrangements for adversely affected employees.

Finally, for the reasons stated by the Judge, the Authority finds no merit to the Respondents' other two contentions that they were relieved of the duty to bargain because each Union proposal must meet the test of substantial adverse impact and because those proposals involving issues under negotiation at the national level could not be negotiated at the regional or local levels. See Social Security Administration, Office of Hearings and Appeals, Region II, New York, New York, 19 FLRA No. 47 (1985), which involved basically the same parties and similar issues and arguments.

VI. Remedy

Having found that the Respondents' conduct violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, the remaining issue concerns the appropriate remedial order. The Authority notes as to remedy that no retroactive relief was sought by the General Counsel. The Judge, in noting the same circumstances, chose to address the need for a status quo ante remedy, and in keeping with our decision in Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604 (1982), determined that such a remedy was not warranted. The Authority is in agreement with that analysis by the Judge and determines that a prospective remedy is warranted and will fully effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute in the circumstances of this case.

VII. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions to that Decision, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order. We therefore find, in agreement with the Judge, that the Respondents violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by implementing the Syracuse and Buffalo office relocations without negotiating over the Union's negotiable proposals concerning procedures and appropriate arrangements for unit employees adversely affected by such relocations.*/

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Social Security Administration (Baltimore, Maryland) and Office of Hearings and Appeals, Region II (New York, New York) and Office of Hearings and Appeals (Syracuse and Buffalo, New York), shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Relocating or moving their offices and employees, without first notifying the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760, the agent of the exclusive bargaining representative of its employees, and affording it the opportunity to negotiate concerning the procedures to be observed in implementing the relocations of the Hearings and Appeals offices in Buffalo and Syracuse, New York, and concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such relocations.

(b) Refusing to negotiate in good faith with the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760, the agent of the exclusive bargaining representative of their employees, concerning the procedures to be observed in implementing the relocations of the Hearings and Appeals offices in Buffalo and Syracuse, New York, and concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such relocations.

*/ As noted by the Judge at page 16 of her Decision, the Respondents never alleged that such proposals were nonnegotiable.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute:

(a) Notify the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760, the agent of the exclusive bargaining representative of their employees, of any intention to relocate or move any of their offices and employees and, upon request, negotiate with such representative concerning the procedures to be observed in implementing the relocations of the Hearings and Appeals offices in Buffalo and Syracuse, New York, and concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such relocations.

(b) Post at its Hearings and Appeals offices in Buffalo and Syracuse, New York, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by an appropriate official and they shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region I, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with the Order.

DECISION

This is a proceeding under Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-454, 92 Stat. 1192, 5 U.S.C. 7101 et seq. (Supp. V, 1981), commonly known as the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, and hereinafter referred to as the "Statute," and the rules and regulations issued thereunder and published at 5 CFR 2411 et seq.

Charges of an unfair labor practice under the Statute were filed in Case No. 1-CA-20341 on August 10, 1982 and amended on November 29, 1982 by the Charging Party (hereinafter also referred to as the "Union"). The General Counsel of the Federal Labor Relations Authority ("Authority") investigated and, on November 30, 1982, served the complaint initiating Case No. 1-CA-20341.

In Case No. 1-CA-20322, charges of unfair labor practices under the Statute were filed on July 14, 1982, and amended on November 29, 1982. The General Counsel investigated and, on November 30, 1982, served this complaint initiating Case No. 1-CA-20322.

As amended at the hearing,[1] each complaint in this proceeding alleges that the Respondent has engaged, and is engaging in unfair labor practices in violation of 5 U.S.C. 7116(a)(1) and (5).[2] Each complaint names the alleged violative act as being the relocation of a hearing office without affording the Union an opportunity to negotiate concerning the impact and implementation of the decision to relocate. At the hearing, the two cases were consolidated.

The hearing was held on April 21, 1983, in New York City. The parties appeared, adduced evidence and examined witnesses. Pursuant to an order dated May 9, 1983, the briefing time was extended until June 23. Respondent filed its brief on June 21.

The General Counsel, on June 22, filed a memorandum, enclosing a copy of a decision rendered on May 23 by Administrative Law Judge William Naimark in Case Nos. 12-CA-20179 and 20355, entitled Social Security

[1] The amendment consisted of striking from the complaint in Case No. 1-CA-20322, allegations concerning a failure to provide information.

[2] 5 U.S.C. 7116(a) provides, in pertinent part, as follows:

> § 7116. Unfair labor practices
> (a) For the purpose of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for an agency—
> (1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter; . . . or
> (5) to refuse to consult or negotiate in good faith with a labor organization as required by this chapter. . . .

Administration, Office of Hearings and Appeals, Region II, New York, New York, Respondent and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760, Charging Party. That proceeding also involved, inter alia, alleged violations of 5 U.S.C. 7116(a)(1) and (5) caused by an alleged unilateral relocation of an office -- from Mineola to Hempstead, New York. In the memorandum filed in this proceeding, the General Counsel asserts that there are "no material differences between the facts and legal arguments raised in the proceeding before Judge Naimark from those present in the instant case" and that the same legal conclusions should be reached herein. Filed along with the memorandum and the decision was the brief submitted on behalf of the General Counsel in Case Nos. 12-CA-20179 and 20355.

Judge Naimark concluded that it was "the change in location that underlies a possible obligation to bargain" in such a situation; and he rejected Respondent's position that what controlled was "the extent of a change in a particular condition." See his slip opinion, pages 10-11 in OALJ-83-89. He concluded that if a decision to relocate involves foreseeable impact and the specific union proposals relate to working conditions encompassed by the move, an employer is required to bargain regarding the impact and implementation of the relocation.

Judge Naimark noted that the foreseeable impact of a planned relocation must be a substantial one and not "a mere possibility of some impact" (slip op. 12). In the case before him, the move was "from one town to another, with attendant differences in building structures and size, location, area, neighborhood facilities, transit routes and security - to name a few considerations. . ." (slip op. 12). These factors led to Judge Naimark's conclusion "that it is a reasonable likelihood such relocation will produce a substantial and adverse impact upon Respondent's workers" (slip op. 12). Accordingly, he concluded that Respondent must bargain with the Union over any proposal which related to working conditions, even though the particular proposal might represent an improvement over that particular working condition at the old location, or even no change. As examples, there was a water cooler at both locations; and there were no day care centers or lounge areas at either location. Nevertheless, Judge Naimark concluded that Respondent must bargain over Union's proposals on water coolers, lounge areas, and a space for a day care center.

Based upon the record made in this case, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and the brief and memorandum filed, I enter the following findings of fact, conclusions of law and recommended order.

Findings of Fact[3]

1. It is admitted that Respondent is an "agency" and the Union is a "labor organization", within the meaning of the Statute.

2. It is further admitted that the American Federation of Government Employees ("AFGE") is the exclusive bargaining representative of a consolidated nationwide unit of Respondent's employees, including ones employed at Respondent's hearing offices located at Buffalo and Syracuse, New York.

3a. In Case No. 1-CA-20322, it is further admitted that, at all times material herein, Respondent has recognized Local 1760 of AFGE as a representative of AFGE "for the purposes of collective bargaining at the Hearings Offices of the Office of Hearings and Appeals, New York Region on matters involving changes in working conditions at the local level." The New York Region is also referred to as "Region II."

3b. In Case No. 1-CA-20341, it is further admitted that, at all times material herein, Local 1760 of AFGE "has been, and is now recognized by Respondent Office of Hearings and Appeals, Region II, New York, New York, and Respondent Office of Hearings and Appeals, Buffalo, New York, acting thereby as agents of Respondent Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland . . . as the agent of American Federation of Government Employees for the purpose of collective bargaining, at the Regional and local (Hearing Office) level, concerning the impact and implementation of changes in conditions of employment affecting employees employed by Respondent at its Hearing Office located at Buffalo, New York."

4a. It is stipulated that Respondent has an obligation to bargain with the Union over the impact and implementation of the relocation of the Syracuse and Buffalo hearing offices of the Office of Hearings and Appeals

Other abbreviations to be used are as follows. "GC" refers to the exhibits of the General Counsel. "R" refers to the exhibits of Respondent. Multipage exhibits will be referenced by the exhibit number followed by the page or paragraph number. "GCM" refers to the memorandum submitted by the General Counsel. "RBr" refers to the brief submitted by Respondent.

Respondents will be referred to jointly as "Respondent," unless otherwise specifically noted.

("OHA"), of the Social Security Administration ("SSA"), in accordance with 5 U.S.C. 7106(b)(2) and (3).[4]

4b. It is undisputed that the Union submitted proposals on the relocations and agreement was reached as to some items. As to the rejected ones, management's basic response was that "there was no adverse impact" and, as to a "few", that they were "on the table at the national level" (TR 118).

5a. Effective June 11, 1982, AFGE and SSA are bound by a national agreement applicable to the nationwide bargaining unit. The agreement remains in effect for three (3) years from its effective date, and automatically renews itself from year to year thereafter. At the time of the relocations here at issue (May 3, 1982 for the Buffalo office and February 20, 1982 for the Syracuse office) only memorandums of understandings existed between AFGE and SSA; and they concerned grievances, negotiations, and official time.

5b. Articles in the national agreement cover such items as health and safety; parking; child care, including a study on a model child care center at one facility; excused absences; and supplemental agreements. The national contract provides for supplemental negotiations over seven items, including health and safety, facilities, parking, and flextime. See R 1.9, Section 3 of Article 5. As of the time of the hearing in these cases, there had been no negotiations for supplemental agreements. See TR 70.

> § 7106. Management rights. . .
> (b) Nothing in this section shall preclude any agency and any labor organization from negotiating- . . .
> (2) procedures which management officials of the agency will observe in exercising any authority under this section; or
> (3) appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the exercise of any authority under this section by such management officials.

This is commonly called "impact and implementation" bargaining.

6a. James Armet, Vice-President for Administration, Local 1760, is responsible for negotiating with Respondent on matters dealing with a change in physical location for any OHA office in New York and New Jersey.

6b. Elliot Glassman served as Region II's technical advisor on management's team negotiating the relocations here at issue. He serves as "labor relations coordinator" (TR 57). Specialists "at the central office of OHA" advised him of what was "on the table at the national negotiations" (TR 60).

Case No. 20322, the Syracuse relocation

7. Around 40 bargaining unit employees work in the Syracuse office of OHA.

8. By letter dated October 27, 1981, the Deputy Regional Management Officer of OHA notified Mr. Armet that the Syracuse office of OHA would be relocated. The letter stated that the move was to be made on or about December 1 from the Federal Building at 100 South Clinton Street to the seventh floor of a building at 351 South Warren Street.

9. On October 30, 1981, Mr. Armet wrote a letter to Respondent in which he demanded bargaining on the "plans to relocate" and the "potential adverse impact of that decision on members of the bargaining unit" (GC 3).

10. On November 12, 1981, Respondent replied to the October 30 demand to bargain. The letter stated that the move was to a building "a distance of approximately 5 city blocks" and that "[s]ince both new and old locations [were] in the same neighborhood with access to the same transportation and both locations conform to GSA [General Services Administration] requirements and regulations, the potential adverse impact of this move is de minimis" (GC 4). The letter explained that GSA was forcing the move upon Respondent. It also contained an offer to meet with Mr. Armet to "discuss any potential adverse impact that [he] identif[ied]" (GC 4).

11. Approximately 12 meetings were held between the parties on the impact and implementation of the Syracuse relocation, the first being on December 15, 1981 and the last on June 16, 1982. The move took place on February 20, 1982.

12. On December 17, 1981, the Union delivered its bargaining proposals to management. At the time the proposals were submitted, the negotiations on a national agreement were being mediated by an arbitrator appointed by the Federal Service Impasses Panel ("FSIP"). Larry Kramer, the Chief of labor relations for the central office of OHA, located in Arlington, Virginia, gave directions to the management team negotiating over the relocation of the Syracuse office. Mr. Kramer informed Mr. Glassman that "they did not want, under the guise of impact implementation bargaining, any of their subordinate region offices to reach an agreement which the union negotiating team then would use as a precedence in its negotiations — either the national unit or any supplemental units have to negotiate on these things — it's being on the table, you do not have to negotiate on it" (TR 64). The central office mentioned "certain areas" as being "on the negotiating table at the national level" (TR 64).

13. As to some union proposals, agreement was reached — smoking; provision for a safe and healthy work environment and prompt action to correct any unsafe or unhealthy ones; provision for an emergency lighting system; provision for a security guard, subject to the availability of funds; and the application of the agreement to the Syracuse OHA office until specific provisions of a national agreement superceded them. See R 4.

14. As to seven proposals, agreement was not reached.

14a. Flextime. Mr. Armet explained that he had received an anonymous tip from an employee in the Syracuse OHA office that led to the Union's proposal on this item. The tipster told Mr. Armet that employees were "most upset about the relocation and that they were being relocated from a Federal building in the center of Syracuse, approximately six to eight blocks away in an area that was an urban renewal area . . . that was undergoing construction, renovation . . . that it wasn't a safe area, safe as the central location that they were in presently, and there were people hanging around in the street corners and things like that" (TR 19-20). The flextime proposal was to allow employees to be dropped off at a mutually convenient time for spouses and employees. This tip was not mentioned at the bargaining table.

Management responded that it would not consider the flextime proposal; that it exceeded the scope of impact bargaining; that there was no substantial adverse impact; and that it was on the table at negotiations on the national agreement which were taking place in Baltimore.

There is no article on flextime in the national agreement. Mention of flextime appears only in the provision for supplemental agreements. See finding 5b, supra. At Baltimore, there was no discussion on the topic in the context of impact and implementation bargaining upon the relocation of offices.

14b. Day care center. The proposal on this topic was met with a management response that there was no adverse impact. Also, at the last negotiating session, on June 16, 1982, there was "general agreement" that there were provisions covering day care in the national agreement (TR 62).

Article 20 of the national agreement provides for a "feasibility study for a model child care center" at a mutually determined site or for the Woodlawn complex (R 1.33).

14c. Parking. The proposal on this topic was met with the management response that there was none "available previously, there's none now and there was no adverse impact" (TR 62). Also, management stated that "the matter was under discussion at the national level" (TR 23).

Article 13 of the national agreement deals with "Parking," and there is also provision for supplemental agreements. See R 1.24 and finding 5b, supra.

14d. Noise abatement. This topic was met with a management response that there was "no adverse impact" because there would be "less noise than there was previously" (TR 63)[5] and that the matter was being negotiated at the national level.

Article 9 of the national agreement deals with "Health and Safety," but in general terms (R 1.15-16). The provision for supplemental agreements allows for further negotiations on "Health and Safety" (R 1.9 and see finding 5b, supra).

14e. Lunchrooms. Management may have alleged that this proposal was contrary to a national law, rule, or regulation.

14f. Window coverings. This topic was met by a management response that there were "drapes previously and there's drapes now and there's no adverse impact" (TR 63). Management refused to sign off on a proposal to provide drapes, which the Union felt it needed so that failure to provide them would be grievable and to insure the protection of employees' rights.

14g. Water coolers. This topic was met by a management response that "the supply of water was even better than it was previously, so there was no adverse impact" (TR 61).

15. While Mr. Glassman testified that management was prepared to negotiate with the Union over proposals that had less adverse impact (see TR 62-63), in fact management relied upon allegations of an absence of adverse impact to justify refusal to bargain, as set forth in finding 14, supra.

16. Management consulted with the office manager of the OHA hearing office in Syracuse throughout the negotiations on the relocation; and she testified at the hearing on the impact of the relocation.

16a. She established that the space allotted to OHA in the commercial building on Warren Street is not exactly the same as that which had been provided at the Federal building located at Clinton Street. At the Federal building the accomodations were "almost plush," and the reluctance to relocate was over concern about giving up "some of the plushness" (TR 48).

[5] There are two page 63s in the transcript. This citation is to the first one.

16b. She established that the Warren Street location is approximately four blocks from the Federal building, and one block off the main drag of downtown Syracuse. It is closer to the shopping area and is served by the same transportation facilities. To her knowledge, the Warren Street building is not in an urban renewal area and the neighborhoods appear to be trafficked by the same people. She testified that there is presently no construction going on "in" the Warren Street location, nor was there at the time of the move (TR 49). Another witness testified that, on a visit to the Warren Street OHA office in November 1982, the streets surrounding the Warren Street building in which the OHA office is located were being torn up, and the noise from the drilling and construction equipment could be heard inside the building and was "disturbing and disconcerting" (TR 71). Both witnesses appeared to give truthful testimony and their testimony can be reconciled. One testified to construction in the building and the other to construction outside, but nearby the building.

16c. The office manager affirmed that there had been no day care center, flextime, or official parking at the Federal building.

16d. As to drapes, she established that there were open-weave ones at the Federal building and wool-lined ones at the Warren Street location.

16e. As to the noise from office machines, she established that they had been located "on the floor with the employees," at the Federal building, and are now "housed in a separate room", with a resulting "decrease in that noise" (TR 46).

16f. As to water coolers, she established that there had been one on each floor, in the area of the elevators, at the Federal building, and that they were shared with the general public. At the Warren Street facility, there is one drinking fountain within the space allocated to Respondent, which has the entire fourth floor.

16g. As to parking, private parking lots are located closer to the Warren Street location than they were to the Federal building.

17. The union president, on a visit to the Warren Street location in November 1982, was approached by a panhandler, which he felt to be "unique in Syracuse" (TR 70-71). Employees told him that the OHA office on Warren Street was "not as nice" as their former quarters in the Federal building.

18. The reason for the relocation was that OHA wished to expand its office. There was insufficient space in the Federal building to accomodate the expansion, according to GSA, the Federal agency holding control over space for governmental agencies. GSA planned the relocation to Warren Street and promised the space occupied by OHA in the Federal building to other agencies. The office facilities arm of OHA's Region II, and its management operations specialist, tried to stop the move and then to delay it, but could not control GSA, which threatened to evict the OHA Syracuse office from the Federal building, if it did not move on GSA's schedule. These futile attempts by Region II were communicated to Mr. Glassman.

19. On February 8, 1982, Respondent directed a letter to Herbert Collender, President of Local 1760, to notify him that the move would take place on February 20, 192.

20. On February 12, 1982, Mr. Armet replied to the February 8 letter. He reminded Respondent that the move was "presently subject to impact bargaining" (GC 6). Respondent did not reply, in writing.

21. The Union learned that the Syracuse move had taken place while at a negotiation session on February 22, 1982.

Case No. 20341, the Buffalo relocation

22. About 21 bargaining-unit employees worked in the Buffalo office of OHA, when it was located in the U.S. Courthouse. Within two weeks of the office relocation here at issue, the number rose to around 28.

23. By letter dated February 8, 1982, Mr. Glassman, the labor relations coordinator for Region II of OHA, notified the president of Local 1760 that the Buffalo OHA office, then located at the U.S. Courthouse at 68 Court Street, would be moved to a building at 268 Main St., three to six blocks away.

24. On February 17, 1982, Mr. Armet requested impact and implementation bargaining over the proposed relocation.

25. On March 18, 1982, Mr. Armet submitted the union proposals to Mr. Glassman. They were motivated by a telephone call from the union steward at Buffalo. She complained that another relocation of the OHA office was to take place, to a "less desirable . . . seedy" location where the area was being reconstructed and to a building that was under renovation (TR 81). Mention was made of "derelicts on the street" (TR 81). These concerns were expressed to management during negotiations. Management checked them out and did not find them "believable" (TR 119-120).

26. The parties met in eight negotiation sessions, the first being on March 22, 1982 and the last on July 21. The relocation took place on May 3.

27. At the hearing, testimony was adduced on the items in the Union's proposals upon which agreement was not reached.

27a. Flextime. On March 23, 1982 and at subsequent negotiation sessions, management took the position that there had been no flextime at the U.S. Courthouse location and so no adverse impact from the relocation. Also, management responded that flextime was on the table at the national negotiations. (See finding 14a, supra, for what was negotiated in the national agreement.)

27b. Day care center. On July 12, 1982, management's response was that there had been none at the U.S. Courthouse and so no adverse impact. Also, management "wouldn't discuss it" (TR 86) because it was for "a benefit that was covered in the national agreement" (TR 126). (See finding 14b, supra, for what was in the national agreement.)

27c. Parking. On July 12, 1982, management's response was that there was none at either location and so no adverse impact, and also that it was "on the table at a higher level of negotiations" (TR 86). (See finding 14c, supra, as to what was negotiated in the national agreement.)

27d. Health and safety. On at least four occasions, the union's proposal met with the response that it was "beyond the scope of adverse impact and such conditions were being negotiated at the national level" (TR 83). (See finding 14d, supra, as to what was negotiated in the national agreement as to health and safety.) Included in the Union's health and safety proposals were ones relating to emergency lighting, smoke detectors, fire alarms, at least two water coolers, restrooms, a lounge area, sufficient lighting, and transportation to a health unit. See GC 12.3-5.

27e. Emergency lighting. Mr. Armet testified that management's response to this topic was that there was none at either facility, and thus no adverse impact. Mr. Glassman agreed that the response was no adverse impact, but that it was based on emergency lighting being in both locations. See TR 122. Mr. Glassman appeared more confident, on this point, than Mr. Armet. Accordingly, I credit the testimony of Mr. Glassman on this point.

27f. Smoke detectors. Again, Mr. Armet testified that management's response was that there was none in either building, and so no adverse impact. Mr. Glassman agreed that there were none and explained that this was because the Buffalo GSA code required sprinkler systems. Mr. Glassman further explained that there was "either a sprinkler system installed or there would be one installed at the Main Street location" and, therefore, that there would be no adverse impact and no need to bargain on smoke detectors (TR 122).

27g. Fire alarms. Management's response was that similar systems existed in both buildings, and so there would be no adverse impact.

27h. Restrooms. As to this topic, management's response, on June 21, 1982, was that the restrooms at the Main Street building are "more private" and "much cleaner" (TR 93 and 125). Thus, management felt that the impact was "beneficial," and there was "no duty" to bargain (TR 125).

27i. Lounge area. On June 21, 1982, management responded that there was none in either facility, and therefore no adverse impact.

27j. Water coolers. In July, 1982,6/ management responded that the same or better conditions existed at the Main Street location, and therefore there was no adverse impact, and "they would not negotiate the issue" (TR 85).

27k. Transportation to the health unit. On July 12, 1982, management's response was that there was no adverse impact.

27l. Lighting to avoid eye fatigue. On July 12, 1982, the response was that "the lighting would be equal or better," and so there would be no adverse impact (TR 125) and they "would not bargain on it" (TR 85).

27m. Break and lunch room. On July 12, 1982, management responded that there was none at either facility, and therefore there was no adverse impact and "no duty to bargain" (TR 126). Management did explain that it "could not authorize lunch rooms — GSA — officially," but would attempt to solve the problem by "just having spare space" (TR 126). Management has been able to provide such spare space for the Buffalo OHA office.

27n. First aid kits. Management's response was that the kit they used in the Courthouse was "portable" and the OHA office had the same one at the Main Street facility (TR 128). Thus, there was "no adverse impact" (TR 128). It was admitted that OHA Buffalo was getting more employees in the Main Street building. According to Mr. Glassman, the Union did not state that it wanted to bargain over more kits because one was insufficient. See TR 128-129. The proposal was that: "Management will provide each working unit with a GSA approved first aid kit", (GC 11,7).

27o. Administrative leave on paydays to cash checks. Management's response was that the old and new locations were in the same general area, with the same banks available. Therefore, there was "no adverse impact" (TR 129).

27p. Window coverings. Management's response was that there were drapes in the OHA office at both locations, and so there was no adverse impact, and thus "no need to bargain" (TR 127).

6/ A witness believed the date was July 26, but did not seem sure. See TR 85. It was probably before that, as the last bargaining session was established to be on July 21. See finding 26, supra.

27q. Noisy office equipment. Management's response was that the new office would be "much quieter," since the machines would not be concentrated and were "off the floor and away from the office area" (TR 127), thus, no adversed impact.

28. Management consulted with the office manager of OHA office in Buffalo throughout the negotiations on the relocation. The office manager testified at the hearing on the impact of the relocation.

28a. He established that the distance between the former and present offices is three and a half blocks and that the bargaining-unit employees regard the U.S. Courthouse as "more prestigious" (TR 105).

28b. The office at Main Street was extensively remodeled to OHA's specifications before the move. It met GSA's minimum specifications. Approximately 60 days prior to the move, Mr. Allen inspected the construction "to make sure that they were complying to our specifications for [the] office needs" (TR 109). More space was provided for each employee.

28c. A GSA inspection of the Main Street location involved areas of emergency lighting, fire alarms, and smoke detectors; and changes were made pursuant thereto, some at prodding of the office manager.

28d. The Main Street location is "much closer to the central transportation bus station which comes from all areas of western New York" (TR 90). It is not in an urban renewal area.

28e. Parking is "much better and reasonable" at the Main Street location (TR 99).

28f. Bargaining-unit employees had no windows at the U.S. Courthouse. Now they have windows covered by "beautiful flowered drapes" (TR 133).

28g. Noisy office machines are located further away from the work area of employees, at the Main Street office; and a decrease in the noise level has resulted.

28h. Within a three to four block area of the Main Street building, there are eight banks. One is about 50 feet from the building. These banks are located between the present and former buildings housing the OHA office. Only one branch bank that would have been used by OHA employees, when located in U.S. Courthouse, is not between it and the Main Street building; and the main office of that bank is located in the blocks between the two buildings.

28i. There was only one water cooler in the U.S. Courthouse. It was located directly in front of the elevators and about a 114-foot walk from the OHA office. At the Main Street building, a water cooler is located centrally, within the OHA office area.

28j. The first aid kit is not used frequently and is replenished before supplies are used up.

28k. At neither location have there been locked restrooms for the exclusive use of OHA employees, as in the Union's proposal, but at Main Street, they are shared with fewer people and are maintained in a "much cleaner" condition (TR 93).

28l. At neither location has there been an employee lounge or a health unit. The health unit used by employees at both locations is in a Federal building, which is three and a half blocks further away from the Main Street location, but is reached more comfortably (less windy) due to the shelter provided by buildings along the route. On the route between the health unit and the Main Street facility, one passes "business type people, shoppers" (TR 109). The walk to the health unit from the Main Street facility is "no different" than what was passed going from the U.S. Courthouse (TR 108).

28m. There is more "light power" at the Main Street location, and the light is "much better" because it is florescent (TR 96). Employees at the Main Street location have not complained over the existing level of lighting "[i]n the working areas" (TR 96).

28n. The lunch and break facilities at the U.S. Courthouse were in a room about 12 by 14 feet which also served as a mail and supply room and one in which to counsel SSA claimants. There were no vending or coffee machines, hot plates, or refrigerators for the exclusive use of bargaining-unit employees, as proposed by the Union for the Main Street location. At Main Street, a room which is 10 by 10 feet is used exclusively for break and lunch periods of the bargaining-unit employees.

28o. There are no day care centers sponsored by the Federal government in Buffalo.

29. The Buffalo OHA office relocation was occasioned by an OHA request for more space to accomodate a projected staff increase. Other agencies in the U.S. Courthouse also needed to expand. GSA decided to relocate OHA, and was being pressed by the other agencies to expedite the move. The office facilities arm of OHA's Region II, and its management operations specialist, tried to stop the move and then delay it. GSA forced the move and specified the moving date.

30. By letter dated April 16, 1982 Mr. Glassman notified the union president that the Buffalo OHA office would be moved on May 3-4.

31. At meetings of the parties, on April 26 and 30, 1982, the Union requested a delay in the implementation of the move. Management replied, each time, that GSA wanted the office "out" and a delay was not possible (TR 80).

Discussion and Conclusions

Respondent, at page 16 of its brief, correctly summarizes certain well established principles of law which it deems to be controlling in this proceeding. The first one is that:

> Impact and implementation bargaining ("I & I" or "impact" bargaining) is narrower in scope than other forms of midterm bargaining or term negotiations. While other forms of midterm or term bargaining may be concerned with substantive issues, impact bargaining is limited to (a) procedures management will follow in implementing its decision, and (b) appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the decision. 5 U.S.C. 7106(b)(2) and (3). Intrinsically, the obligation to bargain over I & I can only arise as the result of management inititative (sic). Moreover, the management action must have or portend substantial impact on the conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees. Office of Program Operations, Field Operations, Social Security Administration, San Francisco Region and Council of District Office Locals, American Federation of Government Employees, San Francisco Region, 5 FLRA No. 45 (1980).

The second one is that:

> It is also a generally accepted principle of Federal sector labor relations that absent agreement otherwise, the obligation to negotiate exists at the level of recognition, and not at the local level. Social Security Administration and American Program Service Center, Kansas City Missouri and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO Local 1336, 10 FLRA No. 4 (1982), Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration and Local 1346, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, 6 FLRA No. 33 (1981). [Emphasis added.]

While these statements of legal principles are correct, their application, as urged by Respondent, is not.

A. As to the impact of the relocations, the preponderance of the evidence indicates that the foreseeable impact was substantial. While the moves were not far in distance, they required the relinquishment of "plush" offices (at Syracuse) and a "prestigious" location (at Buffalo). While a few conditions may have been better at the new locations, even management recognized that they did not compensate for what was being given up and, unsuccessfully, tried to stop the moves altogether.

B. Faced with the inevitability of a substantial change in working conditions (having to give up the comfort and pleasure of working in plush and prestigious quarters), the Union put together a set of proposals, some of which may have resulted in particular working conditions remaining the same, or being even better. Respondent refused to bargain over such items.

In agreement with Judge Heimark, I conclude that Respondents improperly refused to bargain on the ground that particular proposals represented no change or an improvement in particular working conditions. Using the union proposal on window coverings for the Syracuse office as an example, it was established that there were drapes at both the old and new locations, but management refused to enter into a written agreement that there would be drapes at the new location. See finding 14(f) supra. The Union correctly asserted that it needed a written agreement to insure the matter and properly protect the bargaining-unit employees. To have agreements in writing is a statutory right. See 5 U.S.C. 7114(b)(5). Unions would probably not long retain their exclusive representative status if they relied on verbal statements from management.

Using the union proposal on lounge areas as another example, the Union was within its rights in making such a proposal, even though there had been none at the old location. Overall, the relocation had a foreseeable substantial adverse impact. This item might alleviate that impact somewhat.

C. All of the Union's proposals concerned working conditions. (Indeed, Respondent does not argue to the contrary and admits that it made no allegations of non-negotiability. See RBr 20.) See American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2477, et al., and Library of Congress, 7 FLRA No. 89, 7 FLRA 578 (1982), involving a relocation of employees to a new building and in which the Authority declared that inter alia, the following proposals by the bargaining agent, as a result of the relocation, related to matters affecting working conditions: file cabinet space; office size; partitions to insure no noise; conformance to fire codes and regulations to the extent the agency had discretion; and prohibiting work in areas violating safety codes. See also American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA No. 77, 2 FLRA 604 (1980), involving day care facilities; and National Treasury Employees Union and NTEU Chapter 80 and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Central Region, 8 FLRA No. 38, 8 FLRA 197 (1982), involving installation of drapes, and noise abatement items.

D. The fact that some items proposed by the Union were on the table at national negotiations does not matter, in these cases, because of Respondent's admission that Local 1760 was the appropriate bargaining agent for regional and local changes in working conditions of unit employees in New York offices, which would include these here at Syracuse and Buffalo. See findings 3(a) and (b), supra. Agreements reached at the national level would, of course, supercede any conflicting ones arrived at regional or local levels. This would seem to be the case as to Local 1760's proposals on a day care center. See findings 5b, 14b, and 27b, supra.

Remedy

Counsel for the General Counsel did not ask for "a status quo ante remedy" (TR 74, 9). She did ask for an affirmative order to bargain in good faith on the previously submitted proposals and to require "any agreements reached between the parties to be made retroactive to the date of the move" (TR 9 and see also TR 75). She stated that she would submit a brief and was requested to submit a proposed order for relief delineating "exactly what [she] meant by retroactivity" as it related to the proposals. She agreed. However, neither a brief nor a proposed order has been submitted on behalf of the General Counsel. Instead, reliance is placed solely on Judge Naimark's decision and the brief filed on behalf of the General Counsel in Case Nos. 12-CA-20179 and 20355. Judge Naimark granted only prospective relief in those cases, without discussing the statement on page 15 of the brief seeking relief retroactive to the date of the relocations. The brief made no argument in support of such relief.

It would be fair to assume, from the failure to submit a proposed order and argument in support of it, that the General Counsel is not too concerned about an order for retroactive relief. In any event, I do not consider such relief appropriate here, under standards enunciated by the Authority in such cases as Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA No. 111, 8 FLRA 604, (1982). While Respondent did relocate the OHA offices during the course of bargaining, it tried to stop and delay the move, but to no avail. GSA was prepared to evict the OHA offices. Respondent gave timely notices of its actions to the Union and timely responded to the bargaining proposals of the Union. The responses, while rejected here, were not totally lacking in merit. I find no bad faith in Respondent's refusal to give the Union a written allegation of non-negotiability of any proposal, in view of Respondent's stance that it was not taking such a position. See RBr 20-22. While the evidence demonstrated that employees in the bargaining unit have suffered substantial adverse effects from their moves away from plush and prestigious offices, there is no evidence that they are so dire as to call for any but prospective relief, under all the circumstances of this case. Just how disruptive retroactive relief would be, or how much it would impair the efficiency and effectiveness of Respondents' operations is unclear from the record. Counsel for the General Counsel suggested only one specific type of retroactive relief — correcting the records of any employees who were marked as late on paydays, in view of the proposal to grant an extra one-half hour of administrative leave on paydays so that employees might cash their checks. Since a number of banks appear to be in close proximity to the new location, the impact upon unit employees of the failure to bargain this proposal is not sufficient to warrant the ordering of such relief. Under all the circumstances here involved, retroactive relief is best left to bargaining between the parties.

Ultimate Findings and Recommended Order

Respondent has engaged and is engaging in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaints, in violation of 5 U.S.C. 7116(a)(1) and (5).

Accordingly, and pursuant to Section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and Section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Social Security Administration, Office of Hearings and Appeals, Region II, New York, New York, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Relocating or moving its offices and employees, without first notifying the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760, and affording it the opportunity to negotiate, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, concerning the procedures to be observed in such relocation or move and the arrangements for employees adversely affected by such action.

(b) Refusing to negotiate in good faith with the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760 to the extent consonant with law and regulations, as to the procedures to be observed in any further implementation of its relocation of OHA offices in Buffalo and Syracuse, New York, and the arrangements for employees adversely affected by the relocation, including, but not limited to proposals already made.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Notify the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760 of any intention to relocate or move any of its offices and employees, and afford it the opportunity to negotiate, to the extent consonant with law and regulations, concerning the procedures to be observed in such relocation or move and arrangements for employees adversely affected by such action.

(b) Upon request, negotiate in good faith with the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760 to the extent consonant with law and regulations, as to the procedures to be observed in any further implementation of its relocation of OHA offices in Buffalo and Syracuse, New York, and the arrangements for employees adversely affected by the relocations, including, but not limited to proposals already made.

(c) Post at its OHA offices in Buffalo and Syracuse, New York, copies of the attached notice, marked "Appendix B", on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the head of Region II and they shall be posted for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other materials.

(d) Notify the Regional Director, Region I, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case is before the Authority because of an appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It raises issues concerning the negotiability of the following Union proposal. This dispute arose while the parties were bargaining over ground rules in preparation for contract negotiations.

UNION PROPOSAL

Proposal 2(a). The employer agrees to provide official time, and to pay per diem and constructive travel costs in accordance with the Joint Travel Regulations and Civil Service Reform Act for up to ten (10) union negotiating team members, as follows:

(1) For five (5) calendar days at dates designated by the Union at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base to prepare proposals, counter-proposals, etc., prior to the start of across-the-table negotiations.

> (2) For an initial across-the-table bargaining session of up to four (4) weeks. If bargaining is not completed within that time, the negotiating period will be extended by mutual consent, or a second bargaining period will be established.
> (3) For any additional sessions by the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service or the Federal Service Impasses Panel. [The underscored portion is in dispute.]

II. Position of the Parties

The parties' arguments focus on the issues of whether additional official time can be negotiated over and above that to which union negotiators are entitled under the Statute and whether travel and per diem expenses are within the duty to bargain. Under section 7131(a) of the Statute, the number of employees entitled to official time while participating on the Union negotiating team would be limited to the same number as the management team. The Union proposal here seeks negotiated official time, as well as travel and per diem, for up to ten Union negotiating team members because the Agency had expressed its intent to limit its management negotiating team to three or less members.

The Union asserts that official time for Union team members, over and above that to which there is an entitlement under section 7131(a), is negotiable under section 7131(d). The Union specifically says it does not intend its proposal to affect the size of the management negotiating team. The Union argues that the negotiation of travel and per diem expenses is a condition of employment and that the proposal is not inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act as interpreted by the Comptroller General.

The Agency contends that the parties have entered into a ground rules agreement through the Mediation/Arbitration process. It argues that this agreement has effectively resolved the parties' dispute over the subjects of official time and travel and per diem. Because there is no longer an outstanding dispute over these issues, it contends that the petition is moot and moves that it be dismissed. As to the merits of the proposal, the Agency argues that negotiation of official time for Union negotiators over and above that provided in section 7131(a) of the Statute conflicts with section 7131 of the Statute. It also asserts that the proposal effectively seeks to determine the numerical size of the Agency negotiating team and is nonnegotiable for that reason as well. With respect to travel and per diem, the Agency asserts that it is not a condition of employment within the meaning of the Statute because payment of travel expenses is specifically provided for by law. It also asserts that Congress did not intend to require agencies to pay travel and per diem expenses of employees representing a union in collective bargaining and that whatever discretion agencies may possess under the Travel Expense Act to do so cannot appropriately be exercised through negotiation.

III. Analysis

A. Question of Mootness

As noted earlier this proposal was presented during ground rules negotiations between the parties. Having reached an impasse in those negotiations, and based on a recommendation by the Federal Service Impasses Panel (FSIP), the parties submitted their ground rules dispute to Mediation/Arbitration. The Mediator/Arbitrator held that the issue of official time for additional union negotiators was nonnegotiable and that the Union negotiators were strictly limited to the amount of official time provided pursuant to section 7131(a) of the Statute. The Mediator/Arbitrator therefore held that under the Statute the parties could not negotiate over official time for Union negotiating team members who exceeded the number of Agency team members. The Mediator/Arbitrator directed the parties to choose between alternative dispositions of their travel and per diem dispute. The alternatives were:

> (1) Negotiations would be held at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio -- the Agency's preferred location -- with the Agency paying certain specified travel costs for up to seven Union negotiating team members;
> (2) negotiations would be held at Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma -- the Union's preferred location -- with each side bearing the travel expenses for its own team.

The record indicates that the parties agreed to the second alternative and that contract negotiations were held at Tinker Air Force Base. Since the parties reached agreement as to the site of negotiations and since that agreement was coupled with an agreement on payment of travel expenses, the Authority finds that there is no longer an outstanding issue as to whether travel and per diem is within the parties' duty to bargain under the Statute. A valid, binding agreement disposing of this aspect of the proposal has been reached by the parties. Therefore, this portion of the petition is moot. See Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO and Department of the Navy, Mare Island Naval Shipyard, 7 FLRA 701 (1982).

The Authority wishes to point out that it has recently found a proposal which would require payment by an agency of the travel expenses of union representatives using official time to be within the duty to bargain. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U. S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986). That case, in the Authority's view, addresses arguments similar to those which the parties in this case raise as to the merits of the question of the negotiability of travel and per diem. However, in view of the parties' agreement as to the site of negotiations and the payment of travel expenses, no order to bargain is appropriate or warranted here.

With respect to that portion of the petition concerning the negotiation of additional official time for Union negotiators, the Mediator/Arbitrator's award was based on her determination that official time for additional Union negotiators was nonnegotiable. The merits of the Union's proposal were never considered nor was any agreement reached with respect to this issue. Therefore, the Authority does not consider this aspect of the petition moot.

B. Official Time Issue

The Union has specifically stated that the proposal is not intended to prescribe the number of members on the Agency's negotiating team. This interpretation comports with the plain language of the proposal. The Agency's contention that the proposal effectively dictates the size of its team is rejected.

The Authority has previously held that, under section 7131(d) of the Statute, a proposal seeking more union negotiators than the number designated by management and official time for those additional negotiators is within the duty to bargain. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and U. S. Environmental Protection Agency, 15 FLRA 461 (1984) (Union Proposal 2). The Authority finds that the official time provisions of this Union Proposal are within the duty to bargain for the reasons set forth in that case.

The parties' arguments do not specifically address the aspect of the proposal involving the types of activities for which official time will be authorized. However, we note that under section 7131(a) employees representing unions in negotiation of a collective bargaining agreement are entitled to official time for such purposes as attendance at impasse proceedings. Additionally, the Authority has previously found that under section 7131(d) official time for union representatives to prepare for negotiations, impasse resolution and counterproposals is a negotiable matter. Federal Uniformed Firefighters, Local F-159 and U.S. Army Armament Research & Development Command, Dover, New Jersey, 3 FLRA 317 (1980).

IV. Conclusion

The Authority finds that, because the parties have reached an agreement on the travel and per diem issue, the Union's petition as to this issue is moot. However, as far as the issue of official time for additional Union negotiators is concerned, the petition has not been rendered moot. The Authority finds that this aspect of the Union Proposal is within the duty to bargain under section 7131(d) of the Statute.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning that portion of the proposal which relates to authorizing official time for Union negotiating team members.*/ IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that that portion of the petition which relates to per diem and travel costs be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Issued, Washington, D.C. April 30, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of four Union proposals.[1] The proposals arose in negotiations between the parties over ground rules to be followed in bargaining over a new basic agreement.

II. Procedural Issues

Preliminarily, the Agency asserts that the petition for review is not properly before the Authority. It contends that it has requested that the Federal Service Impasses Panel (the Panel) resolve an impasse between itself and the Union regarding Proposals 1 and 2 without regard to their negotiability. As for the remaining proposals addressed in the petition, it contends that, because the Union has refused to affirm that those proposals would be before the Panel if no negotiability dispute existed, the Union has failed to establish that the proposals are "real" as opposed to "hypothetical." Thus, the Agency contends that the petition for review as to these proposals does not meet the requirements of Part 2424 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Authority rejects this contention.

[1] The Union's appeal originally involved a fifth proposal. The Union has subsequently withdrawn that proposal from its appeal and it will not be considered in this case.

In the Authority's view, nothing in the Statute or the Authority's Rules and Regulations precludes a union from filing a petition for review of a negotiability issue even though an agency has requested the Panel to resolve an impasse without regard to the negotiability of the proposal involved. In fact, the Authority has held that negotiability issues which arise during the collective bargaining process (of which the Panel operates as one aspect) must be resolved through appeal to the Authority. Thus, while the Panel may be able to resolve an impasse while avoiding obligation to bargain problems, negotiability issues may be resolved only by the Authority. Interpretation and Guidance, 11 FLRA 626 (1983). Additionally, the Authority finds that nothing in the Statute or its Rules and Regulations provides that a union must either submit a proposal to the Panel or declare its intent to do so as a prerequisite to instituting a negotiability appeal with respect to that proposal.

The Agency additionally contends with respect to various of the proposals that it has not declared them nonnegotiable. The Authority notes that the Union specifically requested, in writing, a declaration by the Agency of its position on the negotiability of those proposals and that the Agency effectively failed to respond to the request. Such failure constitutes a constructive declaration of nonnegotiability which gives rise to a right of appeal to the Authority. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3028 and Department of Health and Human Services, Public Health Service, Alaska Area Native Health Service, 13 FLRA 697 (1984). Therefore, the Authority finds that the petition is appropriately before it.

III. Union Proposals 1 and 2

Union Proposal 1

Section 3. Time

> In accordance with past practice in the PTO, all POPA bargaining team members, if otherwise in a duty status, shall be > authorized a reasonable amount of official time to perform all necessary and relevant activities related to these negotiations. For those members of POPA's bargaining team who are engaged in activities related to these negotiations outside of their regular work hours, they shall be on compensated overtime or compensatory time status, at the election of the employee.

Union Proposal 2

Section 4. Schedule

> c. If negotiations extend beyond 300 hours the schedule will be modified to add paid overtime or compensatory time sessions on Saturdays. Both POPA and the PTO recognize that such paid overtime and compensatory time may be authorized by reason of the fact that all time spent by the POPA negotiating team in actual negotiations constitutes official duty time. Any compensatory time earned can be used only after a new basic agreement is signed. POPA team members may accrue and use such compensatory time without limitation.

A. Positions of the Parties

These two proposals seek to authorize payment of overtime or compensatory time for participation in preparation for, and actual, negotiations when participation occurs outside an employee's normal working hours. The Agency asserts that it must have specific statutory authority to grant pay and that nothing in section 7131 of the Statute authorizes overtime compensation for Union representatives' participation in representational activity when they would not otherwise be in duty status. The Union contends that the entitlement to official time under section 7131(a) of the Statute extends to overtime hours as long as the Agency approves the overtime in advance. Additionally, the Union argues that under the legal provisions governing overtime, 5 U.S.C. § 5542, the Agency has discretion to pay the overtime sought by these proposals.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

As is relevant here,[2] payment of overtime compensation and granting of compensatory time off are governed by the provisions of 5 U.S.C. §§ 5542 and 5543.[3] Entitlement to overtime pay is governed by § 5542, and § 5543 addresses eligibility for compensatory time off in lieu of the monetary compensation to which the employee would be entitled under § 5542. Representational activities performed by a union official outside his or her workday do not constitute the performance of "hours of work" within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 5542. See Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1164, AFL-CIO, 19 FLRA No. 4 (1985) and NTEU v. Gregg, No. 83-546 (D.D.C. Sept. 20, 1983).[4/] Nor do the provisions of section 7131 of the Statute authorize overtime compensation for time spent in representational activities when the employee involved was not otherwise in a duty status.[5/] See NTEU v. Gregg. Thus, because Union Proposals 1 and 2 go beyond the conditions under which overtime compensation is specifically authorized under statute, they conflict with Federal statute and are not within the duty to bargain. See National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 6 FLRA 508 (1981) (Union Proposal 1).

[2] The record indicates that the grade levels of the members of the Union's representatives are such that they are exempt from coverage under the Fair Labor Standards Act. See Federal Personnel Manual Letter 551-1. Thus, overtime entitlements under that statute are not germane to this dispute.

[3] 5 U.S.C. § 5542 provides, in relevant part:

> § 5542. Overtime rates; computation
> (a) For full-time, part-time and intermittent tours of duty, hours of work officially ordered or approved in excess of 40 hours in an administrative workweek, or . . . in excess of 8 hours in a day, performed by an employee are overtime work and shall be paid for . . . .

5 U.S.C. § 5543 provides, in relevant part:

> § 5543. Compensatory time off
> (a) The head of an agency may--
> (1) on request of an employee, grant the employee compensatory time off from his scheduled tour of duty instead of payment for an equal amount of time spent in irregular or occasional overtime work; and
> (2) provide that an employee whose rate of basic pay is in excess of the maximum rate of basic pay for GS-10 shall be granted compensatory time off from his scheduled tour of duty equal to the amount of time spent in irregular or occasional overtime work instead of being paid for that work under section 5542 of this title.

IV. Union Proposal 3

> Section 2. Attendance, Priorities and Other Negotiations
> . . . .
> f. Except for changes in working conditions mandated by statute or government-wide regulation, negotiations regarding impact

---

[4/] In NTEU v. Gregg the court found, among other things, that two employees of an agency who spent time beyond their normal workweek serving on a union negotiating team were not entitled to overtime compensation under section 7131 of the Statute, 5 U.S.C. § 5542, or the Fair Labor Standards Act. Insofar as the latter two provisions were concerned, the court noted that such representational activities did not fall within the definition of "work" within the meaning of those statutes. In Social Security Administration the Authority noted that the legal basis for granting compensatory time off arises under 5 U.S.C. § 5543 as a result of overtime work performed by an employee. Citing NTEU v. Gregg in support, the Authority found that a union official's performance outside his workday of representational functions did not constitute hours of work within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 5542 for which either overtime pay or compensatory time off could be legally granted.

[5/] It is unnecessary to reach, and the Authority does not pass upon, the question of entitlement to overtime compensation where representational activities occur when the employee involved would otherwise be on duty in an overtime status.

> and implementation of future management changes in working conditions will be combined with these negotiations on a new basic agreement. Management recognizes its obligation to defer implementation of such proposed changes until a new basic agreement is signed, except where immediate implementation is required by an overriding exigency. For example, management recognizes that no overriding exigency exists with respect to automation and that automation of the PTO constitutes a significant impact on working conditions that would preclude implementation until negotiations on a new basic agreement are concluded.

A. Positions of the Parties

This proposal would require that, with certain stated exceptions, negotiations over the impact and implementation of management proposed changes in working conditions would be combined with negotiations over the basic agreement. It would further require that, absent an overriding exigency, any proposed change be deferred until the new basic agreement had been signed.

The Agency's arguments as to this proposal are limited to the procedural ones discussed above in section II. It has presented no arguments on the merits of this proposal. The Union contends that the proposal constitutes a negotiable procedure for orderly conduct of negotiations over changes in conditions of employment.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

During the pendency of this case the Authority issued several decisions which addressed an agency's duty to bargain when, in exercising a management right under section 7106 of the Statute, it changes conditions of employment of unit employees. The Authority has held that no duty to bargain arises from the exercise of a management right that results in an impact or a reasonably foreseeable impact on bargaining unit employees which is no more than de minimis. Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Chicago Region, 15 FLRA 922 (1984); Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Region V, Chicago, Illinois, 19 FLRA No. 101 (1985). Insofar as negotiation over the impact and implementation of management changes in working conditions is concerned, Union Proposal 3 does not distinguish between those management initiated changes which have no more than a de minimis impact on bargaining unit employees and those which have more than a de minimis impact. Thus the proposal would effectively impose upon the Agency a duty to bargain which is broader than that prescribed by the Statute. Given this, it extends beyond the duty to bargain imposed upon the Agency by the Statute. An agency could elect to bargain over the impact and implementation of changes of a de minimis nature as long as proposals do not conflict with law or Government-wide rule or regulation. See Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Headquarters, 18 FLRA No. 92 (1985). However, since the record in this case does not show that the Agency has elected to bargain over Union Proposal 3, the Authority finds that it is not within the Agency's duty to bargain.

V. Union Proposal 4

> Section 8. Attendance at Mediation
> The Commissioner and the President of POPA will personally attend all mediation sessions held under the auspices of the FMCS.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the Union has no right to insist on a provision which prescribes who will represent management in negotiations. The Union asserts that this proposal would not actually restrict the Agency's ability to choose its own representatives. In support it contends that, as the principal with whom they are trying to reach agreement, the Commissioner is "inherently" the "ultimate representative." The proposal would allow it to communicate directly with that principal and eliminate potential inaccuracies resulting from use of intermediaries. It maintains that this proposal provides a procedure for facilitating its statutory right to present its views to the head of the Agency.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

This proposal requires that the Commissioner attend mediation sessions in his capacity as "ultimate" management representative as opposed to relying solely on his/her designated representatives. The Authority has held that it is within the discretion of both agency management and labor organizations holding exclusive recognition to designate their respective representatives when fulfilling their responsibilities under the Statute. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, 4 FLRA 272 (1980). Moreover, insofar as Union Proposal 4 requires that the Commissioner of the Agency personally attend mediation sessions, it concerns matters which go beyond those directly affecting unit employees. The designation of those individuals who will attend mediation sessions on behalf of the Agency is not a matter directly related to the conditions of employment of unit employees, contrary to the Union's argument. See National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1451 and Naval Training Center, Orlando, Florida, 3 FLRA 88 (1980). While the Agency may elect to bargain concerning such matters, the record does not establish that it has chosen to do so. See Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Headquarters, 18 FLRA No. 92 (1985). Therefore, this proposal is not within the Agency's duty to bargain.

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Eugene R. (Joff) Neill filed by the Union pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. For the reasons stated below, it has been determined that the exceptions must be dismissed as untimely filed.

The Arbitrator's award is dated March 18, 1986, and appears to have been served on the parties by mail on the same day.

Under section 7122(b) of the Statute, as amended, 1/ and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, as amended, 2/ which amendments are applicable to exceptions pending or filed with the Authority on or after March 2, 1984, and under sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Rules and Regulations, which are also applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, any exceptions to the Arbitrator's award in this case had to be filed with the Authority no later than the close of business on April 21, 1986. However, the exceptions were not filed with the Authority at its national office until April 22, 1986. In this regard, the record established that the Union mailed the exceptions, by certified mail from Roseburg, Oregon, addressed to the Authority's San Francisco Regional Office, on April 14, 1986. The San Francisco Regional Office received them on April 17, 1986, and exercised due diligence in forwarding the exceptions on April 18, 1986. However, they were not received by the Authority's national office until April 22, 1986. [3] Therefore, the exceptions were untimely filed.

1/ Section 7122(b) of the Statute was amended by the Civil Service Miscellaneous Amendments Act of 1983 (Pub. L. No. 98-224, § 4, 98 Stat. 47, 48 (1984)) to provide that the 30-day period for filing exceptions to an arbitrator's award begins on the date the award is served on the filing party.

2/ 49 Fed. Reg. 22623 (1984).

Accordingly, as the Union's exceptions were untimely filed, they are hereby dismissed.

For the Authority.

Issued, Washington, D.C., April 30, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the following Union Proposal:

> Students at the (National Weather Service Training) Center shall be given the option of staying at housing of their choice in the Kansas City area. In addition, each student who elects to stay at housing other than the Downtown Travelodge shall be given the $11.85 which would have been paid to the Downtown Travelodge (by the Agency) for their housing, to use in paying for whatever housing the student selects. This $11.85 would be in addition to the $23.00 per diem given to each student for food and miscellaneous expenses.

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency essentially contends that the proposal is nonnegotiable for the following reasons. First, it conflicts with management's right to determine its budget under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute, because the increase in cost associated with the proposal is significant and is not offset by compensating benefits. Second, the Agency asserts that the proposal is inconsistent with its right under 41 U.S.C. § 252(a) to contract for services. Third, the Agency states that the proposal is inconsistent with a policy determination it made pursuant to its authority under 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e) that employees may be required to use Government furnished quarters when they are students at the training center if the Agency head determines it is necessary. Finally, the Agency maintains that it has a "requirements" contract with a private contractor which is consistent with 41 C.F.R. § 1-3.409(b). According to the Agency, a "requirements" contract requires an employer to have all its needs supplied exclusively by the contractor. In the Agency's view, its contract legally prevents it from purchasing its housing needs from anyone but the private contractor, thereby making it impossible for the Agency to agree to the terms of the proposal without risking a lawsuit.

The Union contends that the proposal is not intended to cost the Agency any more than it has already determined to spend. The Union also contends that the proposal would not violate law or regulation. It argues that the contract the Agency has negotiated for housing its employees/students may be altered or terminated at its sole discretion, and that the contract does not force the Agency to compel its employees/students to lodge with the private contractor.

III. Analysis

The Union's proposal would allow employees who are students at the National Weather Service Training Center to arrange for their own housing instead of being required to stay in Agency-arranged housing. The proposal further provides that the Agency would pay to employees who arrange their own housing the same amount of money as the Agency pays per employee for the housing it has arranged. The housing allowance would be added to the regular per diem given to all students for food and other expenses.

A. Right to Determine Budget Under Section 7106(a)(1)

In support of its position that the proposal would infringe upon management's right to determine its budget, the Agency cites American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604 (1980), enforced sub nom. Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982). In that decision the Authority determined the conditions under which an otherwise negotiable proposal could be found to violate an agency's right to determine its budget under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute. The Authority stated, in relevant part, that such a determination will be made only where an agency makes a substantial demonstration that a proposal would require a significant and unavoidable increase in costs which is not offset by compensating benefits. The Authority finds in this case that the Agency has failed to demonstrate that the proposal would require any increase in costs whatsoever.

B. Proposal's Consistency With 41 U.S.C. § 252(a), 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e) and 41 C.F.R. § 1-3.409(b)

The Agency's contentions concerning the proposal's alleged inconsistency with law, and with the Agency's policy determinations made under the authority of law, are all without merit. 41 U.S.C. § 252(a) provides that "Executive agencies shall make purchases and contracts for property and services in accordance with the provisions of this chapter and implementing regulations of the Administrator." The proposal would not have prevented the Agency from contracting, as it did, with a private contractor, nor would it require the Agency to contract for any housing when the Agency had not already determined to do so. The proposal would only provide employees/students with the option of arranging their own housing and being reimbursed up to the cost of Agency-furnished housing.

5 U.S.C. § 5911(e) states that "[t]he head of an agency may not require an employee ... to occupy quarters on a rental basis, unless the agency head determines that necessary service cannot be rendered, or that property of the Government cannot adequately be protected, otherwise." The fact that the head of the Agency in this case made a previous policy determination consistent with the terms of 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e), does not settle the issue of whether the Agency is barred from negotiating over the proposal. For the proposal to be outside the duty to bargain, it must be inconsistent with law (or Government-wide regulations or agency regulations for which there is a compelling need). The Agency does not contend, nor does it appear, that the proposal is inconsistent with 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e), or that 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e) requires the Agency to find it necessary that its employees/students reside in Agency contracted housing. The Agency argues only that the proposal is inconsistent with a policy determination it made pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e).1/ Since the policy determination was a matter strictly within the discretion of the Agency, and concerned conditions of employment affecting unit employees, the Agency's argument does not provide a basis for finding the proposal nonnegotiable.

Finally, 41 C.F.R. § 1-3.409(b) sets forth the description and application of "requirements" contracts.2/ Although the Agency asserts that its contract in this case is a "requirements" contract consistent with this regulatory provision, the proposal would have to be inconsistent with the Code of Federal Regulations in order to be barred from negotiations. The Agency has not shown this. Further, in agreement with the Union, the Authority finds that regardless of whether the contract it has negotiated is a "requirements" contract, the contract has provisions which specify that it may be altered or terminated at the will of the Agency. Therefore, there is no inconsistency between the proposal and 41 C.F.R. § 1-3.409(b), nor is there any other apparent reason why the proposal should be barred from negotiations.

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons stated in the foregoing analysis, the proposal is not inconsistent with the Agency's right to determine its budget, under section 7106(a)(1) of the

1/ Nor does a General Accounting Office (GAO) Memorandum (Certificate of Settlement, Claim No. 2-2624287 (March 30, 1978)) referred to by the Agency support the Agency's conclusion that it is barred from negotiating the Union's proposal. The GAO memorandum would at most indicate that the Agency has satisfied the finding of necessity required by 5 U.S.C. § 5911(e), but cites to no law or regulation preventing the Agency from complying with the provisions of the proposal.

2/ This section of the C.F.R. has been replaced by regulations found at 48 C.F.R. Chapter 1. However, the new regulations do not apply to this case as they only govern contracts executed after April 1, 1984.

Statute, nor is it inconsistent with Federal law or regulation.3/ Moreover, the Agency's view that the proposal conflicts with a policy determination made under the authority of law provides no basis for finding the proposal nonnegotiable. Therefore, the Authority concludes that the proposal is within the duty to bargain.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning the Union's proposal.4/

3/ The Authority notes that the proposal is consistent with the applicable Federal Travel Regulations. In this regard, although the Agency has the discretion to bargain over the proposal, it may require proof that students who elect to stay in alternative housing are paying the negotiated amount. The Agency may also adjust the per diem amount for food and miscellaneous expenses based on circumstances resulting from the use of other lodging, for example, when a student elects to stay with friends or relatives at no cost.

4/ In deciding that the proposal is within the duty to bargain, the Authority makes no judgment as to its merits.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the General Counsel filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision, and the Respondent filed an opposition to the exceptions.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order.

In agreement with the Judge, the Authority concludes that the General Counsel has not met the burden of proving that the Respondent failed to comply with section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute in violation of section 7116(a)(1), (5) or (8) of the Statute when it refused to furnish requested information to the Charging Party in the particular circumstances of this case. DECISION

Statement of the Case

This decision concerns an unfair labor practice complaint issued by the Regional Director, Region Seven, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Denver, Colorado against the Defense Mapping Agency Aerospace Center, St. Louis, Missouri (Respondent), based on a charge filed by the National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1827 (Charging Party or Union). The complaint alleged, in substance, that Respondent violated sections 7116(a)(1),(5) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 5 U.S.C. § 7101 et seq. (the Statute), by refusing to furnish to the Union copies of certain documents sought by the Union to properly represent an employee who had not been selected for an engraver foreman position. The complaint alleged that the Union was and is entitled to the data under section 7114(b)(4). Respondent's answer denied any violation of the Statute.

A hearing was held in St. Louis, Missouri. The Respondent, Charging Party, and the General Counsel were represented and afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce relevant evidence, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and file post-hearing briefs. Respondent and the General Counsel filed helpful briefs.[1] Based on the entire record,[2] including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

1. At all times material, the Union is and has been a labor organization within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. 7103(a)(4). (GC-1(c); GC-1(d)).

2. At all times material, Respondent is and has been an agency within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. 7103(a)(3). (GC-1(c); GC-1(d)).

3. At all times material, the Union has been certified as the exclusive representative of all General Schedule and wage grade employees of Respondent, excluding management officials, professional employees, confidential employees, employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and supervisors as defined in Title VII, Public Law 95-454. (GC 1(c), 1(d)). There are approximately 1,300 employees in the unit. Respondent has approximately 2,400 employees outside the unit. (Tr. 90).

4. At all times material, Respondent and the Union have been parties to a collective bargaining agreement with an effective date of 19 February 1982. (GC-2).

[1] Respondent's request to file a limited reply brief is hereby denied.

[2] The motions of Respondent and the General Counsel to correct the transcript are granted; the transcript is hereby corrected as set forth therein. Respondent's Exhibit 4, an informal settlement agreement in Case No. 57-CO-20012, should not have been received. Accordingly, no consideration has been given to that Exhibit. The General Counsel's request that the receipt of Respondent's Exhibit 6 be reconsidered is denied. However, I agree with the General Counsel that Respondent's Exhibit 6 and the testimony supporting its introduction into evidence fail to establish that the Union waived its rights under section 7114(b)(4).

a. Article 9 contains a "broad-scope" grievance procedure. (Tr. 59, 103). Among other things, it defines a grievance as a complaint by the Union or any unit employee concerning any matter relating to the employment of any unit employee and any complaint by the Union or any employee concerning any claimed violation, misinterpretation, or misapplication of any law, rule or regulation affecting conditions of employment.

b. Since the February 1982 effective date of the agreement, the negotiated grievance procedure has never been applied to the filling of supervisory or other non-bargaining unit positions. (Tr. 89-91).

c. Article 9-3c. provides, in part, that raising an EEO complaint with an EEO counselor shall constitute an election by an employee and shall preclude raising the same issue(s) as a grievance.

d. Article 9-4e. provides, in part, that a grievance must be filed within 21 calendar days of the date of occurrence of the matter grieved or within 21 calendar days of the date that the aggrieved party could reasonably be expected to have been aware of the occurrence grieved.

e. Article 14 deals with providing the Union information "relevant and necessary for the proper discharge of its obligation under Public Law 95-454 and this agreement." Article 14-1g. provides that specific information requested for investigating and/or processing complaints/grievances/appeals will be provided without undue delay, normally within 7 workdays.

f. Article 36 deals with employee details, reassignments and temporary promotions. Article 37 deals with the merit staffing program. (G.C. Ex. 2).

5. Respondent has consistently refused to engage in negotiations regarding the filling of supervisory positions. (Tr. 66-67, 69, 89).

6. At all times material, Louis Paul Eaves (hereinafter Eaves), has occupied the position of labor relations officer for Respondent, and has been and is now a supervisor and/or management official within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. 7103(a)(10) and/or (11), and an agent of Respondent. (GC-1(c); GC-1(d)).

7. On 12 November 1982, Respondent issued a vacancy announcement for an engraver foreman position. The position is a supervisory position. (G.C. 3; Tr. 20). As such, it is excluded from the bargaining unit represented by the Union.

8. Bargaining unit employees were eligible to apply for the position. (Tr. 20). Applicants would be evaluated and ranked in accordance with the agency's merit staffing plan. (G.C. 3; Res. Ex. 5; Tr. 20). According to the merit staffing plan, a panel is convened to identify essential knowledges, skills, abilities, and personal characteristics (KSAPs) for the position and to establish ranking levels. The Union is not represented on the panel for supervisory and other non-bargaining unit positions. Applicants submit self-rating sheets, also commonly called KSAPs, which describe how they meet the rating and ranking criteria established by the panel. The panel scores the KSAPs submitted by the applicants and compiles a register of the applicants who will be referred for an interview with the selecting official. (Tr. 20-22; 92-93, Res. Ex. 5).

9. Herbert Foster is a bargaining unit employee of the Respondent who works as a negative engraver. (Tr. 17). He is now a special representative of the Union and, from 1977 through 1982, was the Union's chief steward. (Tr. 19, 71). During November 1982, Foster applied for the engraver foreman position. (Tr. 20).

10. By notice dated December 10, 1983, Foster was notified that he would not be referred for an interview for the engraver foreman position. (Res. Ex. 2; Tr. 77). Upon receipt of the notice, Foster decided to investigate the process that led to his nonselection. On December 14, 1983, he asked a staffing specialist in Respondent's personnel office for copies of the KSAPs submitted by other applicants so he could compare them with his own. He also requested that the rating panel be reconvened, so he could persuade it to raise his score, as was once done in the case of another employee. Both requests were refused. (Tr. 24-25).

11. Foster contacted an EEO Counselor regarding his non-selection on December 16, 1982. He alleged various forms of racial discrimination. The EEO Counselor recorded the informal complaint and set forth a plan to investigate it. (Res. Ex. 1). Foster also asked the EEO Counselor for help in obtaining copies of the KSAPs submitted by other applicants. The EEO Counselor said he could not do this; that Foster could only see his own KSAPs. (Tr. 26).

12. Foster then asked his Union steward, Brady Barr, for assistance in securing the documents. (Tr. 26). Foster had not decided what action to take, but wanted to make that determination after a review of the documents. (Tr. 29, 31). By letter dated January 4, 1983, Union steward Barr sent the following letter to Respondent:

> In order for the Union to discharge its obligation under Title VII, CSRA, P.L. 95-454, Local 1827, NFFE hereby request the following:
> (1) Copies of all KSAPS and Rating Sheets for all candidates referred for selection on Referral Certificate for above vacancy announcement.
> (2) Copy of Position Description for position indicated on announcement, also indicate position number.
> (3) POW (Class & Wages) rationale for making position Supervisory rather than non-supervisory.
> (4) Copy of SF 52 requesting establishment of position.
> (5) Copy of WP-4413-28 (Supervisory) position description.
> I. A.W. 14-1(g) of Agreement, please expedite - time constraints. (G.C. Exh. 4).

13. Respondent, by L. P. Eaves, denied Barr's request by letter dated January 10, 1983. The letter provided as follows:

> This will respond to your letter of 4 January 1983 requesting information relevant to Vacancy Announcement No. 155-82A, dated 12 November 1982.
> The position is a supervisory position (Engraver Foreman, WP-413-30) and is, thus, beyond the scope of the bargaining unit. Article 37 (Merit Staffing Program) is applicable only to positions within the bargaining unit as is the rest of the Agreement.
> There has been a number of decisions by the Federal Labor Relations Authority to the effect that management is not obligated to negotiate with regard to the filling of positions outside of the bargaining unit. There is no provision of the Agreement by which management waived its right to exclude from the bargaining process the filling of non-bargaining unit positions and, accordingly, management actions, with > regard to such positions, are not subject to challenge under the negotiated grievance procedures.

> In view of the above, your request must be denied. Your letter does not specify any relationship between conditions of employment of unit employees and filling of the position in question so as to establish a need for the information relevant to any right of representation. If you wish to clarify this matter for me, I will reconsider my decision.

14. On January 19, 1983 Union chief steward Francis Jett responded to Eaves. He requested the exact same information and stated, "[T]his information is necessary and relevant to process a grievance. This information is being requested in accordance with the Labor-Management Agreement Article 14-1-G." (G.C. Ex. 6).

15. Upon receipt of Jett's letter of January 19, 1983, Eaves contacted Jett by telephone and requested additional clarification regarding the relevancy of the information. The conversation took place between 19 January and 25 January 1983, the date of Eaves' written response to Jett. Eaves requested clarification regarding the need or relevancy of the information. Jett stated that the information was relevant to grievances which the Union intended to process under the negotiated grievance procedures. (G.C.-7; Tr. 75-7[illegible]. Eaves learned from the EEO office that Foster had an EEO compl[illegible] pending. (Tr. 104). On January 25, 1983 Eaves replied to Jett's request of January 19, 1983, in part, as follows:

> In your letter you state that the requested information is for the purpose of processing a grievance. In our recent conversation, you indicated that you intended to process the grievance under the negotiated grievance procedures (Article 9).
> I continue to be of the opinion that disputes regarding the filling of supervisory position are not subject to resolution under the negotiated grievance procedures. I have also been informed that Mr. Louis Foster has filed an EEO complaint regarding the same matter. Thus, any grievance filed by Mr. Foster would also be precluded by Article 9-3 c. Please provide the name(s) of the employee(s) whom you propose to represent in this matter under the negotiated grievance procedure.
> We obviously have a very basic grievability/arbitrability issue. I suggest we submit the issue to arbitration and if the Union ultimately prevails, I will provide the appropriate information and accept any subsequently filed grievance under the negotiated grievance procedures.

16. Sometime after the exchange of correspondence, Eaves again asked Jett for the name of the employee the Union proposed to represent. Jett replied that it was Louis Foster. (Tr. 76).

17. On January 25, 1983, Foster filed a formal EEO complaint. (Tr. 37).

18. The Union was never furnished the data sought in its letters.

19. Basically, the data requested by the Union would have shown the relative scores and qualifications of the applicants and whether the criteria developed by the rating panel for the position, a newly-established position, fairly reflected the actual duties and responsibilities of the position. (Tr. 31-37, 58). The Union has characteristically reviewed data of this nature before deciding whether, or how, to represent an employee not selected for a promotion to a bargaining unit position. (Tr. 46, 57-58). However, as noted, the Union has never before sought to represent an employee with respect to a position outside the bargaining unit. (Tr. 66, 90). Similarly, Respondent would have routinely provided much or all of the data, perhaps in a sanitized form, if the position for which Foster was not selected had been a bargaining unit position. (Tr. 104-105).

20. Testimony at the hearing disclosed that the Union desired to review the data to determine whether or not to assist Foster in filing a grievance or complaint in a number of possible forums. These included the possibilities of a grievance under the negotiated grievance procedure, a prohibited personnel practice complaint before the Merit Systems Protection Board, an EEO complaint under Equal Employment Opportunity regulations, or an unfair labor practice charge with the Federal Labor Relations Authority for discrimination against a union representative. (Tr. 116).

21. The data requested by the Union is normally maintained by the agency in the regular course of business and does not constitute guidance, advice, counsel or training provided for management officials or supervisors relating to collective bargaining. (G.C. Ex. 1(c), 1(d)).

Discussion, Conclusions, and Recommendations

The General Counsel contends that the data sought by the Union in its requests to Respondent was "necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining," within the meaning of section 7114(b)(4)[3] of the Statute.

Respondent notes that the Authority has held that procedures for the filling of supervisory or other non-bargaining unit positions do not constitute a condition of employment within the meaning of the Statute, and that an employer is not obligated to bargain regarding such matters.[4] Respondent claims that the parties' negotiated grievance procedure does not extend to disputes regarding supervisory and other non-bargaining unit positions, and Respondent has consistently refused to engage in such bargaining. Therefore, Respondent asserts that the Union is not entitled to information under section 7114(b)(4) regarding a matter beyond the scope of collective bargaining and which does not constitute a condition of employment.

Respondent also maintains that the question of the Union's entitlement to the requested information is a matter of contract interpretation which should have been resolved via arbitration. In addition, Respondent contends that a grievance by, or on behalf of, Foster, even if otherwise viable, would have been precluded by Article 9-3c. of the agreement, since Foster raised the matter with an EEO counselor, and it would also have been untimely under Article 9-4a. of the agreement. Respondent also argues that the Union failed to demonstrate that the requested information was relevant to any representational need.

[3] Section 7114(b)(4) provides that the duty of an agency and an exclusive representative to negotiate in good faith shall include the obligation -

> "(4) in the case of an agency, to furnish to the exclusive representative involved, or its authorized representative, upon request and, to the extent not prohibited by law, data -
> "(A) which is normally maintained by the agency in the regular course of business;
> "(B) which is reasonably available and necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding, and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining; and
> "(C) which does not constitute guidance, advice, counsel, or training provided for management officials or supervisors, relating to collective bargaining[.]"

[4] See, e.g., National Council of Field Labor Locals, 3 FLRA 289 (1980).

Respondent's argument that since the Union referenced Article 14-1g. of the negotiated agreement in making its request for the data, any dispute as to the Union's entitlement to the information involves the interpretation and application of that article and should be resolved under the negotiated grievance procedure rather than as an unfair labor practice is rejected. Article 14-1g basically provides a time frame for responding to requests for information. This dispute does not involve essentially an interpretation of article 14-1g, but rather whether Respondent has engaged in an unfair labor practice by refusing to supply information within the scope of section 7114(b)(4) to the Union. The Union's right, if any, to the requested data in the present case stems from that section of the Statute rather than from the collective bargaining agreement. The refusal to supply information within the scope of section 7114(b)(4) constitutes a violation of sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute irrespective of whether the refusal might also constitute a breach of the parties' agreement. Cf. Department of Defense Dependents Schools, 12 FLRA No. 12 (1983); Internal Revenue Service and Brookhaven Service Center, 6 FLRA No. 127 (1981).

The next issue is whether and to what extent the Authority must or may consider the grievability or arbitrability of a potential grievance in deciding whether a Union is entitled to data under Section 7114(b)(4).

Section 7121(a)(1) of the Statute requires that all collective bargaining agreements contain procedures for the settlement of questions of arbitrability. It also declares that these procedures "shall be the exclusive procedures for resolving grievances which fall within its coverage." The Authority has strictly construed this language. In Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, 11 FLRA No. 80, 11 FLRA 456 (1983), the Administrative Law Judge recommended dismissal of a complaint against an agency that had refused to proceed to arbitration, on the ground that the grievance submitted by the union was clearly and unmistakably excluded from the reach of the parties' agreement. The Authority held to the contrary, finding that "all questions of arbitrability must be submitted to an arbitrator." The Authority found that the Judge had erred "by attempting to resolve the arbitrability question himself." See also Truman Memorial Veterans Hospital, Columbia, Missouri, 11 FLRA No. 90, 11 FLRA 516 (1983).

The Authority reiterated this view in the context of a request for data in U.S. Customs Service, Region VII, Los Angeles, California, 10 FLRA No. 47, 10 FLRA 251 (1982). The Authority rejected the agency's contention that it had no duty to furnish the requested information because the employee's grievance involved a matter which was nongrievable under the parties' negotiated agreement. Without passing upon the merits of the agency's contention and noting its previous interpretations of section 7121 in Interpretation and Guidance, 2 FLRA 273 at 279, n.7 (1979), that questions of arbitrability must be submitted to arbitration unless the parties mutually agree otherwise, the Authority observed simply that the request satisfied the criteria in Section 7114(b)(4) and ordered the activity to furnish the data requested.

In light of the Customs case, it would be improper in this proceeding to pass upon the merits of Respondent's contentions that a grievance relating to nonselection for supervisory positions is not subject to resolution under the negotiated grievance procedure, or that any grievance filed for Foster would, under that procedure, have been both untimely and barred by Foster's EEO complaint. As the Authority emphasized in Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, supra, "all questions of arbitrability must be submitted to an arbitrator." 11 FLRA at 457.

The Authority has ruled that data falls within the standard of section 7114(b)(4) of being "necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining" in a case of this nature if it is "necessary and relevant in order to enable the union to effectively carry out its statutory representational obligation in the processing of an employee grievance." Veterans Administration Regional Office, Denver, Colorado, 10 FLRA 453, 455 (1982). The fact that matters pertaining to non-bargaining unit positions do not relate to conditions of employment of unit employees and are outside the duty to bargain under the Statute does not preclude disclosure of information relating to non-bargaining unit positions to an exclusive representative if such information is otherwise shown to be necessary and relevant to the performance of the statutory rights and duties of the exclusive representative.

The statutory representational rights and duties of an exclusive representative include the rights to represent the interests of all employees in the unit and to present and process their grievances through the negotiated grievance procedure and to binding arbitration. See sections 7114(a)(1) and 7121(b)(3)(A)-(C). While a union has no obligation to file a grievance for any employee, it must fairly represent the interests of all bargaining unit employees. It is well settled that a union has a right to information necessary and relevant to determine whether or not to file a grievance in the first instance. Department of the Navy, Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, 4 FLRA 619, 624 (1980).

The record establishes that the Union initially requested the documents "in order to discharge its obligation under Title VII, CSRA, P.L. 95-454." It later stated that the information was necessary and relevant to process a grievance and that the grievance was on behalf of a bargaining unit employee, Louis Foster. However, despite the agency's request for clarification, the Union did not specify the grievant's charges or indicate the issues involved in the potential grievance.

An agency is not obligated to provide information regarding a grievance which is so vague and ill-defined that the relevancy of the requested information cannot be ascertained. Internal Revenue Service, Buffalo District, Buffalo, New York, 7 FLRA 654 (1982). The General Counsel points out that the value of the data in evaluating unfairness or disparate treatment concerning promotion to unit positions is well established and should be equally recognized in this instance. It is true that certain information[5/] used by a panel considering candidates for promotion to a unit position would be presumptively relevant to a unit employee's grievance. U.S. Customs Service, Region VII, supra. However, where the information sought pertains to a position outside the bargaining unit, as here, the information is not presumptively relevant. In such circumstances, the Union is required to show, by reference to the circumstances of the case, more precisely the relevance of the data it desires. Cf. Curtiss-Wright Corp. v. NLRB, 347 F. 2d 61, 69, 59 LRRM 2433 (3rd Cir. 1965).

The General Counsel claims that Foster could grieve his nonselection for the supervisory position, but, even if he could not, he would be entitled to file a grievance, given the broad definition of "grievance" in the agreement, for example, by seeking the removal of any records adversely commenting on his Union activities, or, based on a review of the records, he might be able to claim that the criteria established for the selection were contrary to law or regulation. The Union did not set forth in its request to Respondent any facts which might raise such issues. It cannot merely leave the relevancy open to conjecture or surmise. Cf. San Diego Newspaper Guild v. NLRB, 548 F 2d 863, 868, 94 LRRM 2923 (9th Cir., 1977). It had to show more than an abstract relevance. When seeking information to which the presumption does not apply, a union must demonstrate that the information is of probable or potential relevance under a "discovery - type" standard. Cf. Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers v. NLRB, 113 LRRM 3163 (D.C. Cir., 1983); NLRB, v. Acme Industrial Co., 385 U.S. 432, 437, 64 LRRM 2069 (1967).

The Union had the duty to demonstrate the relevance and necessity for the information at the time the request was made so that problems could possibly be worked out after some further minimal effort at the bargaining table. It is only after such effort that the problem is properly presented to the Authority and the courts. Cf. Soule Glass and Glazing Co. v. NLRB, 652 F.2d 1055, 1098-1099, 107 LRRM 2781, 2806 (1st Cir. 1981) and cases cited therein; Emeryville Research Center, Shell Development Co. v. NLRB, 441 F.2d 880, 77 LRRM 2043 (9th Cir., 1971); 438th Air Base Group, McGuire Air Force Base, 2-CA-609, 4 ALJDR (1982).

[5/] See National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1745, 13 FLRA No. 91 (1983), concerning the applicability of the Privacy Act to records used by promotion panels.

In view of the Union's failure to initially demonstrate to Respondent that the information requested in this instance was necessary and relevant in order to enable it to discharge its responsibilities under the Statute, a preponderance of the evidence does not support a violation by Respondent of sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute by refusing to furnish the information pursuant to section 7114(b)(4), as alleged. Internal Revenue Service, Buffalo District, Buffalo, New York, supra; Director of Administration, Headquarters, U.S. Air Force, 6 FLRA 110, 121-122 (1981).

Based on the foregoing findings and conclusions, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following Order.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 7-CA-30165 be, and it hereby is, DISMISSED.

DIGEST NOTES

The union did not waive its right to bargain over the impact and implementation of a change by management in employees' performance standards. The Authority, contrary to the Judge, concluded that the parties' agreement did not contain any language which specifically relieved the agency of its duty to bargain under § 7106(b)(2) and (3) nor did the record reveal any instances where the agency had unilaterally revised unit employees' performance standards without notifying the union. Accordingly, the agency violated § 7106(a)(1) and (5) when it unilaterally revised employees' performance standards without providing the union with adequate prior notice and an opportunity to bargain over procedures and appropriate arrangements for adversely affected employees.

A status quo ante remedy was not warranted where the agency failed to provide the union with the opportunity to negotiate the impact and implementation of a change by management in employees' performance standards, in violation of § 7106(a)(2) and (3) and § 7116(a)(1) and (5). In balancing the nature and circumstances of the violation against the degree of disruption in government operations that would be caused by a status quo ante remedy, the Authority noted that while no advance notice of the revised performance standards was given to the Union, the agency's actions were based upon the good faith but erroneous belief that it was acting in accordance with procedures contained in the parties negotiated agreement. Moreover, no employee had been appraised under the revised performance standards, and it was not asserted that any employee had suffered a loss as a result of the new standards.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is nonnegotiable which requires that once the agency decides to fill a vacant position with qualified repromotion eligible employees, the position must be filled on the basis of seniority within the competitive level. The proposal does not excessively interfere with management's right to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source under § 7106(a)(2)(C). Rather, the proposal is an appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3) that otherwise would be negotiable but for the fact that it conflicts with a Government-wide regulation within the meaning of § 7117(a)(1). Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the FPM, a Government-wide regulation, permits agencies to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source. While subchapter 1-5(c)(6) of FPM chapter 335 authorizes an agency to except certain repromotions from its competitive selection procedures, such FPM provision does not purport to authorize an agency to relinquish its right under Requirement 4 to make selections from appropriate sources.

DIGEST NOTES

Official Time beyond that authorized under § 7131(a) may be negotiated under § 7131(d). Also travel and per diem expenses for employees on official time may be negotiated. However, overtime compensation for employees on official time is not negotiable. Representational activities performed by employees outside the normal workday do not constitute the performance of hours of work within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 5542 which governs overtime compensation for General Schedule employees, nor are such activities "work" under 5 U.S.C. § 5544 which governs overtime compensation for prevailing rate employees. Likewise, compensatory time off for employees on official time is not negotiable. Representational activity does not make an employee eligible for compensatory time off. In order to be eligible for compensatory time off, a General Schedule employee must be eligible for overtime pay. Prevailing rate employees have no eligibility for compensatory time off whatsoever, but must be paid for overtime work. [FPM Supplement 532-1, Subchapter 8, S8-4(b)(10)] Consequently, a proposal providing for all of the above is nonnegotiable.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is negotiable under § 7131(d) which requires that one union representative be granted 100% official time in addition to the one full-time union representative that already receives 100% official time. The agency was unable to show that this proposal would interfere with the accomplishment of the agency's work or otherwise interfere with management's right under § 7106(b)(1) to determine the numbers, types, and grades of employees or positions. In a previous case the Authority had held that 100% official time for 12 union representatives was nonnegotiable because the agency's mission in that case required employees to work in crews where various tasks and skills were highly specialized and were interrelated and independent so that the progress of the work depended on each function in the work process being fulfilled. By contrast, in this case the "crew" concept is not applicable. Rather the employees are teachers for which there is a great deal of interchangeability because the teachers are qualified in multiple fields.

DIGEST NOTES

A grievability dispute does not in and of itself relieve an agency from providing the union with information to which it is otherwise entitled under § 7114(b)(4). The resolution of a grievability question cognizable under law is for an arbitrator under the parties' negotiated agreement. In connection with the processing of a grievance, the union requested information concerning the agency's promotion process. The information was sought in order to determine whether the agency had unlawfully retaliated against an employee for filing an earlier grievance, by lowering his performance evaluation. The agency denied the request based on the its contention that the position in question was not a bargaining unit position and, therefore, the issue was not grievable. The Authority held that in order to process the grievance, the union would have had to be able, as it explained to the agency, to make a comparative assessment of the various evaluations involved in the merit promotion. Thus the requested data was clearly necessary under § 7114(b)(4) and the agency's failure to provide the information violated § 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8). Finally, the grievability question was an arbitration matter.

A proposal by the exclusive representative of an activity is nonnegotiable that would require in effect the entire agency to establish a network of certified safety and health committees under 29 C.F.R. § 1960.36(b) and 29 C.F.R § 1960.37(a) in order to avoid unannounced OSHA inspections. Under 29 U.S.C. § 668(a), agency heads have the responsibility for establishing and maintaining "an effective and comprehensive occupational safety and health program" and agency heads are required to engage in "consultation" with representatives of their employees. Executive Order 12196 implements that statute and specifically defines the role of unions. Executive Order 12196, § 1-301 authorizes exclusive representatives to appoint members to certified committees only at levels where they hold exclusive recognition.

should the decision be made by the agency head to establish certified committees. However, unions are not authorized to negotiate over the establishment of certified safety and health committees.

DIGEST NOTES

Proposals are negotiable that provide most employees with individual offices and is a continuation of the agency's existing practice. The Authority has previously held that for a proposal concerning office space design to violate an agency's right to determine the technology of performing work, an agency must show

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

(1) that its choice of office space design has a technological relationship to the accomplishment and furtherance of its work and (2) that the proposal would interfere with these purposes. The agency did not make such a demonstration. (proposals 1 and 2)

The Authority will not consider factual disputes concerning changes in working conditions in its negotiability appeals proceedings under § 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E). Such factual disputes concerning the duty to bargain may be raised in other appropriate proceedings. (proposals 1, 2, and 5)

Where the union failed to include the agency's written allegation of nonnegotiability for certain proposals, contrary to the requirements of § 2424.4(a)(3) of the Authority's rules and regulations, the Authority did not consider those proposals in negotiability proceedings.

A proposal is nonnegotiable that requires another location for a library/conference room other than the location chosen by management in a upcoming move. The library's location was chosen so that administrative personnel could monitor its use and the removal of library materials. Thus the location of the library constitutes part of the agency's plan to safeguard its property with which the union's proposal would interfere. Consequently, the proposal would excessively interfere with the agency's right under § 7106(a)(1) to determine its internal security practices. (proposal 5)

Where the agency did not provide sufficient support in the record to determine whether a proposal concerning the relocation of a library violates the agency's right to determine its technology, methods and means of performing work under § 7106(b)(1), the proposal was not be found nonnegotiable on this basis. (proposal 5)

Proposals providing for free employee parking are negotiable. The regulation governing federal employee parking is FPMR Temporary Regulation D-69, 41 C.F.R. § 101, a Government-wide regulation under § 7117(a)(1). Section 7 of the regulation provides that, while GSA is vested with the authority to allocate parking spaces, GSA may delegate its authority to occupant agencies "by mutual agreement". Section 8 of the regulation provides that parking spaces not required of official needs may be used for employee parking. Therefore the agency has discretion under the regulation to either request that GSA delegate to the agency the authority to allocate parking spaces or, if GSA does not agree to the delegation, request GSA to allocate a designated number of spaces for employee parking. (proposals 6 and 11)

A proposal that would establish a pilot flexitime program is negotiable. Proposals concerning flexitime, generally, are within the duty to bargain. The agency's argument that the proposal concerns matters outside its control was unclear and the agency provided no basis in the record for the Authority to respond to its contention. (proposal 14)

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would require the agency to continue its present shift starting at 7:45 a.m. and solicit volunteers for the agency's proposed new shift starting at 6:45 a.m. The agency failed to demonstrate that the proposal would interfere, as alleged, with management's right under § 7106(a)(2)(B) to determine the personnel by which its operations are carried out as. However, the proposal would interfere with management's right under § 7106(b)(1) to determine the numbers, types and grades of employees assigned to a work project or tour of duty. Under the proposal, the 7:45 a.m. shift proposed by the union would end at 4:15 p.m. and the afternoon shift established by the agency would commence at 3:45 p.m. As a result, this proposal has the effect of requiring management to have on duty during the overlap period more employees than, in its judgment, are deemed necessary. (proposal 1)

A proposal is negotiable which provides that management will delay for four weeks the requirement that certain employees work a new tour of duty and obligates the agency to post carpool or transportation notices in a preexisting medium. The proposal does not prevent the agency from acting at all to require employees to work the new tour of duty. The proposal pertains to working conditions of unit employees and is a negotiable procedure under § 7106(b)(2) and an appropriate arrangement for adversely affected employees under § 7106(b)(3). (proposal 2)

Where the language of a proposal is included and discussed in the agency's statement of position, an agency argument is spurious that the proposal is not properly before the Authority because the text of the proposal was not included in the petition for review.

Where the union timely cured a defect in its petition for review by providing a statement of the meaning attributed to its proposals, the petition is properly before the Authority.

Where the agency reiterated its position on a proposal when responding to the union's request for a determination on another proposal, the union's petition was timely filed when calculated from the date of the agency's reiteration.

A contention that a dispute is more appropriately resolved in unfair labor practice proceedings because of unresolved factual questions, does not provide a basis for dismissing a negotiability appeal.

DIGEST NOTES

The grievance in this case concerned the denial of the recommendation of the grievant's supervisor that the grievant be promoted. The grievant's promotion had been denied because it had been determined statistically that he was not averaging at least 1.9 decisions per day, the required level of the next higher grade for a fully satisfactory rating. The arbitrator concluded that the performance standards used to measure the grievant's numerical case production failed to comply with the requirements of the parties' collective bargaining agreement that performance standards must accurately evaluate performance and procedures must be applied which reasonably ensure the accurate evaluation of performance. The arbitrator also concluded that management failed to comply with the agreement obligation that factors affecting performance which are beyond the control of the employee be considered. Additionally, the arbitrator ruled that but for these erroneous applications of the parties' agreement, the recommended promotion of the grievant would originally have been approved. As his award, the arbitrator ordered the grievant promoted retroactively with backpay.

In one of its exceptions the agency contended that the award was contrary to § 7106 because it negated legitimately established performance standards. Such a determination, the agency argued, cannot constitute the required finding under the Back Pay Act (5 U.S.C. § 5596) that the grievant was affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action which directly resulted in a loss of pay and that accordingly the award of a retroactive promotion and backpay was deficient.

The Authority has previously held that an arbitrator may not determine that a grievance directly challenging an agency's identification of job elements or establishment of performance standards is grievable or arbitrable. Also, an arbitrator may not render an award substituting his judgment concerning job elements and performance standards for that of management. However an arbitrator may evaluate, under a "fair and equitable" requirement in the parties' agreement, the application of performance elements and standards that management establishes.

In this case, to the extent of the arbitrator's determination that the performance standards were "unfair," because they failed to account for the grievant's situation, the the Authority found the determination to be deficient. Such a determination constitutes an improper review by the arbitrator of the content of standards and a substitution by the arbitrator of his judgment for that of management as to the proper content of those standards. The determination therefore cannot constitute the finding required in support of the award of retroactive promotion and backpay that the grievant was affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action.

Moreover, by in effect determining that the grievant's performance would have been rated at least as "fully satisfactory," the arbitrator improperly conducted an independent evaluation of the grievant's performance.

In modifying the award, the Authority held that the award was contrary to management's right under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) and contrary to the Back Pay Act.

and Case No. 5-CA-30215

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF GOVERNMENT

Charging Party

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed. The General Counsel and the Charging Party filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision, and the Respondent filed an opposition to both exceptions.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations only to the extent consistent herewith.

The Judge, relying on the language of Article 15, Section 15.01 of the parties' Master Labor Agreement and on the past practice of the parties, concluded that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute when it unilaterally revised the job performance appraisal system elements of employees assigned to the Central Refurbishment Area, NAFS, without providing the Charging Party (the Union) notice and an opportunity to bargain concerning the impact and implementation of the change, as the Union had waived its right to bargain in this regard. The Authority disagrees.

It is well established that the Respondent's decision to revise the performance standards was a reserved management right under section 7106(a) of the Statute. See, e.g., National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 768 (1980), affirmed sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982), and Social Security Administration, 8 FLRA 517 (1982), affirmed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1923 v. FLRA, 718 F.2d 1088 (4th Cir. 1983). However, as previously held by the Authority, where an agency exercises a reserved management right under section 7106 of the Statute to change a condition of employment of unit employees, there is nonetheless a duty to bargain consistent with section 7106(b)(2) and (3) of the Statute with respect to the procedures that management will follow in exercising such rights and with respect to appropriate arrangements for employees who may be adversely affected thereby. See, e.g., Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Washington, D.C., 20 FLRA No. 54 (1985), and cases cited therein.

Therefore, the Respondent was obligated under the Statute to provide adequate prior notice to the exclusive representative and, upon request, bargain pursuant to section 7106(b)(2) and (3) of the Statute, absent a waiver of that right. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 3 FLRA 784 (1980) (Union proposal 5); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1940 and Department of Agriculture, Plum Island Disease Center, 16 FLRA 816 (1984). A waiver will be found only if it can be shown that the exclusive representative clearly and unmistakably waived its right to negotiate. See U.S. Department of Labor, Washington, D.C. and Employment Standards Administration, Region 8, Denver, Colorado, 19 FLRA No. 65 (1985).

Article 15, Section 15.01 of the parties' agreement recognizes management's right to revise performance standards, and the right of employees to participate in discussions with supervisors as to what those standards shall be.*/ However, the Authority, contrary to the Judge, finds that neither Article 15, Section 15.01 nor the past practice of the parties constitutes a clear and unmistakable waiver of the Union's right to receive notice and an opportunity to request bargaining concerning procedures and appropriate arrangements for adversely affected unit employees. Article 15, Section 15.01 of the Master Labor Agreement contains no language which specifically relieves the Respondent of this statutory obligation to the Union when it revises unit employees' performance standards. Moreover, contrary to the Judge's unsupported statement, the record does not reveal other instances where the Respondent has unilaterally revised unit employees' performance standards without notifying the Union. Absent a clear and unmistakable waiver, a party will not be deemed to have given up a statutory right, such as an exclusive representative's right to receive adequate notice of proposed changes affecting unit employees' conditions of employment, and an opportunity to request bargaining pursuant to the provisions of the Statute. U.S. Department of Labor, Occupational Safety and Health Administration, Chicago, Illinois, 19 FLRA No. 60 (1985); Department of Defense, Department of the Army, Headquarters, XVIII Airborne Corps, and Fort Bragg, 15 FLRA 790 (1984); Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, 5 FLRA 9 (1981). Accordingly, the Authority concludes that the Respondent's unilateral revision of the performance standards without providing the Union with adequate prior notice and an opportunity to bargain concerning procedures and appropriate arrangements for adversely affected unit employees constitutes a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. See, e.g., Department of the Air Force, Air Force Systems Command, Electronic Systems Division, 14 FLRA 390 (1984); Social Security Administration, 16 FLRA 1135 (1984).

*/ Of course, both of these rights exist by operation of law. See, e.g., National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, supra, concerning management's right to revise performance standards pursuant to its section 7106(a) rights to direct and assign work to employees. See also Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland, 9 FLRA 909 (1982), with respect to the right of employees to participate in discussions concerning the establishment of their performance standards pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 4302(a)(2), which provides:

> § 4302. Establishment of performance appraisal systems
> (a) Each agency shall develop one or more performance appraisal systems which--
> . . . .
> (2) encourage employee participation in establishing performance standards[.]

In briefs to the Judge, the General Counsel and the Union requested a status quo ante order which would require the Respondent to rescind the new performance standards. The General Counsel also requested an order which would make whole any employee adversely affected by them. However, the Authority concludes that a status quo ante remedy is not warranted in the circumstances of this case. Thus, balancing the nature and circumstances of the violation against the degree of disruption in government operations that would be caused by such a remedy and taking into consideration the factors set forth in Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604 (1982), the Authority concludes that a prospective bargaining order will fully remedy the violation in the circumstances of this case and will effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute. The Authority notes that, while no advance notice of the revised performance standards was given to the Union, the Respondent's notice to unit employees concerning the change in question and its refusal to bargain with the Union concerning procedures and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected were based upon the good faith but erroneous belief that it was acting in accordance with procedures contained in the negotiated Master Labor Agreement covering the affected employees. Accordingly, contrary to the General Counsel's contention, the Respondent's refusal to bargain herein cannot be found to have been willful. Moveover, as recognized by the Union in its post-hearing brief to the Judge, no employees had yet been appraised under the revised performance standards, and there is no assertion in the exceptions filed with the Authority by either the General Counsel or the Union that there has yet been any application of such performance standards to unit employees or any loss to them as a result. Under these circumstances, the request for a status quo ante remedy must be denied. See, e.g., Social Security Administration, supra.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, and Newark Air Force Station, Newark, Ohio shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Unilaterally implementing new or revised performance standards for its Central Refurbishment Area, NAFS employees, without giving prior notice to the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2221, AFL-CIO, the designated agent of the employees' exclusive representative, and affording it the opportunity to bargain concerning procedures to be observed in implementing them and concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected thereby.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request, bargain with the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2221, AFL-CIO, the designated agent of the employees' exclusive representative of its Central Refurbishment Area, NAFS employees, concerning procedures to be observed in implementing new or revised performance standards applicable to those employees, and concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected thereby.

(b) Post at its facility at Newark Air Force Station, Newark, Ohio, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the Commander of the Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, or a designee, and shall be posted for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region V, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This case arose as an unfair labor practice proceeding under the provisions of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 92 Stat. 1191, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq. (hereinafter called "The Statute"), and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder.

The complaint alleges that on or about November 15, 1982, the Respondent, through the acts of agents employed by the Newark Air Force Station, Newark, Ohio (NAFS), unilaterally changed the terms and conditions of employment of bargaining unit members assigned to the Central Refurbishment Area, NAFS, without first giving notice to American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2221, AFL-CIO (Charging Party or Union); and without providing the Union with an opportunity to bargain concerning the impact and implementation of the change. It was further alleged that the conduct described pertained to the issuance of revised job performance appraisal system elements to bargaining unit employees, and that the issuance was violative of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

Counsel representing the Respondent contends that the Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio (AFLC) and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council No. 214 (Council 214), bargained in good faith at the level of exclusive recognition concerning procedures to be followed when revising performance standards; that the issuance of revised performance standards as alleged herein was effectuated in accordance with procedures established by the AFLC and Council 214 in a collective bargaining agreement; that the Respondent was required to do no more than comply with procedures established by AFLC and Council 214; that the dispute involves issues of contract interpretation which should have been resolved through the grievance and arbitration procedure set out in the parties' collective bargaining agreement; and lastly that constructive notice of the change was received by a Union steward assigned to the Central Refurbishment Area, but that the Union failed to request bargaining.[1]

[1] This argument, reflected in Respondent's post-hearing brief, has no merit in view of a stipulation to the effect that Respondent provided "no advance notice" of the change to the Union, to Council 214, or to any other organizational level of the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (Jt. Exh. No. 3).

Counsel representing the General Counsel moved to strike portions of Respondent's brief which relate to the argument that the Union received constructive notice of the change, noting that the stipulation precluded the argument. An opposition to the motion to strike was filed by counsel representing the Respondent.

The motion to strike must be denied. Although Respondent's argument has no merit in the light of the stipulation entered into the record, Respondent's counsel arguably has the right to contend that the stipulation did not operate to deny counsel the right to rely upon constructive notice of the change received through a Union steward.

The parties were represented by counsel during the hearing and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce relevant evidence, and examine and cross-examine witnesses. Based upon the entire record herein, including a stipulation of facts, exhibits, and other relevant evidence adduced at the hearing,[2] and briefs filed by the parties, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

Facts Stipulated

The following stipulations of fact entered into the record are accepted as true:[3]

1. The Respondent submits to the jurisdiction of the Authority in this proceeding, and does not otherwise interpose or raise the question of jurisdiction as an issue. (See also Tr. at 10).

2. At all times material there have been approximately 30 employees in the Central Refurbishment Area, LN Instrument Section, Directorate of Maintenance, Aerospace Guidance and Metrology Center (AGMC), NAFS, and approximately 28 of these employees hold the position of WG-3359-07 Instrument Worker.[4]

3. Central Refurbishment Area employees described are part of a consolidated bargaining unit of employees employed by AFLC, and represented by Council 214. These employees are represented at the local level by the Charging Party.

4. At all times material herein David Tomer was a supervisor and agent of Respondent and was the supervisor of Central Refurbishment Area employees.

[2] Counsel representing the Respondent moved to correct certain errors in the hearing transcript. Under authority set out in 5 C.F.R. § 2423.19(r), the corrections proposed are approved.

[3] Jt. Exh. No. 3.

[4] These employees are hereinafter referred to as "Central Refurbishment Area employees," or "employees affected."

5. The performance of Central Refurbishment Area employees is appraised under the civilian employee Job Performance Appraisal System of the United States Air Force (JPAS).[5]

6. On or about November 15, 1982, David Tomer furnished to Central Refurbishment Area employees, a copy of the performance standards or "work plan" for his or her position. The work plan furnished was effective for the appraisal period beginning on October 1, 1982.

7. Jt. Exh. No. 1 is a copy of performance standards issued on or about November 15, 1982, to Jane A. Hoskinson.

8. Jt. Exh. No. 2 is a copy of performance standards that had previously been in effect from July 1, 1982 until October 1, 1982 for Jane A. Hoskinson.

9. Performance standards set forth in Jt. Exh. No. 1 are the same in all material respects as the performance standards that were effective for all affected employees for the appraisal period beginning October 1, 1982.

10. The performance standards set forth in Jt. Exh. No. 2 are the same in all material respects as performance standards in effect prior to October 1, 1982 for all affected employees.

11. All employees falling within the coverage of JPAS are evaluated once a year according to the performance standards applicable to their positions. Among other things these annual evaluations are used to determine whether employees will or will not receive performance awards and within grade increases; and it is on the basis of these evaluations that employees are, or are not demoted, or removed from their positions for performance reasons.

12. The performance standards set forth in Jt. Exh. No. 1 are different in some respects from the performance standards set forth in Jt. Exh. No. 2.

[5] Air Force Regulation 40-452, incorporates what is otherwise referred to in the record as "JPAS" (Tr. 37-38). AFR 40-452 deals with Department of the Air Force policy and procedures for appraisal and rating of Air Force employees. It implemented 5 U.S.C. § 4302 of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, which provided for the establishment of performance appraisal systems, including critical elements and performance standards, by each agency, and required that all performance appraisal systems be put into effect by October 1, 1981.

13. The Charging Party was given no advance notice by management that there was to be a change in the performance standards applicable to affected employees for the performance period beginning October 1, 1982, and no such notice was provided by management to Council 214, or to any other organizational level of the Union.

In addition to the previously outlined stipulations, counsel of record also stipulated to the following facts:

1. That the change alleged in the complaint did in fact involve a change in the terms and conditions of employment (Tr. 17-18, 143-144, Respondent's Brief at 9-10).

2. The change which occurred involved a change in critical elements and a change in performance standards (Tr. 43).

Pertinent Contractual Provisions and Bargaining History Outlined

Following establishment of the consolidated unit, the National Office of the AFGE, on behalf of Council 214; together with the AFLC, entered into a three-year Master Labor Agreement. The agreement became effective on May 3, 1979, and the three-year period commenced as of April 3, 1979.[6] (Jt. Exh. No. 4.)

Article 15 (Employee Performance Evaluation) provided certain procedural rules relating to performance standards. Section 15.01 touched upon management changes in this area of concern. It provided:

> SECTION 15.01: PERFORMANCE STANDARDS
> Supervisors will establish valid performance requirements for positions of employees which they supervise. Except as may be provided by applicable law, such performance requirements may be oral or written, and they will be discussed with each new employee when he is newly assigned to a position. New or revised performance requirements established as a result of changes in duties and responsibilities, technological changes, performance criteria, etc., will be discussed with the employee when such are imposed; if performance requirements are in writing, such changes will also be in writing.

---

[6] This agreement is hereinafter referred to as the "May 1979 Master Labor Agreement."

Article 15, Section 15.03 of the May 1979 Master Labor Agreement gave to the Charging Party the right to negotiate "supplemental implementation procedures" in the following terms:

> SECTION 15.03: SUPPLEMENTAL IMPLEMENTATION PROCEDURES
> Procedures for the implementation of this Article are expressly authorized for negotiations in activity Local Supplements to this Agreement.

Article 34 of the 1979 Master Labor Agreement provided rules pertaining to local supplements. In accordance with these, and authority set out in Section 15.03, the Charging Party and AGMC, NAFS, entered into a Supplemental Labor Agreement on January 11, 1980 (Jt. Exh. No. 5). It was approved by AFLC and Council 214 on February 8, 1980. Under the provisions of Article 34, Section 34.09 of the 1979 Master Labor Agreement, this local supplement became effective on February 8, 1980. Article 15, Section 15.01(S) of the Supplemental Labor Agreement reflected the following limited procedures relating to implementing changes in performance standards at AGMC, NAFS:

> SECTION 15.01(S):
> A. Performance standards are guides to measure the quality, quantity, timeliness and level of achievement expected by management of an individual's performance. These standards are job-related and based upon the employee's particular duties and responsibilities. Such standards define the level of performance necessary for a satisfactory performance rating.
> B. The parties agree that these requirements be a joint effort by the supervisor and the employee.
> C. Management agrees to encourage supervisors to establish these performance standards in writing.

Approximately 18 months after the negotiation of the May 1979 Master Labor Agreement, Council 214 and the AFLC moved to reopen contract negotiations under the provisions of Article 35, Section 35.03 of the Agreement (Tr. 26--27, 151). Negotiations ensued, and were continuing in February of 1981 (Tr. 149). Council 214 representatives made specific proposals concerning Article 15, and AFLC representatives disagreed with the Council position on the subject (Tr. 151).

During this same period of time the negotiating parties were, in the context of a different forum, leading up to impact and implementation bargaining concerning JPAS as presented in AFR 40-452. By memorandum dated November 4, 1980, AFLC had forwarded copies of AFR 40-452 to Council 214 for the purpose of soliciting proposals leading to impact and implementation bargaining (R. Exh. No. 1). In a letter dated November 6, 1980, Council 214 requested, for personal and other reasons, that bargaining on AFR 40-452 be deferred (R. Exh. No. 2). However, detailed proposals concerning AFR 40-452 were subsequently supplied to AFLC by Council 214 (R. Exh. No. 3). These proposals, offered by Council 214 with respect to AFR 40-452, were not the same as those offered during reopened Master Labor Agreement negotiations (Tr. 157-158). Proposals submitted in the latter forum were described as possessing elements which the Council wished to utilize in AFR 40-452 negotiations (Tr. 158).

The issue posed by the parties was whether to resolve key questions relating to employee performance evaluations in the context of the Master Labor Agreement negotiations, or during separate, and perhaps much later, impact and implementation negotiations relating to AFR 40-452.

The parties resolved the issue by deciding to carry over Article 15 of the May 1979 Master Labor Agreement without change, and by agreeing to be governed by the provisions of Article 15 until the issue could be thoroughly addressed during negotiations pertaining to AFR 40-452 (Tr. 30, 153, 166-167). It was then anticipated that the issues posed would be handled as mid-term bargaining after execution of a new Master Labor Agreement. A new Master Labor Agreement, incorporating the earlier version of Article 15 in its entirety was executed on June 1, 1982 (Jt. Exh. No. 6). It became effective on June 28, 1982, the date on which it was approved.[7]

Negotiators representing AFLC and Council 214 were not able to reach agreement in collateral negotiations pertaining to AFR 40-452. Bargaining had commenced on March 4, 1981,[8] after the parties decided to handle employee performance evaluation negotiations separately from negotiations pertaining to the Master Labor Agreement (Tr. 83-84, R. Exh. No. 4). The representative of the Charging Party acknowledged that there was substantial bargaining on the subject (Tr. 165-166). R. Exh. No. 3 reflects that these negotiations involved bargaining over procedures that Council 214 wished to add to the summary procedures reflected in the May 1979 and June 1982 Master Labor Agreements (Tr. 43-45).

[7] This agreement is hereinafter referred to as the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement. The parties have considered it binding despite inclusion of a statement in Section 35.01 of Article 35, to the effect that it would remain in effect only for the three year period ending on April 3, 1982 (Tr. 27-29).

[8] These negotiations commenced and reached impasse prior to execution of the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement.

A series of eight negotiating sessions, the first of which had commenced on March 4, 1981, culminated in the Union filing a March 27, 1981 request for Federal Service Impasses Panel assistance (R. Exh. No. 4).[9] On June 5, 1981, the Panel declined to assert jurisdiction on the ground that duty to bargain issues were inextricably related to the Council's proposal (R. Exh. No. 5). The Panel ruled that the determination was without prejudice to either party's right to refile once duty to bargain issues had been resolved in an appropriate forum.

Because 5 U.S.C. § 4302, required that all performance appraisal systems be put into effect by October 1, 1981, AFLC determined that it would be necessary to implement AFLC's last offer to Council 214 (Tr. 52, 56, R. Exh. No. 6). Accordingly, on or about July 1, 1981, AFLC notified its field activities that AFLC's last offer relating to AFR 40-452 would be implemented to insure compliance with the October 1, 1981 deadline (Tr. 52-53, 56-67). AFR 40-452 continued in effect thereafter, and was in effect as of the date of the hearing.

On October 8, 1981, the AFGE National Office, on behalf of Council 214, filed a negotiability appeal with the Authority. On October 13, 1981, an unfair labor practice charge was filed by Council 214 in Case No. 5-CA-20018, alleging, that the Department of the Air Force, AFLC, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, refused to bargain with Council 214, by declaring some of the Council's proposals to be nonnegotiable, and by thereafter implementing AFR 40-452 without first bargaining on impact and implementation. On November 2, 1981, the AFGE National Office requested that the Authority hold the negotiability appeal in abeyance, and the unfair labor practice charge thereafter proceeded to complaint.

Administrative Law Judge Salvatore J. Arrigo heard the case, and on October 20, 1982, issued a recommended decision finding certain proposals to be negotiable. A bargaining order was also recommended. However, under the facts presented a status quo ante remedy was not considered appropriate. The case is pending before the Authority on exceptions filed by the parties. There was no showing during the hearing held in this case, nor does it otherwise appear, that the decision issued by Judge Arrigo in Case No. 5-CA-20018, has any bearing upon questions posed in this litigation. It was noted that none of the proposals found to be negotiable by Judge Arrigo related to the obligation of the Respondent herein to bargain with the Charging Party concerning changes made in performance standards or critical elements relating to Central Refurbishment Area employees.[10] [9] It is noted that this request was filed over a year before the parties executed the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement (Jt. Exh. No. 6).

The June 1982 Master Labor Agreement brought about an attempt on the part of the Charging Party to renegotiate Article 15 of the earlier February 8, 1980 Supplemental Labor Agreement executed by NAFS and the Charging Party. By memorandum dated August 16, 1982, the President of the Charging Party requested mid-term bargaining concerning the Supplemental Labor Agreement (R. Exh. No. 10), and submitted to NAFS representatives a proposed replacement article for Article 15, Section 15.01(S) (R. Exh. No. 11). The proposal reflects numerous procedural elements of concern to the Charging Party in the area of employee evaluation. However, NAFS took the position that Article 15 of the Supplemental Labor Agreement was not in conformity with the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement (Tr. 103-104, R. Exh. No. 12). Being then in dispute, it became inoperative pending disposition of the issue in an arbitration proceeding (Tr. 104).[11] On September 29, 1982 the President of the Charging Party withdrew the earlier August 16, 1982 request for mid-term bargaining on the Supplemental Labor Agreement, and all Charging Party proposals submitted in connection therewith (R. Exh. No. 13). As of the date of the hearing, issues involving the appropriateness of the inclusion of Article 15 in the Supplemental Labor Agreement had not been resolved. However, the matter was scheduled to be heard by an arbitrator in November of this year (Tr. 104).

[10] Also, the record did not reflect that the specific change alleged in the case herein under consideration contravened AFR 40-452 as implemented, or the bargaining order recommended to the Authority by Judge Arrigo. The recommended cease and desist order in Case No. 5-CA-20018 addressed the issue of instituting changes in the AFLC performance appraisal program without affording the Council 214 the right to bargain. In this case both the May 1979 and June 1982 Master Labor Agreements reflect that responsibility for the establishment of performance standards was within the purview of authority exercised by Respondent's supervisory personnel. It follows therefore, that the changes alleged in the complaint should not be construed as falling within the meaning of the recommended cease and desist order in Case No. 5-CA-20018. Also, it is noted that the latter case did not involve the possible applicability of Master Labor Agreement terminology, or issues of possible waiver of bargaining rights.

[11] Section 34.07 of the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement provided for inclusion of disputed Supplemental Labor Agreement articles only after an arbitration decision determining the appropriateness of such inclusion (Jt. Exh. No. 6 at page 138). NAFS took the position that reopening negotiations relating to Article 15 of the Supplemental Labor Agreement could ensue only after a determination in favor of inclusion (Tr. 100-102).

The record clearly reflects that the effectuation of changes in individual performance standards in the past has not involved prior notice to the Charging Party. Instead, the procedures set out in Article 15, Section 15.01 of the May 1979 and June 1982 Master Labor Agreements have governed (Tr. 32-33). This section provides for supervisory establishment of performance standards after discussions with employees; for the formulation of "valid performance requirements," for guidance concerning the form in which an employee receives performance requirements (oral or written), and for discussion of such changes with employees prior to putting them into effect.

Although counsel representing the General Counsel made an attempt to show that during AFLC - Council 214 negotiations leading to the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement the parties entered into an oral side agreement imposing a greater duty on the AFLC with respect to notification of the Charging Party of changes in individual performance standards, the record does not support this contention. Instead, the record indicates a clear desire on the part of AFLC and Council 214 to rely entirely upon the sparse procedural language in Article 15, Section 15.01 of the Master Labor Agreement as the guide for effecting changes in performance standards.

Discussion and Conclusions

The record in this case makes it clear that the parties were governed by the provisions of Article 15 of the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement when the changes alleged in the complaint occurred. Section 15.01 of this Article, together with evidence of longstanding practice of the parties, reflects that the Respondent had a contractual right to change individual performance requirements without first incurring a bargaining obligation. Article 15 did impose certain requirements; however, the obligation to bargain was not included.[12] Instead,

[12] It is noted that AFLC - Council 214 bargaining in connection with the renegotiation of the Master Labor Agreement, and in connection with AFR 40-452, theoretically could have produced the bargaining obligation that the Charging Party so eagerly sought in this case. It is also conceivable that such rights might have been generated by bargaining at the local level in connection with the Supplemental Labor Agreement. However, the fact remains that bargaining to date has not produced such a result.

Section 15.01 specifically provided for the establishment of performance requirements by Respondent's supervisory personnel. It would be difficult to see how the Charging Party could be accorded the right to participate in the formulation of performance standards in this case without doing irreparable damage to the procedures reflected in Article 15, Section 15.01 of the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement. Thus, it is concluded that the contractual language referred to, and the practice of the parties, demonstrate that the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement reflects a clear and unmistakable waiver of the statutory right to bargain concerning changes in performance standards. In the light of these circumstances the obligation to bargain on impact and implementation does not arise. Department of the Treasury, United States Customs Service, Region I, Boston, Massachusetts, and St. Albans, Vermont District Office, 10 FLRA No. 100, 10 FLRA 566 (December 3, 1982); Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 8 FLRA No. 124, 8 FLRA 715 (May 20, 1982); Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, 5 FLRA No. 2, 5 FLRA 9 (January 15, 1981).

Since the question of the legal status to be attributed to Article 15 of the Supplemental Labor Agreement, was, as of the date of the hearing, proceeding to arbitration, it is not possible to determine whether or not the provisions contained in this Article are applicable in this case. However, if Article 15 is deemed to be currently in effect, it too reflects clear elements of a waiver in that Article 15, Section 15.01(S)(B) of the Supplemental Labor Agreement indicates that the Charging Party and NAFS agreed that performance standards would be established "by the supervisor and the employee," as a "joint effort." If Article 15 of the Supplemental Labor Agreement is found to be null and void because in conflict with the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement, then the provisions of Article 15, Section 15.01 of the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement, without more, suffice as a basis for a finding that a waiver exists.

The record does show that the provisions of AFR 40-452, as implemented by AFLC, were in effect on the date of the change alleged in the complaint. However, AFR 40-452, as implemented did not operate to modify or otherwise change the provisions of Article 15, Section 15.01 of the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement by imposing a bargaining obligation of the type alleged in the complaint; nor did AFR 40-452, otherwise remove the clear and unmistakable waiver reflected in the Master Labor Agreement. Moreover, AFLC proposals considered by Judge Arrigo in Case No. 5-CA-20018, and found to be negotiable in that case, may not be construed as conferring on the Charging Party, or Council

214, bargaining rights specifically withheld in the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement. It is noted that counsel representing the General Counsel and counsel representing the Charging Party make no such argument.[13]

Lastly, it is also observed that even in the absence of a finding of waiver, the essence of this unfair labor practice complaint would involve differing and arguable interpretations of Article 15, Section 15.01 of the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement, as distinguished from a clear and patent breach of the agreement. That is, the issues posed would merely involve matters of contract interpretation. In such cases the aggrieved party's remedy lies within the grievance and arbitration procedures in the negotiated agreement rather than through unfair labor practice procedures. Harry S. Truman Memorial Veterans Hospital, Columbia, Missouri, 11 FLRA No. 90, 11 FLRA 516 (March 9, 1983); Iowa National Guard and National Guard Bureau, 8 FLRA No. 101, 8 FLRA 500 (May 7, 1982); Division of Military and Naval Affairs, State of New York, Albany, New York, 8 FLRA No. 71, 8 FLRA 307 (March 26, 1982); Social Security Administration, District Offices in Denver, Pueblo and Greely, Colorado, et al., 3 FLRA No. 10, 3 FLRA 61 (April 14, 1980); U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, 3 FLRA No. 123, 3 FLRA 823, (July 31, 1980); Oklahoma City Air Logistics Center, Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma, 3 FLRA No. 82, 3 FLRA 511 (June 27, 1980); Department of Health, Education and Welfare, Social Security Administration, 1 FLRA No. 37, 1 FLRA 297 (May 9, 1979).

The Respondent relies heavily upon interpretations to be accorded Article 15, Section 15.01 of the June 1982 Master Labor Agreement. At a bare minimum, this Section arguably may be construed as relieving the Respondent of the obligation to bargain concerning changes in performance standards. Thus, an alleged refusal to bargain concerning the implementation of a change in performance standards would, even in the absence of a waiver, necessarily involve an interpretation of Section 15.01.

[13] Briefs filed on behalf of the General Counsel and the Charging Party do assert that the change in performance standards alleged in the case under consideration did involve a breach of AFR 40-452 procedures implemented on or about July 1, 1981. However, such conduct is not relied upon as a basis for the complaint, and it is not otherwise referred to in the complaint. Moreover, the specific provision alluded to confers no bargaining rights on Council 214 or the Charging Party, but merely provides: "Prior to a supervisor implementing the final decisions on the identification of job performance elements and standards the Union will be informed of such decisions and given a copy of the work plan if requested by the employee. The copy will be provided to the Union at least three days prior to implementation. . . ." (R. Exh. No. 6 at 1).

In light of the conclusions outlined, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following Order pursuant to 5 C.F.R. § 2423.29.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), and concerns the negotiability of one proposal submitted during the course of mid-term contract negotiations.

II. Union Proposal

> Employees who have been downgraded because of reduction-in-force actions will obtain repromotion to their former grades as follows:
> 1. Repromotion to positions at their former grades and competitive levels will be effected in accordance with seniority. [The disputed portion of the proposal is underscored.]

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency and the Office of Personnel Management (OPM)[1] assert that the proposal, by mandating the selection of repromotion eligible employees solely on the basis of seniority, would interfere to an excessive degree with the Agency's right to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute. The Agency and OPM further argue that the proposal is outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute because it is inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation, namely, Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM), which permits agencies to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source.

[1] OPM filed an amicus curiae brief in this case without opposition from the Union.

The Union argues first that the proposal is negotiable as an "appropriate arrangement" within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute, for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management's right. In support of its position, the Union cites the decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 702 F.2d 1183 (D.C. Cir. 1983), reversing and remanding American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 and Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 91 (1981). The Union also argues that an agency is permitted to select a repromotion eligible for a vacancy without going through competitive promotion procedures pursuant to subchapter 1-5(c)(6) of chapter 335 of the FPM which provides as follows:

> c. Agencies may at their discretion except other actions from their plans. These include, but are not limited to:
> . . . .
> (6) Repromotion to a grade or position from which an employee was demoted without personal cause and not at his or her request.

Thus, the Union claims its proposal constitutes an "exception" to Requirement 4, subchapter 1-4 of FPM chapter 335 within the meaning of subchapter 1-5(c)(6) of FPM chapter 335.

B. Analysis

The Agency states that the proposal "is, in all materiel respects, identical to that" in the case cited above, which resulted in the Authority's Decision and Order on Remand in

AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, 14 FLRA 801 (1984). The Union states that this proposal "would only come into play after the agency decides to fill a vacant position and there are repromotion eligibles who had previously successfully competed for the position in that competitive level and grade." In other words, according to the Union "these employees have demonstrated their ability to successfully perform the duties of the position." In support, the Union relied on the definition of competitive level, currently set out in 51 Fed. Reg. 321 (1986) (to be codified at 5 C.F.R. § 351.403). This definition provides in relevant part as follows:

> (a) Each agency shall establish competitive levels consisting of all positions in a competitive area which are in the same grade . . . and classification series and which are similar enough in duties, qualification requirements, pay schedules, and working conditions so that the incumbent of one position could successfully perform the critical elements of any other position upon entry into it, without any loss of productivity beyond that normally expected in the orientation of any new but fully qualified employee . . . .

This proposal, unlike the one in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, 14 FLRA 801 (1984), does not expressly permit the Agency to decide whether to fill a vacant position or expressly permit the Agency to make qualifications determinations. We find, however, in view of the positions of the parties, that such requirements are implicit in the proposal. Interpreted in this manner the proposal has the same effect as the proposal in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, 14 FLRA 801 (1984). In that case the Authority concluded that the proposal constituted a negotiable appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.[2]

[2] Subsequent to the filings in this case the Authority issued National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986), in which we specifically adopted the rationale of the District of Columbia Circuit in AFGE, Local 2782. Thus, as

Accordingly, the Authority finds, for the reasons stated more fully in that decision, the proposal here does not excessively interfere with management's rights and, therefore, constitutes a negotiable appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

However, the Authority also concluded in its Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census that while the proposal constituted an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3), it nevertheless was outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute because it was inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation, that is, Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the FPM, which would permit agencies to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source. This conclusion was not altered by the Union's claim, proffered in its Motion for Reconsideration of the Authority Decision and Order on Remand, that based on subchapter 1-5(c)(6) of FPM chapter 335 its proposal constituted an exception to Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, FPM chapter 335. In denying the Motion for Reconsideration (July 11, 1985) the Authority found that while subchapter 1-5(c) authorized an agency to except certain repromotions from its competitive selection procedures, such FPM provision did not purport to authorize an agency to relinquish its right under Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4 to make selections from appropriate sources. In terms of the proposal at issue in this case, it would have the same effect as the proposal in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census. That is, the proposal would prevent the Agency from making selections from any appropriate source. Thus, for the reasons stated more fully in our Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, as affirmed in our denial of the Union's Motion for Reconsideration, the proposal in this case also violates Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the FPM, a Government-wide regulation, and is outside the duty to bargain.

we stated in the Kansas Army National Guard decision, we will henceforth determine whether a proposal constitutes a negotiable "appropriate arrangement" under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute by determining whether the proposal excessively interferes with the exercise of management's rights.

C. Conclusion

The Authority finds, therefore, for the reasons set forth in the foregoing analysis, that the proposal in this case would not excessively interfere with management's rights and, thus, that the proposal constitutes an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by the exercise of such rights, within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. However, contrary to the Union's contention that the proposal does not in any way conflict with Government-wide regulations, the Authority concludes, based upon the analysis provided in our Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, 14 FLRA 801 (1984), affirmed in the Authority's Decision and Order on Motion for Reconsideration (July 11, 1985), petition for review filed, No. 85-1562 (D.C. Cir. September 6, 1985), that the proposal conflicts with FPM, chapter 335, subchapter 1-4, and, therefore, is nonnegotiable under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute.

III. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Issued, Washington, D.C., April 30, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It concerns the negotiability of the following two Union proposals which relate to official time, overtime compensation, and travel and per diem for employees representing the Union in negotiations.

Union Proposal 1

> The employer agrees to provide official time, including travel and per diem costs, for three union representatives to prepare union counter proposals and other negotiations related duties for the union during actual negotiations. These representatives will not be negotiators for the union.

Union Proposal 2

> EPA employees who are union negotiators will receive the same type of compensation, compensatory time or overtime, as does management where negotiations extend beyond normal duty hours.

II. Positions of the Parties

According to the Union, Union Proposal 1 is in response to the Agency's history of consistently limiting its negotiating team to one person. Consequently, under section 7131(a) of the Statute, the Union's entitlements as to official time have been limited to one negotiation team member. Union Proposal 1 is intended to allow official time, travel and per diem for an additional three representatives who will be available to provide support (e.g., preparation of counter proposals, research and clerical functions) to the Union team during negotiations.

The Agency argues that employees representing unions in negotiations may receive only the amount of official time to which they are entitled under section 7131(a) of the Statute. Because Union Proposal 1 would exceed that amount, the Agency argues that it is outside the duty to bargain. As to the question of travel and per diem, the Agency argues that the Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983) (BATF) requires a conclusion that the subject is not within the duty to bargain. Regarding Union Proposal 2, the Agency contends that neither the Statute nor the laws governing payment for overtime permit overtime compensation for employees representing a union in negotiations.

The Union disputes the Agency's contentions. It asserts that the official time aspect of Union Proposal 1 is negotiable under section 7131(d) of the Statute. It contends that the travel and per diem aspect concerns a negotiable condition of employment and is not inconsistent with statute. Concerning Union Proposal 2, the Union argues that employees on official time are eligible for overtime compensation under the laws which govern overtime in the Federal sector. Therefore, even if they are not actually entitled to overtime compensation, the subject is within the Agency's obligation to bargain.

III. Analysis and Conclusions

A. Negotiation of Additional Official Time

The Authority has found that official time, beyond that authorized under section 7131(a), for employees who are participating in negotiations on behalf of the union in a support capacity is negotiable under section 7131(d). National EPA Council, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Environmental Protection Agency, 16 FLRA 625 (1984). Based on the reasons set forth in that case, the Authority finds that aspect of Union Proposal 1 which concerns official time within the duty to bargain.

B. Negotiation of Travel and Per Diem

In National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986) the Authority took the BATF decision into consideration in deciding the question of the negotiability of travel and per diem. Contrary to the Agency's arguments, BATF does not compel a conclusion that the issue of payment by an agency of otherwise appropriate and proper travel expenses for employees on official time pursuant to section 7131 is outside the duty to bargain. The Authority notes particularly that there is nothing in the proposal or the submissions of the parties which indicates that the travel and per diem provisions of Union Proposal 1 are to be applied in any manner which is inconsistent with governing legal and regulatory provisions. Therefore, the Authority concludes, based on its reasoning set forth in the Customs Service case, that the travel and per diem provisions in Union Proposal 1 are within the duty to bargain.

C. Negotiability of Overtime Compensation

The Statute and its legislative history are silent on the subject of overtime compensation for employees who are on official time pursuant to section 7131. Consequently, the various statutory provisions which relate to overtime compensation of Federal employees control the issue raised by Union Proposal 2. Those relevant provisions are:

(1) 5 U.S.C. §§ 5542, 5543 - overtime compensation for General Schedule employees;

(2) 5 U.S.C. § 5544 - overtime compensation for prevailing rate employees; and

(3) Fair Labor Standards Act, as amended, 29 U.S.C. §§ 201 et seq. - overtime compensation for certain Federal employees.

These provisions basically authorize overtime compensation for "work" in excess of 8 hours per day and/or 40 hours per week. The question then is whether representational activities performed on behalf of a union are "work." In addressing this question, the Authority held in Patent Office Professional Association and Patent and Trademark Office, Department of Commerce, 21 FLRA No. 74 (1986), that representational activities performed by employees outside the normal workday do not constitute the performance of hours of work within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 5542. In that case the Authority relied on NTEU v. Gregg, No. 83-546, slip op. at 4-5 (D.D.C. Sept. 28, 1983), in which the district court held that, in order for activities to be considered "work" under 5 U.S.C. § 5542 and the Fair Labor Standards Act, they must be primarily for the benefit of the agency. The same standard has been applied to determining what constitutes "work" under 5 U.S.C. § 5544. 60 Comp. Gen. 431, 433 (1981). In NTEU v. Gregg the court specifically ruled that representational activities performed on behalf of a union did not meet the required standard and, therefore, did not make a General Schedule employee eligible for overtime compensation. Because the standards are the same, the same conclusion must be reached with respect to the prevailing rate overtime provisions. The Authority therefore concludes that payment for overtime for union representational activity is not consistent with law.

Additionally, the Authority concludes that representational activity does not make an employee eligible for compensatory time off. In order to be eligible for compensatory time off, a General Schedule employee must be eligible for overtime pay. In Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1164, AFL-CIO, 19 FLRA No. 4 (1985), the Authority rejected a portion of an arbitrator's award which ordered that compensatory time off be given for time spent outside a normal work day in representational activity because it was inconsistent with the General Schedule overtime provisions contained in 5 U.S.C. §§ 5542, 5543. See also Patent and Trademark Office, supra. Similarly, under the Fair Labor Standards Act, compensatory time off may in some circumstances be granted in lieu of overtime pay. 5 CFR § 551.531. Prevailing rate employees have no eligibility for compensatory time off whatsoever, but must be paid for overtime work. Federal Personnel Manual, FPM Supplement 532-1, Subchapter 8, S8-4(b)(10).

Thus, there is no legal authorization to pay overtime or allow compensatory time off to employees engaged in representational activities on behalf of a union. Therefore, Union Proposal 2 conflicts with Federal statute and is not within the duty to bargain.

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Proposal 1.*/ IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Union's petition for review insofar as it relates to Union Proposal 2 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the following Union proposal:

> Official Time
> Both parties agree that the Union is authorized to designate at least two (2) representatives who will be released from duty and will receive their full pay and benefits. These representatives would be entitled to permissive TDY orders, at no cost to the government, when traveling, when not on official TDY orders. At the conclusion of their term of office these representatives will be authorized to return to their former positions. Upon request of the Union the contract may be opened for renegotiation of official time for representation within one year of the initiation of the above requested negotiations.

II. Preliminary Issue

The Union contends that the Agency's written allegation that the proposal is nonnegotiable is defective because it fails to state the reason for its determination. Contrary to the Union's position, the Authority concludes that under section 2424.6 (a)(2) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the Agency's statement of position sets forth a full and detailed statement of its reasons supporting the allegation. As it appears from the record that the Union has been given full notice of the Agency's position and was not prejudiced by the brevity of the Agency's initial nonnegotiability allegation, the Union's contention in this regard must be denied.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal concerns the "numbers, types, and grades of employees or positions assigned to any organizational subdivision, work project, or tour of duty," which, under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute, is a matter negotiable only at the election of the Agency. The Agency argues, in essence, that the proposal would require it to hire additional full-time or substitute teachers, and, hence, is determinative of the number and type of employees assigned to the schools the Agency operates.

The Union states, on the other hand, that the proposal would have at most a negligible effect on staffing, and, therefore, interferes neither with the number of employees assigned to the schools nor with the mission of the Agency.

IV. Background

This proposal arises as the result of a reopener provision included in the parties' collective bargaining agreement by order of the Federal Service Impasses Panel (the Panel). After the Union chose, pursuant to the provision, to reopen negotiations and the parties bargained to impasse, the Panel directed the parties to submit the dispute to an arbitrator. Both prior to and during the mediation/arbitration sessions held before the Arbitrator, the Agency held that the proposal was negotiable only at its election, and that it did not wish to negotiate over the matter. Based on the Agency's declaration of nonnegotiability, the Arbitrator ruled that he would not decide the merits of the case until the Authority determined specifically that the proposal is within the duty to bargain.

V. Analysis

It appears from the record that only that part of the proposal is in dispute which would authorize the Union to designate at least two (2) full-time Union representatives, that is, unit employees whose 40-hour workweek would be spent performing representational activities instead of the duties of their positions.

The basic issue in this case concerns the relationship between the right of an exclusive representative, under section 7131(d), to negotiate for "official time," that is, time when an employee would otherwise be in a duty status, for employee use in the performance of representational activities, and management's rights under section 7106 of the Statute. As the Authority stated in Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, 20 FLRA No. 89 (1985) petition for review filed sub nom. National Association of Government Employees, Local R7-23 v. FLRA, No. 86-1011 (D.C. Cir., January 7, 1986), section 7101 of the Statute provides both for the right of employees to participate in the collective bargaining process through labor organizations of their own choosing and for the safeguarding of the public interest in maintaining an effective and efficient Government. Thus, the Authority has held that management cannot deny official time for representational functions to a representative of the exclusive representative unless it can show that the use of official time will interfere with the accomplishment of the agency's work. Scott Air Force Base at 765. On the other hand, the Authority has also explained that an exclusive representative cannot claim that it is entitled to negotiate a contract provision regarding the allocation of official time for representational functions without regard to management's needs and requirements regarding the performance of its assigned work. Department of the Navy, Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, Virginia, 15 FLRA 867 (1984); Harry S. Truman Memorial Veterans Hospital, Columbia, Missouri and American Federation of Government Employees (AFL-CIO), Local No. 3399, 14 FLRA 103 (1984); Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland, 18 FLRA No. 9 (1985). Compare Bigelow v. Department of Health and Human Services, 750 F.2d 962 (Fed. Cir. 1984) (an employee may not refuse a training assignment based on a claim that he or she was entitled to 100% official time for representational functions). Simply stated, section 7131(d) does not mandate the granting of official time under any and all circumstances. Local 1770, American Federation of Government Employees, Fort Bragg, North Carolina and Department of the Army, Headquarters, XVIII Airborne Corps and Fort Bragg, North Carolina, 8 FLRA 242 (1982). Thus, under Authority precedent, the right to negotiate for an amount of official time available to employees for union representational purposes is not without limitations. Rather, as the cases cited above demonstrate, where the agency can show, in the circumstances of a given case, that the use of official time will interfere with the accomplishment of the agency's work, the exercise of management's rights will take precedence.

Turning to the instant case, in support of its contention that the proposal is determinative of the number and types of employees assigned to its schools, the Agency cites, among other things, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council of Locals No. 214 and Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 19 FLRA No. 23 (1985); petition for review filed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, Council of Locals No. 214 v. FLRA, No. 85-1500 (D.C. Cir., August 12, 1985), where the Authority found, based on the particular facts and circumstances pertaining there, that a proposal which would have granted 12 union representatives 100% official time under section 7131(d) of the Statute was negotiable only at the election of the agency. However, we find, contrary to the Agency's position, that the facts and circumstances of this case are substantially different from those in Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, and clearly warrant an opposite result.

The agency in Wright-Patterson Air Force Base made a substantial demonstration on the record that its primary mission required its employees to work in crews. In these crews, various tasks and skills were highly specialized and were interrelated and independent so that the progress of the work depended on each function in the work process being fulfilled. Moreover, the agency there demonstrated that it was undermanned and subject to congressionally imposed limitations on the numbers of positions available for staffing its work. For these reasons, in the circumstances of that case, the Authority determined that the proposal was integrally related to, so as to be determinative of, the numbers of employees or positions assigned to a work project or organizational entity. By contrast, in this case, the Agency's contentions are merely speculative and insufficiently supported by the record evidence. In this regard, it appears from the record that under the parties' current contract, the Union is at present entitled to 1 full-time representative on 100% official time.

Therefore, the proposal would require the addition of only 1 full-time representative. The Agency has failed to demonstrate, however, that it would have to hire more employees to cover the absence of an additional full-time Union representative or that such a result, if necessary, would actually cause it to exceed the limitations on hiring that it asserts exist. In addition, the Agency has not shown, in contrast to the circumstances present in Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, that the "crew" concept is applicable to teaching, that is, that the removal of one additional employee from his or her teaching position would be so disruptive that the progress of the work of the Agency would be seriously affected. On the other hand, according to the Union's uncontroverted statement, "there is a great degree of interchangeability in teaching skills because teachers are qualified in multiple fields. This allows for the change of one teacher for another because similar skills are possessed by a number of colleagues."[1]

Although the Agency maintains that it is subject to personnel ceilings, it is clear from the record that, even if it had demonstrated that it would have to hire more employees to cover the addition of a full-time representative, the personnel ceilings imposed upon the Agency are not congressionally mandated, nor is there a limit on the number of teachers that can be hired either in the Overseas Teachers Pay and Personnel Practices Act[2] or in the annual Defense Appropriations Acts. Moreover, in agreement with the Union, various logistical problems hypothetically raised by the Agency in its statement of position could be addressed through substantive negotiations with the Union on the implementation of the proposal.

VI. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, the Authority concludes that, in the circumstances of this case, the Agency has failed to show how the addition of one full-time Union representative on official time would either be determinative of the number or types of employees assigned to the schools the Agency operates, or interfere with the accomplishment of the Agency's work. Compare American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3669, AFL-CIO and Veterans Administration Medical Center, Minneapolis,

Therefore, the Union proposal is within the duty to bargain under section 7131(d) of the Statute.

DECISION AND ORDER

This matter is before the Authority pursuant to the Regional Director's "Order Transferring Case to the Federal Labor Relations Authority" in accordance with section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon consideration of the entire record in this case, including the parties' stipulation of facts, accompanying exhibits, and the parties' contentions, the Authority finds:

The complaint alleges that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by failing and refusing to furnish, as required by section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute,[1] information requested by the National Treasury Employees Union (the Union), the exclusive representative of its employees, in connection with the Union's processing of a grievance on behalf of employee

Michael Santoro. The grievance alleged that the Respondent had unlawfully retaliated against Santoro for filing an earlier grievance by lowering his evaluation for purposes of consideration for merit promotion to a Tax Law Specialist position.

The Union, in connection with its representation of the grievant, and its pursuit of what it considered to be a discriminatory appraisal, requested information concerning the promotion process, including a "promotion package." The Union asserted that only by comparative assessment of the promotion material would it be able to prove discrimination on the part of the Respondent. The Respondent denied this request, stating that because the position in question is not a bargaining unit position, the Union was not entitled to receive the requested material under section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute. The Respondent contends also that, as the position in question is a non-bargaining unit position, the issue was not grievable under the parties' negotiated agreement. The parties stipulated that the data requested by the Union is normally maintained by the Respondent, is reasonably available, and does not constitute guidance, advice, counsel, or training provided to officials or supervisors relating to collective bargaining. The Respondent stipulated also that, if the information had been requested in connection with a bargaining unit position, it would have been provided.

Under section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute, an agency has a duty to furnish upon request by an exclusive representative, to the extent not prohibited by law, data which, among other things, is reasonably available and necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding, and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining. Such data must be necessary to enable the Union to fulfill its representational responsibilities, including the effective evaluation and processing of grievances. However, a union's bare assertion that it needs data to process grievances does not automatically oblige an agency to supply such data. The duty to supply data under section 7114(b)(4) thus turns upon the nature of the request in the circumstances of each particular case.[2] Therefore, the threshold issue is whether the data requested by the exclusive representative is necessary for full and proper discussion, understanding and negotiation of subjects within the scope of collective bargaining, including specifically the Union's evaluation and processing of the grievance involved herein.

In the Authority's view, in order to process the instant grievance, the Union would have had to be able, as it explained to the Respondent, to make a comparative assessment of the various evaluations involved in the merit promotion action involved, that is, all material pertinent to the promotion process contained in the "promotion package." Thus, the Authority finds that the General Counsel has demonstrated that the data requested by the Union is clearly necessary under section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute in order for the Union to determine whether the Respondent engaged in deliberate discrimination against the grievant by lowering his promotion appraisal in retaliation for his having processed a previous grievance to arbitration.[3]

American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1345 v. FLRA, No. 85-1378 (D.C. Cir. June 21, 1985).

Accordingly, the Authority concludes that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute by failing to furnish the Union with necessary data as required by section 7114(b)(4), and we shall order that the requested data be furnished to the Union upon request.[4]

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Internal Revenue Service, National Office, Washington, D.C., shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

[3] As the Authority has previously noted, the resolution of grievability questions cognizable under law is for an arbitrator under parties' negotiated agreements, unless they mutually agree otherwise, and the existence of such a threshold question herein, contrary to the Respondent's assertion, would not in and of itself relieve the Respondent of its obligation to furnish otherwise necessary information pursuant to section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute. See, e.g., U.S. Customs Service, Region VII, Los Angeles, California, 10 FLRA 251 (1982). Compare Director of Administration, Headquarters, U.S. Air Force, 17 FLRA 372 (1985), wherein the Authority held that if the underlying matter is not cognizable under law (e.g., the filing of a grievance concerning a probationary employee's termination), then the question may not go to an arbitrator. It follows that in the latter circumstances, unlike here, there would be no section 7114(b)(4) obligation to furnish such data for the purpose that the exclusive representative was seeking it.

[4] See Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, National Office, Washington, D.C., 18 FLRA No. 74 (1985). In so concluding, the Authority notes that there is no allegation herein that providing the requested data is prohibited by the Freedom of Information Act, Pub. L. No. 89-487, 80 Stat. 256 (codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. § 552 (1982)) or the Privacy Act of 1974, Pub. L. No. 83-579, 88 Stat. 1896 (codified as amended at 5 U.S.C. § 552a (1982)). See generally Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES), Fort Carson, Colorado, supra.

(a) Failing and refusing to furnish, upon request by the National Treasury Employees Union, the exclusive representative of its employees, the data which the Authority has deemed necessary to enable the exclusive representative to perform its representational duties in connection with Michael Santoro's grievance.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request, furnish the National Treasury Employees Union, the exclusive representative of its employees, the data which the Authority has deemed necessary to enable the exclusive representative to perform its representational duties in connection with Michael Santoro's grievance.

(b) Post at its Washington, D.C. offices, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by an appropriate official of the Respondent, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of one provision of a negotiated agreement disapproved by the Agency head pursuant to section 7114(c) of the Statute.[1]

II. Procedural Issue

The Agency moved for dismissal of the Union's petition for review because the petition failed to include a precise statement of the provision's meaning as required by section 2424.4(a)(2) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. While the original petition did not contain a statement of meaning, the Union subsequently amended its petition to include the requisite statement, thus curing the defect in accordance with established Authority practice. See, e.g., American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2578,

[1] The Union withdrew its request for negotiability determinations on two additional provisions, one concerning military leave and the other covering automatic performance ratings. Hence those provisions are not considered here.

AFL-CIO and General Services Administration, National Archives and Records Service, 12 FLRA 545 (1983).

III. Provision

Section 2

A. Each Center will establish an occupational safety and health team consisting of two (2) members appointed by the Union.

1. Employees on the committee will receive appropriate training as available.

2. Employees have the right to report health and safety complaints to the health and safety team, who will investigate the complaints and submit reports.

3. The health and safety team will conduct at least quarterly inspections (or more frequently if in accordance with a past practice) and submit reports.

4. Time spent on team activities will be official time.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues, that by giving the Union the right to appoint two members to the proposed occupational safety and health team, the provision is inconsistent with its reserved management rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute to assign employees, to assign work and to determine the personnel by which Agency operations shall be conducted.

According to the Union, the language of the disputed provision "requires the agency to select the option of a joint health and safety committee rather than unannounced OSHA [Occupational Safety and Health Administration] inspections as that option exists in E.O. 12196 and 29 CFR Part 1960." Union Amended Petition for Review at 1.

The Union advances three arguments to support its position that the disputed provision is negotiable. First, since the proposed team is not a product of law or regulation, but, rather, is to be created by the collective bargaining agreement, serving on that team does not constitute the work of the Agency. Because the reserved management right to assign work extends only to the work of the Agency, the Union's authority, pursuant to the provision, to designate two team members does not contravene a management right. Second, the Union notes that the Agency is free to appoint as many members to the team as it wishes under the terms of the provision. Finally, the Union argues that the provision constitutes a procedure which assures fairness and equity in assigning members to the safety and health committee.

B. Analysis

1. Establishment of a Certified Safety and Health Committee

In order to achieve the Union's stated objective of avoiding unannounced OSHA inspections the safety and health committee sought to be established must be "certified" by the Secretary of Labor under law and regulation. See, section 1-301, Executive Order 12196 and 29 C.F.R. § 1960.36(b). Further, in order to obtain certification by the Secretary of Labor, a network of committees must be established at both the national level of the agency and, for agencies with field or regional offices, at other appropriate levels within the agency. Section 1-301, E.O. 12196, 29 C.F.R. § 1960.37(a). The Union here represents Disbursing Center (Field) employees in the Bureau of Government Financial Operations (BGFO). The BGFO is a bureau of the Department of the Treasury. The record in this case, however, indicates that the Agency head, the Secretary of the Treasury, has not established, and is not attempting to establish, the network of committees required for certification under the executive order and regulations. Thus it is clear that the Union is not merely attempting to negotiate over membership on a joint labor-management safety committee concerned with matters of safety and health within the bargaining unit. Rather, in view of the Union's professed objective to avoid unannounced OSHA inspections, the provision seeks to bind the Agency to a course of action requiring the forming of similar committees throughout the Agency.

Although the parties focused their arguments on whether the Union may negotiate over membership on the safety and health committee, the issue to be resolved initially is whether bargaining over the establishment of a certified safety and health committee is itself authorized by governing law, the implementing executive order and relevant Government-wide regulations.

The legislation creating safety and health programs for Federal agencies prescribes specific roles for agency heads and employee representatives in the establishment of safety and health committees. 29 U.S.C. § 668(a) charges agency heads with responsibility for establishing and maintaining "an effective and comprehensive occupational safety and health program" and requires agency heads to engage in "consultation" with representatives of their employees. In the legislative history the statutory objective is described as follows:

> The above requirements are intended to establish clear responsibility for the Federal Government's internal safety and health efforts, and provide the Secretary [of Labor] with an active role in coordinating the multiplicity of programs devised by various agencies.[2] [Footnote added.]

The relevant executive order, issued pursuant to statutory authorization, implements the expressed intent of the law by identifying agency heads as having responsibility, inter alia, for providing their employees with safe workplaces and for operating occupational safety and health programs in accordance with the executive order and with regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Labor. E.O. 12196, section 1-201. This executive order specifically defines the role of employee unions. In section 1-201(i), agency heads are required to assure that employee representatives accompany safety and health inspectors when inspecting agency workplaces. The executive order authorizes, in section 1-301, exclusive representatives to appoint members to certified committees only at levels where they hold exclusive recognition, should the decision be made by the agency head to establish certified committees. The order also provides for circumstances where there is no certified bargaining representative. In such situations, committees will be comprised of management representatives "and an equal number of nonmanagement employees or their representatives." However, the Union provides no evidence to indicate that Congress, the President or the Secretary of Labor intended to give unions a greater role in the Federal safety and health programs than that expressly prescribed for them in the law, the executive order or in existing regulations. That is, in light of the specific responsibilities assigned, it does not appear that unions are authorized to negotiate over the establishment of certified safety and health committees. See, for example, U.S. Department of Labor, Labor-Management Services Administration, Cleveland, Ohio and National Union of Compliance Officers, 13 FLRA 677 (1984) wherein it was held that the available legislative and regulatory evidence did not support the position that the termination of probationary employees was includable within the scope of negotiated grievance procedures.

[2] S. REP. NO. 1282, 91st Cong., 2d Sess., reprinted in 1970 U.S. CODE CONG. & AD. NEWS 5177, 5196.

Finally, this view is not altered by the fact that the Authority has found proposals seeking to establish joint labor-management committees to serve as vehicles for exchanging views on matters affecting conditions of employment within a bargaining unit to be negotiable. See, e.g., American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2761 and U.S. Department of the Army, U.S. Army Adjutant General Publication Center, St. Louis, Missouri, 14 FLRA 438 (1984). The committee sought to be created here, however, would have more than an advisory role, in that it would have the various powers and responsibilities authorized by the statutory and regulatory framework. Thus, the provision in this case is readily distinguishable from the provision before the Authority in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council of Prison Locals and Department of Justice, Bureau of Prisons, 11 FLRA 286 (1983) which sought only the establishment of an uncertified safety and health committee and which was found to be within the duty to bargain.

2. Union Membership on Certified Safety and Health Committee

Assuming that the Agency head in this case were to exercise his exclusive discretion to establish certified safety and health committees, as that option exists in the cited executive order and related regulations, then Union representation on such committees would be governed by other provisions of the Executive Order. Specifically, section 1-301 of E.O. 12196 provides: "Where there are exclusive bargaining representatives for employees at the national or other level in an agency, such representatives shall select the appropriate nonmanagement members of the [occupational safety and health] committee." Thus, the Union's right to select members for the certified committee would arise directly from the governing executive order and consequently would not be inconsistent with rights reserved to management by the Statute.

C. Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, bargaining on the disputed provision is inconsistent with law and applicable Government-wide regulations and, consequently, is outside the duty to bargain pursuant to section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute. However, should the Agency head decide in the future to establish occupational safety and health committees in accordance with the governing statutory and regulatory prescriptions, the Union could pursuant to the executive order designate the individuals who will represent the Union on such committees.

III. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), and concerns the negotiability of six union proposals.[1] The proposals concern the relocation of the employees of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration's (OSHA) Area offices at Erie and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

II. Procedural Issue

The Union's Petition for Review sets forth proposals both as originally presented at the bargaining table and as subsequently modified in the course of bargaining. Section 2424.4(a)(3) of the Authority's Rules requires the union in its petition to submit the agency's written allegation as to the nonnegotiability of the proposals for which review is being sought. The Union's petition in this case included written declarations of nonnegotiability for the original proposals only. There is no indication in the record that the Union requested a written allegation of nonnegotiability as to the subsequent proposals. Consequently, the Authority will only decide the negotiability of the original proposals.

[1] The Union withdrew one proposal involving the use of shower facilities and did not appeal the Agency's declaration that a proposal regarding the cost of printing employee business cards was nonnegotiable. These proposals will not be considered further here. The Union did not file a Reply Brief in this case.

III. Union Proposals 1 and 2

Union Proposal 1 (Erie)

> The new space will be structured to provide individual offices for each bargaining unit employee.

Union Proposal 2 (Pittsburgh)

> All CSHO's will be provided with offices in accordance with what they have at the present time (9 private offices and 6 offices with 2 CSHO's per office).

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that the Union has not shown any impact to which Proposals 1 and 2 relate, and that the Agency's actions, therefore, do not constitute changes in conditions of employment sufficient to create a duty to notify the Union and afford it an opportunity to request bargaining. The Agency also contends that the proposals would require it to negotiate over the technology of performing work in violation of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute.

The Union states that Proposals 1 and 2 were intended to ensure that employees obtain in the new locations the same amount of work space they had in their prior locations. The Union contends that the proposals do not concern the technology of performing work.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

As to the argument concerning changes in working conditions, the Authority has consistently held that it will only decide in a negotiability appeal issues which are before us under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Statute. To the extent that there are factual issues in dispute between the parties concerning the duty to bargain in the specific circumstances of this case, these issues may be raised in other appropriate proceedings. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2736 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters 379th Combat Support Group (SAC), Wurtsmith Air Force Base, Michigan, 14 FLRA 302 (1984).

As to the Agency's contention that the proposals are nonnegotiable, the Authority has held that for a proposal concerning office space design to violate an agency's right to determine the technology of performing work, an agency must show (1) that its choice of office space design has a technological relationship to the accomplishment and furtherance of its work and (2) that the proposal would interfere with these purposes. See Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Midwest Regional Office, Chicago, Illinois, 16 FLRA 141, 143 (1984) and cases cited there. The Agency contends that the field investigatory personnel covered by the proposals are "expected to be away from the office a preponderant percentage of work time in the conduct of inspection activities required to be performed at the worksites of employers ...." The Agency argues that open space technology represents a balance between "cost and Governmental efficiency and accomplishment of OSHA's enforcement programs." Agency Statement of Position at 2,3.

The Union states, and the Agency does not dispute, that the covered employees are currently housed in private offices even though they currently spend the bulk of their time in the field. Union Petition for Review at 1,3. Since the proposals would not alter the Agency's current practice, and the Agency has not shown how continuing its current practice would interfere with the accomplishment and furtherance of its work, the Authority concludes that the Agency has not demonstrated that open space design has a sufficient technological relationship to accomplishing or furthering the Agency's work to interfere with its determination regarding "technology" in any significant way. Accordingly, the Authority finds that Union Proposals 1 and 2 are within the duty to bargain. Contrast American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2910 and Library of Congress, 19 FLRA No. 130 (1985) (Union Proposal 1) in which the Authority concluded that a proposal to allow employees their preference of seating assignments was contrary to the agency's right under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute to determine the methods and means of performing work because the grouping of employees based on their "primary function" was designed to enhance the agency's ability to accomplish its function in a more efficient and effective manner.

IV. Union Proposal 5 (Pittsburgh)

> The library/conference room shall be relocated and that space converted into office space.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that the Union has not shown any adverse impact to which Proposal 5 relates, and that the Agency's actions, therefore, do not constitute changes in conditions of employment sufficient to create a duty to notify the Union and afford it an opportunity to request bargaining. The Agency also contends that the proposal violates its rights under section 7106(b)(1) to determine the technology, methods and means of performing its work and under section 7106(a)(1) to determine its internal security practices.

The Union contends that the proposal is intended to lessen the impact on employees of the move itself by making the larger space intended as a library/conference room into office space and placing the library/conference room in a smaller area.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

As to any factual disputes concerning the existence of an obligation to bargain, see Wurtsmith Air Force Base discussed above with respect to Proposals 1 and 2.

As to whether the proposal violates section 7106(b)(1), the Authority finds that the Agency has not provided sufficient support in the record to determine whether the proposal violates the Agency's right to determine the technology, methods and means of performing work. See above discussion concerning Union Proposals 1 and 2.

With respect to the argument concerning internal security, the Authority finds that Union Proposal 5 was intended as an arrangement for employees adversely affected by the office move. In National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4, slip op. at 8-10 (1986) the Authority set forth the factors it will consider in determining whether a proposal constitutes a negotiable appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute or is outside the duty to bargain because it excessively interferes with the exercise of management's rights. One of the factors to be weighed in determining whether a proposed arrangement is appropriate is the nature and extent of the impact on management's ability to act pursuant to its statutory rights. Id. at 9. An agency's right to determine its internal security practices includes the right to determine policies and actions necessary to secure its property against internal or external risks. National Association of Government Employees, SEIU, AFL-CIO and Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, 16 FLRA 361, 362 (1984). The Agency contends that the library's location was chosen so that administrative personnel could monitor its use and the removal of library materials. Agency Statement of Position at 4. The Union agrees that the Agency's concern is "valid." Union Petition for Review at 3. The Authority finds that the location of the library/conference room where it could be monitored by administrative personnel constitutes part of the Agency's plan to safeguard its property and that the Union's proposal would interfere with the Agency's determination. The Authority also finds that the benefit to the employees of having the additional space is not sufficient to overcome the detriment to the Agency's security plan. Consequently, the Authority concludes that Union Proposal 5 excessively interferes with the Agency's right under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute to determine its internal security practices and is outside the duty to bargain.

V. Union Proposals 6 and 11

Union Proposal 6 (Erie)

Free parking spaces will be provided.

Union Proposal 11 (Pittsburgh)

Free parking will be provided for GOV's and POV's within walking distance of the Federal building.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that employee parking is governed by Government-wide regulation within the meaning of section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute. It argues that the General Services Administration (GSA) retains exclusive responsibility for determining allocations of space for vehicle parking and that the Agency, therefore, is without discretion to provide parking facilities on its own. Additionally, the Agency argues that, because the subject is covered by Government-wide rule or regulation, national consultation rights under section 7113 of the Statute apply rather than collective bargaining.

The Union contends that the Agency has discretion to provide employees with free parking as was done at the previous location.

B. Analysis

The Authority has held that proposals regarding the distribution of parking spaces to employees in the bargaining unit are within the duty to bargain if they are consistent with applicable laws, rules, and regulations. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3525 and United States Department of Justice, Board of Immigration Appeals, 10 FLRA 61, 66 (1982) (Union Proposal 2) (citing National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 747 (1980)). The regulation governing federal employee parking is FPMR Temporary Regulation D-69 (Temp. Reg. D-69), 41 CFR Chapter 101 at Appendix to Subchapter D (superseding 41 CFR 101-20.111) (extended through March 31, 1987, 51 Fed. Reg. 11022 (1986)). The Authority has held that the FPMR applies to the federal civilian work force as a whole and is, therefore, a Government-wide regulation within the meaning of section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute. National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 747, 755 (1980). Consequently, Temp. Reg. D-69 is a Government-wide regulation which would bar negotiation on a conflicting union proposal.

As to whether Union Proposals 6 and 11 conflict with Temp. Reg. D-69, the Agency contends and the Union does not dispute that the facilities which the Agency occupies in Erie and Pittsburgh are within the control of GSA. However, GSA control of the facilities does not leave the Agency without discretion concerning employee parking. First, section 7 of the regulation provides that, while GSA is vested with the authority to allocate parking spaces, GSA may delegate its authority to occupant agencies "by mutual agreement."2/ Further, section 8 of the regulation

2/ Section 7 of FPMR Temp. Reg. D-69 provides in relevant part:

> 7. Allocation and assignment of parking for official needs. GSA has responsibility for provides that parking spaces not required for official needs may be used for employee parking.[3] Additionally, section 10(f) of Temp. Reg. D-69 recognizes that implementation of the regulation "may require negotiation . . . with recognized labor organizations."

The Authority therefore finds that an agency has discretion under Temp. Reg. D-69 to either request that GSA delegate to the agency the authority to allocate parking spaces in accordance with sections 7 and 8, or, if GSA does not agree to the delegation, request GSA to allocate a designated number of spaces for employee parking. See IRS, New Orleans District at 759-60.[4] This discretion is not unlimited. One limit on an agency's discretion is that GSA is not required to comply with an agency's request. Additionally, contrary to the Union's contention, an agency is without discretion under Temp. Reg. D-69 to secure > ensuring the availability of parking spaces for official needs. GSA may, by mutual agreement, delegate allocation and assignment responsibilities to occupant agencies . . . .

[3] Section 8 of FPMR Temp. Reg. D-69 provides in relevant part:

> 8. Allocation and assignment of employee parking spaces.
> a. Parking spaces not required for official needs may be used for employee parking.
> b. GSA (or other agencies having assignment responsibilities) will determine the total number of spaces available for employee parking.

[4] In IRS, New Orleans District, the Authority held that an agency is without discretion to provide parking for its employees free of charge in that FPMR Temporary Regulation D-65, a Government-wide regulation, required employees to be charged for the use of government-controlled parking. However, that regulation is no longer in effect. Under Temp. Reg. D-69, which currently governs federal employee parking, an agency is no longer required by Government-wide regulation to assess a charge for the use by its employees of government-controlled parking facilities.

parking away from the GSA controlled facility without GSA having delegated such authority to the agency.

The Agency's argument concerning national consultation rights under section 7113 of the Statute is based upon the proposal's inconsistency with Government-wide regulation. However, in light of our determination that the proposal is not inconsistent with Temp. Reg. D-69, the Authority rejects the Agency's contention.

C. Conclusion

As discussed above, to the extent that the Agency has discretion to carry out the general requirement of proposals 6 and 11 by requesting GSA to take appropriate action, they are within the duty to bargain.

VI. Union Proposal 14 (Pittsburgh)

> Due to traffic problems and in accordance with Article 25, Section 4, of the negotiated agreement, a pilot flexitime project will be instituted in the Pittsburgh Area Office for all bargaining unit employees.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that Article 25 of the parties' Master Agreement defines the standard work week for employees and is not subject to bargaining under section 7106(b)(2) and (3) of the Statute absent a management-initiated change or a reopener clause. The Agency also argues that it has no obligation to bargain concerning matters over which it has no control.

The Union contends that the proposal merely implements Article 25, Section 4 of the parties' Master Agreement.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

As to any factual issues concerning the existence of an obligation to bargain, see Wurtsmith Air Force Base discussed above with respect to Union Proposals 1 and 2.

Union Proposal 14 would establish a pilot flexitime program in the Agency's Pittsburgh office. The Authority has held as a general matter that proposals concerning flexitime are within the duty to bargain. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2875 and

[21 FLRA No. 84]

Department of Commerce, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, National Marine Fisheries Service, Southeast Fisheries Center, Miami Laboratory, Florida, 5 FLRA 441 (1981). The Agency's argument that the proposal concerns matters outside its control is unclear and the Agency has provided no basis in the record for the Authority to respond to its contention. Since the Agency has not alleged and it is not otherwise apparent that the proposal is inconsistent with applicable law, regulation, or the Statute, it is within the duty to bargain.

VII. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the petition for review as to Union Proposal 5 be, and it hereby is, dismissed. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request, or as otherwise agreed to by the parties, bargain concerning Union Proposals 1, 2, 6, 11, and 14.5/

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), and concerns the negotiability of two Union proposals which were made in response to a management determination to modify tours of duty.

II. Procedural Issues

The Agency contends that one of the proposals (Union Proposal 2) is not properly before the Authority because its text was not included in the petition for review. The Agency's argument is spurious, since the language of Proposal 2 was included and discussed in the Agency's Statement of Position. The record provides an adequate basis for an Authority determination on Proposal 2. The Agency also contends that the Union's petition for review should be dismissed for failure to furnish a statement of meaning attributed to its proposals as required by section 2424.4(a)(2) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. In accordance with established practice, the Union was afforded an opportunity to, and did, timely correct its failure to furnish a statement of the meaning attributed to its proposals. The procedural defect has therefore been corrected and the Agency's motion to dismiss is denied. See American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760, AFL-CIO and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, 15 FLRA 909 (1984). The Agency further asserts that the petition for review is untimely with regard to Union Proposal 2. The Authority notes that, in response to the Union's request for an Agency head determination with respect to a revised Union Proposal 1, the Agency reiterated its position with respect to Union Proposal 2. The Union's petition was timely when calculated from the date of that Agency response. Finally, the Agency contends that the dispute is more appropriately resolved by resort to unfair labor practice procedures because of unresolved factual questions. Such an argument does not provide a basis for dismissing a negotiability appeal. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2736 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 379th Combat Support Group (SAC), Wurtsmith Air Force Base, Michigan, 14 FLRA 302 (1984).

III. Proposal 1

> Volunteers will be solicited to change their shift to 6:45 a.m. The numbers of employees needed to accommodate the overlap of shifts will be selected either by lowest SCD [service computation date] in unit if not enough volunteers are obtained or highest SCD in the unit if too many volunteers come forward.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that this proposal conflicts with management's right, under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, to determine the personnel by which its operations are carried out. Further, the Agency asserts that this proposal concerns the numbers, types and grades of employees and positions assigned to a tour of duty, and is negotiable only at the election of the Agency pursuant to section 7106(b)(1). The Union did not file a Reply Brief in this case.

B. Analysis

The proposals in this case were offered in response to the Agency's announced plan to change the bargaining unit employees' tour of duty from a 7:45 a.m. to 4:15 p.m. tour to a 6:45 a.m. to a 3:15 p.m. tour. The Agency also planned to add a second shift, running from 3:45 p.m. to 12:15 a.m.

This proposal would, in effect, require the Agency to continue the 7:45 a.m. starting time and solicit volunteers for the new 6:45 a.m. starting time. Selection for the earlier starting time would be based on earliest or latest service computation date depending on whether too many or too few employees volunteered for the shift starting at 6:45 a.m.

The Agency has failed to demonstrate how this proposal would interfere with management's right to determine the personnel by which agency operations are carried out. Since the Union did not propose a change in the 3:45 p.m. starting time of the afternoon shift planned by the Agency, retention of the shift beginning at 7:45 a.m., as required by the proposal, would result in a shift overlap of 30 minutes. That is, the 7:45 a.m. shift proposed by the Union would end at 4:15 p.m. and the afternoon shift established by the Agency would commence at 3:45 p.m. This circumstance contrasts with the Agency's proposed shift scheme which would result in a 30 minute gap between the end of the morning shift and start of the afternoon shift. As a result, this proposal has the effect of requiring management to have on duty during the period from 3:15 p.m. to 4:15 p.m. more employees than, in its judgment, are deemed necessary.[1] In our view, Union Proposal 1 has the same effect as the proposed shift structure found nonnegotiable in Department of the Air Force, Lowry Air Force Base, Colorado and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1974, 16 FLRA No. 1104 (1984). In that case the Authority found that, because of a change in a commissary store's operating hours, the Union's proposed shift structure would have required the agency to employ workers before the store opened and, later in the day, to operate the store without employees. Thus, the Authority concluded, the Union's proposed shift structure had "the effect of determining the numbers, types and grades of employees assigned to a work project or a tour of duty, a matter which is bargainable at management's election under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute." Since Union Proposal 1, in this case, would require a certain number of employees to be at work when the Agency has determined that no employees or a fewer number of employees are needed, it, too, falls within the ambit of section 7106(b)(1).

[1] This conclusion is reached by reference to the proposed Agency plan. Under its plan, no employees would be at work between 3:15 p.m. and 3:45 p.m., and only the afternoon shift would be at work from 3:45 p.m. to the end of its tour.

C. Conclusion

Proposal 1 relates to a matter which is negotiable only at the Agency's election under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. Since the Agency has elected not to bargain concerning this proposal, it is nonnegotiable.

IV. Proposal 2

> Employees forced onto the 6:45 a.m. shift and (sic) have transportation problems will remain on their current shift for 4 weeks. "Centerings" be utilized for 4 weeks to assist the employee in locating a ride to and from work.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency asserts that no obligation to bargain is created by this proposal because it does not concern a "condition of employment" as that term is defined in section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute. The Union did not submit a Reply Brief in this case.

B. Analysis

The Agency contends that Proposal 2 does not address a condition of employment because "it relates to arrangements for employees' transportation to and from work." Agency Statement of Position at 3. However, the proposal does pertain to working conditions of unit employees, that is, procedures and appropriate arrangements in connection with management's changing the tour of duty. Further, it does not require any substantive action on the part of the Agency with respect to employee transportation. The first portion of the proposal provides that management will temporarily delay for four weeks the requirement that certain employees work the new tour of duty. The second portion of the proposal merely obligates the Agency to post carpool or transportation notices in what appears from the record to be a preexisting medium. The Agency does not allege that this proposal would prevent management from acting at all to require all employees to work the new tour of duty. Therefore, Proposal 2 in this case has the same effect as Union Proposal 11 in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2272 and Department of Justice, U.S. Marshals Service, District of Columbia, 9 FLRA 1004 (1982). That proposal would have required the agency to give notice prior to changing certain employee assignments.

The Authority found that proposal to constitute a negotiable procedure within the meaning of section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute. Thus, based on U. S Marshals Service, we find that Proposal 2 in this case is a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2). In addition, because Proposal 2 does not interfere with management's decision to change the existing tour of duty but, rather, merely attempts to alleviate the effects of that decision, it also constitutes an "appropriate arrangement" under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

C. Conclusion

We find this proposal to be both a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute and an "appropriate arrangement" within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the petition for review, as it relates to Union Proposal 1 be, and it hereby is, dismissed. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Proposal 2.[2]

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Peter Florey filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance concerned the denial of the recommendation of the grievant's supervisor that the grievant, a hearing specialist, be promoted to GS-11 as of June 10, 1984. The grievant thereafter was promoted prospectively, but the grievance was submitted to arbitration protesting the earlier denial. The Arbitrator noted that in order for a hearing specialist to be eligible for promotion, the specialist must be determined to be performing at least at the fully satisfactory level of the job elements of the position to which the employee is to be promoted. The Arbitrator further noted with respect to the grievant that his promotion had been denied because it had been determined statistically that he was not averaging at least 1.9 decisions per day, the fully satisfactory level established for the quantitative case-processing element of the GS-11, hearing specialist position. The Arbitrator concluded that the performance standards used to measure the grievant's numerical case production, at least up until the time of the grievance, failed to comply with the requirements of the parties' collective bargaining agreement that performance standards must accurately evaluate performance and procedures must be applied which reasonably ensure the accurate evaluation of performance. The Arbitrator also concluded that management had failed to comply with the agreement obligation that factors affecting performance that are beyond the control of the employee be considered. Moreover, the Arbitrator ruled that but for these erroneous applications of the dictates of the collective bargaining agreement, the recommended promotion of the grievant would originally have been approved. Thus, as his award, the Arbitrator effectively ordered the grievant promoted retroactively to June 10, 1984, with backpay.

III. EXCEPTIONS

In one of its exceptions, the Agency contends that the award is contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596, and section 7106(a) of the Statute. In support the Agency essentially maintains that the sole basis for the award of a retroactive promotion and backpay was the Arbitrator's determination that but for management's failure to comply with the parties' collective bargaining agreement with respect to the appraisal of the grievant's case production as not qualifying him for promotion, his recommended promotion would originally have been approved. In this respect the Agency first argues that this determination as to the appraisal of the grievant's performance is contrary to section 7106(a) because it negated legitimately established performance standards. The Agency further argues that consequently such determination cannot constitute the required finding under the Back Pay Act that the grievant was affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action which directly resulted in a loss of pay and that accordingly the award of a retroactive promotion and backpay is deficient.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

In Bureau of Engraving and Printing, U.S. Department of the Treasury and Washington Plate Printers Union, Local No. 2, IPDEU, AFL-CIO, 20 FLRA No. 39 (1985), and Bureau of Prisons, Department of Justice and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 148, 21 FLRA No. 15 (1986), the Authority discussed in detail the role of an arbitrator in resolving disputes pertaining to performance appraisal matters. Specifically, on the basis of section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute, providing for management's right to direct employees and to assign work, and on decisions of the Authority and the courts, the Authority stated that an arbitrator may not determine that a grievance directly challenging an agency's identification of job elements or establishment of performance standards is grievable or arbitrable. The Authority further stated that an arbitrator also may not render an award substituting his or her judgment concerning job elements and performance standards for that of management. Bureau of Prisons, slip op. at 3-4; Bureau of Engraving and Printing, slip op. at 2.

In both of these cases, the Authority also acknowledged that there is a duty to bargain under section 7106(b)(3) on appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by management's exercise of its authority under section 7106(a), e.g., actions which adversely affect employees taken under the performance standards established by management. Bureau of Prisons at 4; Bureau of Engraving and Printing at 3 (both cases citing American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 3 FLRA 784, 791-92 (1980) (proposal 5)). In OPM, Washington the Authority specifically found that the proposal in dispute merely established a general, nonquantitative requirement by which the application of critical elements and performance standards established by management may subsequently be evaluated in a grievance by an employee who believes that he or she has been adversely affected by the application of management's performance standard to him or her. To that extent, the Authority held that the proposal was within the duty to bargain. The Authority noted that under such a proposal an employee against whom management takes disciplinary action for unacceptable performance may, in a grievance of such action pursuant to section 7121(e) of the Statute, raise the issue of whether the performance standards as applied to him or her meet the contractual requirements, i.e., the arbitrator of such a grievance would simply determine if the standard established by management as applied to the grievant complied with the "fair and equitable" requirements of the parties' agreement. In finding that proposal to be within the duty to bargain, the Authority specifically noted that such an arrangement did not affect management's discretion to determine the content of performance standards nor did it authorize an arbitrator to substitute his or her judgment for that of management as to the content of the standards. The Authority has distinguished between proposed grievance procedures subjecting management's identification of critical elements and establishment of performance standards to arbitral review and grievance procedures relating only to the application of such elements and standards to an individual employee through the appraisal process. Bureau of Prisons at 4; Bureau of Engraving and Printing at 3.

Consistent with these holdings and the Statute, the Authority in both cases specifically advised that an arbitrator may resolve an employee's grievance claiming to have been adversely affected in his or her performance appraisal by management's application of the established standards. The Authority further advised that in resolving the grievance, the arbitrator properly may determine that management applied the established standards in violation of an appropriate, nonquantitative review criterion, and the arbitrator to that extent may sustain the grievance. The Authority also stated that in sustaining the grievance, an arbitrator as a remedy may direct that the grievant's work product be properly evaluated by management or where appropriate that the grievant's work product as appraised by management be granted the rating to which entitled under the established elements and standards. The Authority cautioned, however, that the arbitrator may not substitute his or her judgment for that of the agency as to the appropriateness of elements and standards established by management. The Authority further cautioned that the arbitrator may not conduct an independent evaluation of an employee's peformance under the elements and standards established by management and may not substitute his or her own judgment for that of management as to what that employee's performance evaluation and rating should be. Bureau of Prisons at 5-6; Bureau of Engraving and Printing at 4.

In this case the Authority finds that in sustaining the grievance, the Arbitrator improperly substituted his judgment for that of the Agency as to the appropriateness of the established standards. Specifically, the Authority concludes that in substantial part, the Arbitrator's determination that management's appraisal of the grievant's case production failed to comply with the parties' agreement is contrary to management's right under the Statute to establish the content of performance standards. Thus, to the extent that the Arbitrator's determination that the agreement was violated is based on his finding that the performance standards were "unfair," because they failed to account for the grievant's situation of having to write for six judges and of primarily having prepared affirmations, see Award at 12, the Authority finds that determination deficient because it constitutes an improper review by the Arbitrator of the content of the standards and a substitution by the Arbitrator of his judgment for that of management as to the proper content of those standards. See, e.g., American Federation of Government Employees, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, 16 FLRA 948 (1984)(proposal 3). Such determination by the Arbitrator was not limited to an assessment of the application of the established standards to the grievant. Instead, it constituted an improper inquiry by the Arbitrator into whether the established standards themselves made appropriate allowances for the grievant's situation. See, e.g., American Federation of Government Employees, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, 19 FLRA No. 9 (1985)(proposal 3). Consequently, to this extent the Arbitrator's determination that management's appraisal of the grievant's case production was contrary to the parties' agreement is contrary to the Statute. That determination therefore cannot constitute the finding required in support of the award of retroactive promotion and backpay that the grievant was affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action.

Moreover, by in effect determining that the grievant's performance would have been rated at least as "fully satisfactory," the Arbitrator improperly conducted an independent evaluation of the grievant's performance. As indicated in the discussion of Bureau of Prisons and Bureau of Engraving and Printing, it was appropriate for the Arbitrator to have determined that the appraisal by management of the grievant's production violated the collective bargaining agreement because in applying the established performance standards to the grievant, management failed to consider factors that were beyond the control of the grievant. However, in the circumstances of this case, the Arbitrator was in no manner authorized to determine, as he in effect did, that the grievant's case production would have been rated at least as "fully satisfactory" but for the violation of the agreement. As noted, management's appraisal of the grievant's numerical case production was based on the statistical determination of the grievant's average daily production and the rating of that production under the established standards. The Authority finds that this is not the type of appraisal that would permit an arbitrator in an objective, nondiscretionary, and essentially mechanistic manner to determine without an independent evaluation that an aggrieved employee was entitled to a different rating under the established standards. See Bureau of Prisons at 5-6; Bureau of Engraving and Printing at 4. In this case, the Arbitrator, in determining that the grievant's performance would have been rated higher but for the violation of the agreement, necessarily conducted an independent evaluation of the grievant's case production performance under the established standards and clearly substituted his judgment for that of management as to what the grievant's performance evaluation should have been. Although the Arbitrator properly could have ordered the grievant reevaluated on finding that management had failed to consider factors that were beyond the control of the grievant, the Arbitrator instead independently determined what that rating would have been. Compare Bureau of Prisons (in which case the arbitrator expressly examined the performance standards and the regulatory definition of outstanding performance, specifically evaluated the application of the standards to the grievant's performance as described in his performance appraisal, and, as his award, determined in accordance with the definition of outstanding performance and management's own appraisal of the grievant's performance that the grievant was entitled under the established standards to a rating of "outstanding" as to three of his job elements). For these reasons, the Arbitrator's determination that the grievant's performance would have been rated higher is also contrary to the Statute and the decisions of the Authority. Such determination cannot constitute the finding required in support of the award of retroactive promotion and backpay that but for the violation of the collective bargaining agreement by management in failing to consider factors affecting performance beyond the grievant's control, the recommended promotion of the grievant originally would have been approved.

V. DECISION

The Authority finds that the Arbitrator's determination with respect to the appraisal of the grievant's quantitative case production performance is deficient as contrary to management's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. Consequently, such determination cannot constitute the requisite finding that the grievant was affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action which directly resulted in the withdrawal or reduction in the pay, allowances, or differentials that the grievant otherwise would have earned or received. The Authority further finds that the award of a retroactive promotion and backpay is contrary to the Back Pay Act. Therefore, paragraphs 1-2 of the award, constituting the Arbitrator's determination with respect to management's appraisal of the grievant's performance and the award of a retroactive promotion and backpay, are struck from the award and the following language substituted:*/

> For the period in dispute, management shall reevaluate the grievant's numerical case production under the quantitative case-processing element of the GS-11 hearing specialist position considering factors that were beyond the control of the grievant. After reevaluating the grievant's performance, management shall take whatever action may be appropriate concerning the denial of the recommendation that the grievant be promoted to GS-11 as of June 10, 1984.

DIGEST NOTES

Three weeks advance notice of a change in working conditions provided the union with ample time to request additional information and to invoke the processes of FSIP, the Judge held in a decision adopted by the Authority. Thus the activity did not violate § 7116(a)(1) and (5) for not providing the union with specific details of the change when the activity announced its intention to implement a 7-day workweek for employees in the paint hanger. The union was aware of the urgency of the change in order to meet the activity's work load and the union was also aware of management's strong opposition to negotiating a 15 minute break period. Thus, impasse in negotiations was clearly foreseeable and the union had a reasonable opportunity to invoke the processes of FSIP. The union failed to either request postponement of the implementation for the purpose of seeking the services of FSIP; indicate that filing with FSIP was imminent; or directly invoke the services of FSIP. Therefore the Judge held that the activity did not violate § 7116(a)(1) and (6). (Case No. 6-CA-40375)

The union did not waive its right to negotiate the impact and implementation for an extraordinary change in overtime when it negotiated a contract provision concerning ordinary overtime matters. The contract provision treats ordinary concerns of overtime assignments such as equal opportunity for overtime, overtime rosters, advance notification of scheduled overtime, a ten minute paid break, etc. However, a management initiated change that required all employees to work five 10 hour days and a sixth day of eight hours each week was an extraordinary change from past practice over which the activity was required to bargain. Thus, the Judge held that the activity violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) by failing to negotiate procedures management would observe and appropriate arrangements for adversely affected employees. DIGEST NOTES

The fact that an employee who was very active in union affairs was not selected for a position opening and was later terminated in a reduction-in-force, does not establish a violation of § 7116(a)(1), (2) and (4) absent any indication of anti-union animus, the Judge held in a decision adopted by the Authority. Although the union representative had a higher performance rating than the other employee who was selected for the new position, the Judge credited the activity's testimony that the other employee was selected based on her greater desire for the position. There was no evidence of anti-union animus. On the contrary, management adjusted the employee's workload to accommodate her union duties; the employee was rated "highly satisfactory" for the latest period; when RIFed, she was granted a 45 day extension to perform union representational duties; subsequent to her RIF, she was reemployed as a clerk-typist. Her position, that of an Occupancy Clerk, was eliminated due to an overall reduction in staff levels and an effort by management to establish a more versatile staffing arrangement by using Program Aides which could perform Occupancy Clerk work as well as other types of work.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is negotiable which requires an annual increase in the "horse allowance" of $ 5.00 per pay period that is paid to employees who are required to provide a horse, trailer, and other related equipment in order to travel by horseback into remote areas where they administer the Tick Eradication Program. The payment is neither compensation nor a fringe benefit. Rather the "horse allowance" is designed solely to reimburse employees for expenses they would not have had but for the agency's requirement. The proposal concerns only one item in an already existing program. Although the proposal might require an additional $50,000 for the "horse allowance", the alleged increase in cost represents only 1.7% of the total budget for the program and an even smaller percentage of the budget for the activity which administers the program. Consequently, the proposal does not interfere with management's right under § 7106(a)(1) to determine its budget.

DIGEST NOTES

An agency may not impose a condition that those employees whose participation had been deemed necessary by the Authority at unfair labor practice hearings either had to wear their official work uniform in order to receive official time or had to participate at the hearings in an annual leave status. The Respondent had instructed those employees who had been subpoenaed by the Authority to testify in a pending unfair labor practice hearings to wear the appropriate military work uniform if they would be participating on official time. Otherwise employees were instructed to take annual leave if they wished to wear civilian clothing. Once the participation of an employee has been deemed necessary by the Authority in any phase of any proceeding before the Authority, there is no discretion in the agency to determine whether or not an employee should be on official time. Therefore, the agency interfered with the employees' protected rights under the Statute in violation of section 7116(a)(1).

The Authority, contrary to the Respondent's contention, concluded further that the Judge found, not a § 7131 violation, but rather, a § 7116(a)(1) premised upon the requirements of § 7131(c) and the provisions of § 7132 concerning the issuance of subpoenas. Thus, as such matters were fully litigated at the hearing with all parties having an opportunity to present evidence and witnesses relevant to their positions, the Respondent was not denied due process in respect to that portion of the Judge's decision.

DIGEST NOTES

A provision is negotiable that would prevent an agency from giving priority consideration for promotion to an employee unless that employee filed a grievance or complaint, or priority consideration was ordered by a higher authority such as OPM, EEOC, or the FLRA. Under 5 U.S.C. § 2301(b)(1) and its implementing regulation [5 C.F.R. § 335.103], a agency is required to make selections for promotion according to merit. Although the provision would prohibit the agency from granting priority consideration to certain employees, the provision would not prevent the agency from considering those employees as candidates for promotion and, consequently, making selections for promotion according to merit. Additionally, under FPM chapter 335, Appendix A, § A-4(c), a employee "may be given priority consideration" in corrective actions taken to correct an erroneous promotion. While the agency has the discretion to grant priority consideration to an employee under the FPM, it also has the discretion not to grant priority consideration. Accordingly, the provision is not contrary to the cited FPM section.

DIGEST NOTES

An agency has no duty to bargain over a proposal that requires agency management to fill positions by assigning employees to building locations based strictly on their preference and seniority. The right to assign employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A) encompasses management's discretion to establish the qualifications and skills necessary to perform the duties generally assigned to the position as well as such job-related individual characteristics as judgement and reliability and to determine whether an employee meets those qualifications. Proposals regarding the selection or assigning of employees based upon seniority and/or preference are nonnegotiable where such proposals do not provide that management retains the discretion to limit the selection to qualified employees. The Authority adopted the Judge's decision that since the union's proposal that the assigning of employees to building locations to meet staffing needs would be based on their preference and seniority did not limit such assignments to qualified employees, as determined by management, the proposal interfered with the agency's discretion to determine which employees to assign and was inconsistent with § 7106(a)(2)(A). Therefore, the Respondent did not violate the § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when it refused to bargain on the proposal.

DIGEST NOTES

Section 7102 affords employees the same right to engage in solicitation and distribution of literature on behalf of candidates for union office as they would have if they were acting on behalf of or in opposition to representation by a labor organization generally. The identity of the officers and representatives of a labor organization substantially influences the character and nature of the labor organization as a collective bargaining agent. The right to solicit or distribute literature on behalf of candidates for union office is interwoven with the right to campaign for or against an exclusive representative. An employer violates the protected rights of employees under § 7102, and therefore also § 7116(a)(1), when in the course of an intra-union election it enforces overly broad no-solicitation/ no-distribution rules, absent a showing of disruption of agency operations or unusual circumstances. Moreover, the union may not waive employees' statutorily protected rights by agreeing to restrictive provisions in the parties' collective bargaining agreement. Thus, the Authority concluded that when management imposed rules, although embodied in the parties' agreement, that were not necessary to protect against disruption of the agency's operations, the agency interfered with employees' rights under § 7102 in violation of § 7116(a)(1).

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in Case No. 6-CA-40375. No exceptions were filed with regard to such finding. The Judge further found that the Respondent had engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in Case No. 6-CA-40376, and recommended that the Respondent be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions with regard to the Judge's Decision in Case No. 6-CA-40376, and the General Counsel filed an opposition to the Respondent's exceptions.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings and conclusions,[1] and his recommended Order as amended.[2]

[1] In adopting the Judge's conclusion herein, the Authority finds it unnecessary to address any implication in his decision as to the effect of an invocation for assistance of the Federal Service Impasses Panel.

[2] In agreement with Respondent's exception pertaining to the clarity of the Judge's recommended Order, the Authority has amended the Order to specifically conform to the Judge's findings.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered in Case No. 6-CA-40376 that the United States Department of Defense, Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Oklahoma City Air Logistics Center, Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Requiring all employees in the paint hangar to work regularly scheduled overtime on normal workdays and days off without first notifying the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 916, the designated agent of the employees' exclusive representative, of the decision and affording it the opportunity to negotiate concerning the procedures that management will observe in effecting such scheduling and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the scheduling.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request, negotiate with the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 916, the designated agent of the employees' exclusive representative, concerning the procedures that management will observe in requiring all employees in the paint hangar to work regularly scheduled overtime on normal work days and days off and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such act.

(b) Post at its Tinker Air Force Base facility copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commander, Oklahoma Air Logistics Center, Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that said Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region VI, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the allegations in Case No. 6-CA-40375 be, and they hereby are, dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This matter arose under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq.

Upon unfair labor practice charges filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 916 (herein referred to as the Union) the General Counsel of the Authority, by the Regional Director for Region VI, issued Complaints against the United States Department of Defense, Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Oklahoma City

Air Logistics Center, Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma (herein referred to as Respondent). The Complaint in Case No. 6-CA-40375 alleges Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by failing and refusing to bargain with the Union on the impact and implementation of its decision to extend its employees' workweek from four to seven days at the Tinker Air Force Base paint hanger. The General Counsel also contends Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (6) of the Statute by allegedly failing and refusing to allow the Union reasonable time to invoke the proceedings of the Federal Service Impasses Panel (FSIP) before implementing the extended workweek. In Case No. 6-CA-40376 the General Counsel alleges Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute when it required employees to work 10-hours a day for five days and 8-hours on the employees' first regular day off and failed and refused to bargain with the Union on the impact and implementation of that action.

A hearing on these matters was conducted in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma at which all parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to adduce evidence, call, examine and cross-examine witnesses and argue orally. Briefs were filed by Counsel for the General Counsel and Respondent and have been carefully considered.

Upon the entire record in this matter, my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor and from my evaluation of the evidence, I make the following:

Findings of Fact

At all times material herein the American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE) has represented a national consolidated unit of various of Respondent's Air Force Logistics Command employees and AFGE Local 916 has been the union representative at the Oklahoma City Air Logistics Center. Respondent and AFGE are parties to a master collective bargaining agreement covering employees in the national consolidated unit and Respondent and Local 916 are parties to a local agreement executed July 5, 1983 which supplemented the master agreement.

Case No. 6-CA-40375

Sometime prior to January 12, 1984 Respondent was experiencing problems keeping up with the work load in its Tinker Air Force Base paint hanger.[1] The paint hanger work load was not being met on the standard five day week despite employees working substantial overtime due, at least in part, to "some continuous problems with work flow." Indeed, there was

"some talk" about the possibility of contracting out work if the work load requirements were not met. Similar problems in 1981 and 1982 precipitated Respondent putting paint hangar employees on a seven day workweek. Accordingly, on January 12, Freddie Demerson, Chief of the Aircraft Paint Unit, sent the following letter to James Edgar, Local 916 Division Steward:

> "1. This letter is to inform you, in accordance with Article 33 of the 1979 Master Labor Agreement, as amended, of Management's intent to implement a seven day work week in the Aircraft Paint Hangar, MABPCB, Bldg 2280. The proposed effective date of this action is 1 Feb 84.
> "2. Change is necessary because of facility deficiencies which remain after the buildings airflow modification. A continuing high workload in B52, A7, KC135 and MISTR paint projects causes work staging which can best be managed on a 7 day work sheet.
> "3. Should you wish to negotiate, contact the undersigned within 5 calendar days of the date of receipt of this letter."

By letter dated January 17, 1984 from Edgar to Demerson the Union made a demand to bargain on the seven day workweek and requested a meeting to "clarify the issues involved." After stating, "there will be no implementation of this policy until negotiations are completed in accordance with Public Law," Edgar suggested the parties meet on January 20. Demerson's January 19 reply to Edgar viewed the Union's demand to bargain unaccompanied by written proposals "as an attempt to circumvent the spirit and intent of article 33 of the (master agreement)."[2] Demerson went on to suggest meeting January 23 but required the Union to submit written proposals by the close of business that day if it wished to negotiate on the "impact" of the decision.

On January 24, 1984 Edgar and Chief Steward Phil Porter met with Demerson, Labor Relations Specialist Richard Schamahorn and Section Chief Wesley Bynum. The Union presented a five page list of negotiation proposals to management. During the meeting, which was in response to the Union's request for clarification of the issues, supra, management explained why Respondent felt the seven day workweek was necessary and the Union's list of proposals were discussed item by item. The meeting lasted approximately one hour at the conclusion of which management indicated to the Union that it would prepare a counterproposal.[3]

[2] Section 33 of the master agreement sets forth procedures dealing with negotiations during the term of the agreement. Section 33.03 pertains to negotiations at the activity level and requires the Union to submit written proposals to the activity within five calendar days after notification "if circumstances permit that much time."

On February 17, 1984 Respondent delivered its counterproposal to the Union which contained, inter alia, a rotation schedule of employees' days off. Around this time Division Steward Edgar was relocated to another Division and Steward Frederick Jaynes assumed responsibility for negotiations on behalf of the Union. By letter of February 27, 1984 Demerson indicated the agency had not received a response to its counterproposal of February 17 and set a meeting with the Union for February 29. Demerson further stated that failure to attend the meeting would result in immediate implementation of "management's final offer."

The parties met again on March 1, 1984.[4] Jaynes represented the Union and Respondent was represented by Schamahorn, Demerson and another supervisor. Jaynes asked for and received a copy of Respondent's February 17 counterproposals which he did not have and Jaynes presented Respondent with a copy of the Union's latest proposals. According to Jaynes' testimony, when he was handed his copy of Respondent's one page list of proposals Schamahorn said "something to the effect that they need to get this thing on the road so we can either sign them or they were going to implement it." Jaynes "jokingly" told Schamahorn that he knew Jaynes wouldn't sign anything without studying it first. Jaynes asked Schamahorn if he wasn't going to read the Union's latest proposals indicating that some changes from the original proposals had been made. Jaynes then noted his objection to a management proposal which provided: "Employees shall have two consecutive scheduled days off except as mutually agreed between the employee and the employee's supervisor." Jaynes felt that it was the Union's right to negotiate on such a matter, not the employees'. Schamahorn agreed to strike the proposal and "change it." According to Jaynes, Schamahorn agreed to at least read the Union's proposals but added that if the Union" . . . didn't buy theirs, then . . . it was over with.

[3] Porter recalled the meeting went on for about 15 minutes and Schamahorn estimated the meeting was an hour to an hour and a half long. Both witnesses testified that the meeting covered management's explanation of its reason for going to a seven day workweek and a review of the Union's proposals. Considering the amount of material covered in this meeting, I find Schamahorn's recollection as to the duration of the meeting to be more reliable.

[4] Jaynes was unable to attend the meeting on February 29 and the meeting was rescheduled.

They were going to implement it. We were at impasse, so to speak." Jaynes testified that the meeting ended after about 30 minutes.

According to Schamshorn, who denied the "take it or leave it" statement attributed to him by Jaynes, during the March 1 meeting management reviewed the Union's two and a half page list of proposals submitted at that time and compared them with the Union's prior proposals. The Union's main concerns remained the same as during the parties' first meeting: a 15 minute break period; how employees were to be rotated; and days off. Schamshorn told Jaynes that the Union's proposals were regressive and unless there was some movement on it, the parties were at impasse.[5] Before concluding the meeting management had a letter to Jaynes typed which indicated Respondent considered the Union's latest proposals to be a regression from its original proposals; that management felt the parties were at impasse; and Respondent intended to implement its last proposal on March 19, 1984. Schamshorn estimated the meeting lasted an hour.

Jaynes contacted the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service (FMCS) for assistance on March 8 and the parties met on Wednesday, March 14, 1984 under FMCS auspices. At this meeting Jaynes represented the Union and Respondent was represented by Neal Hamilton, an Employee Relations Officer, and Demerson who arrived about 10 minutes after the meeting began.[6] The Union submitted its third set of proposals, which modified its previous proposals somewhat, and Respondent resubmitted its prior proposals. At the request of Mr. Libby, the FMCS mediator, the parties discussed the proposals. Agreement was reached on various proposals even on some that management had previously rejected. The wording of some proposals was changed to facilitate mutual acceptability. However, there was no agreement on the subject of "days-off" and the Union's demand for a 15 minute break. The Union indicated it could not sign any agreement unless it contained a 15 minute break period for employees and management took the position that it was not obligated to entertain the 15 minute break proposal and indeed refused to discuss it. Management contended that break periods were the subject of lengthy discussions when the parties local agreement was negotiated in 1983 and the terms of that agreement remain in effect until the contract was renegotiated or the parties mutually agreed to modify the contract.[7] When it became apparent that the parties were not going to reach agreement on the disputed issues Demerson said to Hamilton "well, there is no point in going any further here. Implement it Sunday as scheduled and we will bite the bullet." Mediator Libby indicated it would be futile to continue and the meeting which lasted about an hour, ended.[8] On Sunday, March 18, at 10:30 p.m., the beginning of the "grave-yard" shift, Respondent implemented the seven day workweek in the paint hanger. The extended workweek schedule was in effect for about nine months and thereafter the parties resumed their prior workweek.

[5] Schamshorn "felt" that during the January 24 meeting with Edgar and Porter there was agreement that the Union would modify their demands and, in recognition thereof, management's current proposals were drawn up to address what they percieved to be the Union's concerns.

[6] Jaynes and Hamilton testified as to what occurred at this session. The following account is a composite of their credited testimony. While their versions of what transpired differed somewhat, neither specifically contradicted the essentials of the others' testimony.

According to Jaynes, when Respondent previously extended the workweek in 1981 and 1982, supra, proposals were exchanged and ". . . the agency did the same thing . . . they did this time."

Case No. 6-CA-40376

On March 28, 1984 Respondent notified paint hanger employees that due to increased workload, effective March 31 all employees would start working a 10 hour mandatory workday and employees would be required to work an 8 hour workday on the employees' first regular day off. Previously, while employees were frequently required to work overtime on regular workdays and on days off, employees were scheduled to work eight hours a day, five days a week with two days off.

The Union received no prior notification of this change. On March 28, 1984 Local 916 made a demand that Respondent bargain with it on the change. On March 30 Respondent refused to bargain with the Union on the matter. Respondent took the position that it retained the right to determine overtime requirements and stated: "When overtime must be worked the oppertunity [sic] to work will be offered in accordance with Article 14 of the (Local) Supplement." Article 14 provides:

[7] The Supplemental Agreement provides for a 10 minute paid break at the beginning of any overtime period of 2 hours or more immediately following an 8 hour shift and a 10 minute break during the middle of each period of 4 consecutive hours of overtime work, infra.

[8] When asked why he didn't subsequently contact the FSIP, Jaynes testified: "Well, I was really a little bit unfamiliar with that procedure, and I didn't see how we could come and solve an impasse when they were already doing it."

"SECTION A: The opportunity for overtime assignments will be rotated equitably, at the lowest supervisory or work crew level, among employees, by grade, who have the ability to perform the tasks for which overtime is required. Overtime work will not be assigned as a reward or penalty. When an employee has been loaned or detailed to the same organization in excess of 30 consecutive days the employee will be removed from the overtime rosters of his/her assigned organization on the 31st day and placed in the appropriate spot on the overtime roster of the organization to which loaned or detailed.

"SECTION B: Supervisors will maintain overtime rosters (Appendix), based on service computation date, to record all overtime that employees work, decline or for which they lack the necessary ability, to assure that each employee receives an equal opportunity for overtime assignment. Employees' abilities, as they relate to overtime assignment, will be discussed with employees upon request and a written record of the discussion will be placed in the employees 971 file. Rosters may be reviewed, upon request by the Steward who has been designated as representative for the particular organization. Separate rosters will be established for overtime on scheduled work days and for overtime on scheduled days off of employees.

"SECTION C: When employees are scheduled to work overtime on their regular days off, they will be normally given a minimum of one and one half work day's notice before the overtime is scheduled to begin. The designated Division Steward, upon request, will be informed of overtime worked, the number of hours and employees involved, and the abilities required for the work performed.

"SECTION D: Overtime work will be compulsory only when organizational requirements must be met. When non-volunteer employees have been compelled to work four consecutive scheduled days off, the appropriate Branch Steward may request and will be granted a meeting with the appropriate Branch Chief to discuss the situation. If the problem is not resolved it may be elevated to the next supervisory level. Upon presentation of valid documentation to the supervisor, an employee may request exemption from compulsory overtime for reasons of health, education, hardship of religion. The supervisor, upon consideration of the provided documentation and the need to have the employee on duty, may grant the exemption. When overtime requirements cannot be met by volunteers within the supervisory area or work crew, the supervisor responsible for the work to be performed may solicite [sic] volunteers from other supervisory work areas or work crews.

"SECTION E: Employees will be allowed a ten minute paid break at the beginning of any overtime period of two hours or more immediately following an eight hour shift. Employees will be allowed a paid ten minute break during the middle of each period of four consecutive hours of overtime work.

"SECTION F: Employees called in to work outside of, and unconnected with, their basic work week shall be paid a minimum of two hour's pay, regardless of whether they are required to work the entire two hours. Normally an employee shall not be required to stand by or perform make-work routine duties awaiting the elapse of the entire two hours.

"SECTION G: When employees cannot take advantage of their turn for overtime work assignment opportunities due to required military meetings they shall not be counted as having declined to work overtime. In such situations employees will retain their priority on the overtime rosters provided they submit to their supervisors, upon their return to duty, a statement of attendance signed by the proper military authority.

"SECTION H: When it is determined through the grievance or arbitration process that the grievant, or grievant's have been denied the opportunity for overtime work in accordance with this article, the sole remedy shall be payment for the overtime. Such payment is limited to the grievant or grievant's that were improperly bypassed and cannot exceed the number of employees worked in violation of this article."

Thereafter, the 10 hour workday was put into effect as scheduled. In practice employees were generally required to work both of their days off and all requests for exemptions from working overtime were denied by management except for reasons of family death or emergencies.

The record reveals that prior to March 1984 substantial mandatory overtime work had been required of employees in the paint hanger since 1982 and both before and after the March 1984 change numerous grievances were filed with regard to overtime assignments and Respondent's alleged misuse of Article 14. At the time of the hearing paint hanger employees were no longer working the mandatory 10 hour workday. However, about half of the work crew was still required to work on Saturdays or Sundays due to the lack of sufficient volunteers for such assignments.

Testimony was also received at the hearing that in the Accessories Division, also a component within Respondent's Maintenance Directorate,[9] Union representatives were notified by a Branch Chief in June 1984 and November 1984 that mandatory overtime schedules would be imposed. On both occasions management representatives of the affected units negotiated with Union representatives on the impact of the decision without raising Article 14 of the Local Supplement as a bar to negotiations.

Discussion and Conclusions

Counsel for the General Counsel alleges Respondent violated the Statute by: (1) failing to give the Union on January 12, 1984 information sufficient for it to negotiate on the impact and implementation of the 7 day workweek; (2) failing to give the Union sufficient opportunity to invoke FSIP procedures prior to implementation after impasse on the 7 day workweek negotiations; and refusing to bargain with the Union on the impact and implementation of the 10 hour workday. Respondent contends: the Union had adequate notice of the 7 day workweek; the Union had ample opportunity to seek the services of the FSIP before implementation of the 7 day workweek; and the 10 hour day was an overtime issue covered by the provisions of Article 14 of the parties local agreement negotiated in July 1983.

Case No. 6-CA-40375

In reject the contention that Respondent failed to give the Union adequate information to negotiate on the 7 day workweek. Management notified the Union of the change almost three weeks before it was to be implemented thereby giving the Union ample opportunity to make known its desires on the matter. The Union, by letter dated five days after the date of the notice of the change, indicated an interest in negotiating on the change and requested clarification of the issues. One week later the parties met and an explanation was given to the Union and the Union's proposals were received and discussed item by item. The change was not implemented on February 1 as scheduled and, after receiving Respondent's counterproposals on February 17, the parties met again for discussions on March 1 when an implementation date of March 19 was set. The parties had still another discussion on March 14 before implementation finally occurred on March 19. It is clear from the record that at no time did Respondent fail to provide the Union with any and all information the Union needed or sought for its discussion with Respondent prior to implementation of the change. Nor do the facts reveal the Union was in any way harmed by not getting full details of the change until such time as they sought such data. Accordingly, in the circumstances herein I find Respondent committed no violation of the Statute by its failure to give the Union specific details of the change when it announced its intention to implement a 7 day work week on January 12.

[9] The Maintenance Directorate is composed of various Divisions and is comprised of approximately 10,000 employees.

I further conclude that Union had reasonable opportunity on the facts herein to invoke the processes of the FSIP prior to implementation of the 7 day workweek. The Union was aware that Respondent attached some urgency to the change. Despite employees working substantial amounts of overtime, the paint hanger was not keeping up with its workload. The change was first announced on January 12 to take effect on February 1, 1984. However, implementation was postponed while negotiations on the subject took place, as the Union requested. The Union also knew on March 1 that the implementation of the change was rescheduled for March 19. Indeed management explicitly indicated their concern to "get this thing on the road." However, at no time after such notification did the Union request postponement of the implementation date. On March 14 the Union again was told that since the parties were still at impasse, implementation would occur on Sunday (March 18). Thereafter the Union failed to either request postponement of the implementation for the purpose of seeking the services of the FSIP, indicate that filing with the FSIP was imminent, or directly invoke the services of the FSIP.

Further at all three meetings the Union's main concern included obtaining a 15 minute break period which Jaynes revealed at the March 15 meeting management would have to agree to if a final agreement on the matter was to be achieved. The Union was well aware of management's strong opposition to such a provision. Thus, impasse in negotiations was clearly foreseeable and in such circumstances the Union should have been alerted early on in negotiations that resolution of the matter would in all likelihood involve the services of the FSIP.

While the time between the March 14 meeting and implementation of the change in workweek at 10:30 p.m. on March 18 was indeed short, under all the circumstances herein I conclude Respondent did not violate the Statute by implementing the 7 day workweek herein. Cf. U.S. Customs Service, 16 FLRA No. 31 (1984) and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland, 16 FLRA No. 32 (1984).

With regard to Respondent's unilateral implementation of the 10 hour work day, while employees had been frequently working overtime prior to March 31, 1984, the overtime assignment thereafter was a substantial departure from the nature and scope of the past practice. Thus, after the change all employees were regularly scheduled to work 13 hours a week overtime.

Respondent contends that Article 14 of the Local Supplement controls the assignment of overtime and a method of dealing with problems arising from overtime assignments. However, Article 14 does not by its terms specifically indicate that all matters concerning the assignment of overtime and questions arising therefrom are governed by that provision. Rather, Article 14 appear to treat ordinary concerns regarding ordinary overtime assignments and questions which might arise in those circumstances. By its notice of March 28 Respondent created an extraordinary situation by dramatically changing overtime from frequent assignment to placing all employees on a regular schedule of substantial overtime. Such conduct gave rise to the possibility of significant questions as to the procedures management would observe in implementing its decision and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected thereby. For example, the Union might wish to have proposals considered concerning whether employees would be permitted to work both scheduled days off on one week and be off both days on the following week; whether agency paid physical examinations might be provided after a certain time due to the exhausting nature of extensive overtime for a sustained period; and due to the abnormal amounts of overtime required, whether disciplinary procedures and standards might be modified.

In sum, Respondent essentially urges that with regard to overtime matters, by executing Article 14 the Union waived its right to negotiate on any matter relating to the assignment of overtime. The Authority has consistently held that a waiver can be established only by clear and unmistakable conduct. Internal Revenue Service (District, Region, National Office Units), 16 FLRA No. 124 (1984); Library of Congress, 9 FLRA of 21 (1982). Article 14 does not by its terms waive all Union interest in overtime assignments nor does it address the question herein. In the absence of other evidence bearing on the application of Article 14, and considering the extraordinary imposition of overtime herein, I conclude Respondent was obligated to negotiate with the Union on the procedures management would observe in implementing its decision and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected thereby. Accordingly, by its failure and refusal to negotiate with the Union I conclude Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.[10]

[10] I reject the request that as part of the remedy for Respondent's conduct disciplinary actions which may have occurred during the period Respondent failed to bargain over the change be rescinded. Imposing this remedy would be tantamount to ordering a return to the status quo ante for remedy purposes and in my view, the record herein does not support such a remedy. Cf. Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604 (1982) and Headquarters, 77th U.S. Army Command, Fort Totten, New York, 9 FLRA 762 (1982).

In view of the entire foregoing I recommend the Authority issue the following:

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered in Case No. 6-CA-40376 that the United States Department of Defense, Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Oklahoma City Air Logistics Center, Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Requiring employees in the paint hanger to work regularly scheduled overtime on normal workdays and days off without first notifying the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 916, the employees' exclusive representative, of the decision and affording it the opportunity to negotiate concerning the procedures that management will observe in effecting such scheduling and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the scheduling.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request, negotiate with the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 916, the employees' exclusive representative, concerning the procedures management will observe in requiring employees in the paint hanger to work regularly scheduled overtime on normal work days and days off and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such act.

(b) Post at its Tinker Air Force Base facility copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commander, Oklahoma Air Logistics Center, Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that said Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director of Region VI, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Federal Office Building, 525 Griffin Street, Suite 926, Dallas, Texas 75202, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been take to comply herewith.

It is further ordered that the allegations in Case No. 6-CA-40375 be, and hereby are, dismissed.

Charging Party

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority because of exceptions filed by the Charging Party to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The issue concerns whether the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (2) and (4) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by failing and refusing to select employee Flora Tewksbury for the position of Program Aide and by issuing a Notice of Reduction-in-Force separating her from the position of Occupancy Clerk because of her protected union activity. The General Counsel filed no exceptions to the Judge's dismissal of the complaint.

II. Background Facts

As the pertinent facts in this case are fully set forth in the Judge's Decision, they will be discussed only briefly. The Charging Party has been certified as the exclusive bargaining representative of a unit of all non-professional employees and a unit of all professional employees who are assigned to the Respondent Activity. As found by the Judge, it is undisputed that Flora Tewksbury was engaged in protected union activities while employed by the Respondent and that much of her representational duties, including a request to management for information and the filing of charges as well as a grievance, occurred between June 1983 and the spring of 1984. The Respondent does not deny its awareness of such activities. Further, as admitted by the Respondent in its answer, Tewksbury was not selected on April 30, 1984, for the position of Program Aide and was issued on or about May 23, 1984 a Notice of Reduction-in-Force separation from the position of Occupancy Clerk.

III. Judge's Decision

The Judge found that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1), (2) and (4) of the Statute either by abolishing an Occupancy Clerk position held by unit employee Tewksbury which resulted in her receiving a Reduction-in-Force notice terminating her employment or by failing to select the employee for a Program Aide position. More particularly, with respect to the separation of the employee from the Occupancy Clerk position, the Judge, noting that no anti-unionism had been shown to exist and that there had been no showing that any acts of interference or coercion were directed against Tewksbury by the Respondent, found that the evidence did not establish that such position was abolished because of the employee's protected activities. Concerning the non-selection of the employee for the Program Aide position, the Judge similarly found that the evidence did not show that Tewksbury's non-selection was discriminatory under the Statute, noting in particular that management in fact accommodated the employee in the performance of her representational functions. Therefore, the Judge concluded that the General Counsel had not made out a prima facie case of discrimination under section 7116(a)(1), (2) and (4) of the Statute, and recommended dismissal of the complaint in its entirety.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The Charging Party's exceptions basically take issue with the Judge's findings of fact and credibility determinations and disagree with his conclusions. Thus, in its brief, the Charging Party argues that given the conflict in testimony of Respondent's witnesses and the Judge's failure to resolve it or to set forth any basis for his credibility determinations, the testimony of Respondent's witnesses should have been disregarded. No exceptions to the Judge's decision dismissing the complaint were filed by the General Counsel.

V. Analysis

The Charging Party excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Judge. The demeanor of witnesses is a factor of consequence in resolving issues of credibility, and the Judge has had the advantage of observing the witnesses while they testified. The Authority will not overrule a Judge's resolution with respect to credibility unless a clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence demonstrates that such resolution was incorrect. The Authority has examined the record carefully, and finds no basis for reversing the Judge's credibility findings. Accordingly, in agreement with the Judge and based on his credibility resolutions and rationale, the Authority concludes that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1), (2) and (4) of the Statute by abolishing an Occupancy Clerk position held by unit employee Tewksbury or by its failure to select that employee for a Program Aide position.

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions to that Decision, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order. The Authority therefore finds, in agreement with the Judge, that General Counsel has failed to establish a prima facie case of discrimination by the Respondent as to employee Tewksbury based on her protected union activity under section 7116(a)(1), (2) and (4) of the Statute and will order the dismissal of the complaint.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 4-CA-40341 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a Complaint and Notice of Hearing issued on July 27, 1984 by the Regional Director for the Federal Labor Relations Authority, Region IV, a hearing was held before the undersigned on September 24, 1984 at Columbia, South Carolina.

This case arose under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq. (herein called the Statute). It is based on a first amended charge filed on July 20, 1984 by American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (herein called the Union) against Department of Housing and Urban Development, Columbia Area Office, Columbia, South Carolina (herein called Respondent).

The Complaint alleged, in substance, that (a) on or about April 30, 1984 Respondent failed and refused to select Flora Tewksbury for the position of Program Aide (Typing), (b) on or about May 23, 1984 Respondent issued Flora Tewksbury a Notice of Reduction-in-force separation from the position of Occupancy Clerk. It was further alleged that Respondent engaged in such conduct because (a) Tewksbury engaged in activities on behalf of the Union, (b) Tewksbury provided information and/or gave testimony in proceedings before the Authority - all in violation of Section 7116(a)(1), (2) and (4) of the Statute.

Respondent's Answer, dated July 27, 1984, admitted that Tewksbury was not selected on April 30, 1984 for the position of Program Aide. It further admitted that on or about May 23, 1984 the agency issued the employee a Notice of Reduction-in-force separation from the position of Occupancy Clerk. However, Respondent denied it engaged in such conduct for the reasons alleged in the Complaint, as well as the commission of any unfair labor practices.

All parties were represented at the hearing. Each was afforded an opportunity to be heard, to adduce evidence, and to examine as well as cross-examine witnesses. Thereafter, briefs were filed with the undersigned which have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record herein, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings and conclusions:

Findings of Fact

1. At all times material herein the Union has been certified as the exclusive bargaining representative of a unit of all non-professional and a unit of all professional employees, with certain exclusions, who are assigned to Department of Housing and Urban Development, Columbia Area Office, Columbia, South Carolina, the Respondent herein.

2. At all times material herein the Union and the Respondent have been parties to a collective bargaining agreement covering the employees in the aforesaid units. This agreement was, by its terms, effective from September 7, 1983 for a period of three years.

3. Respondent's Housing and Management Division is comprised of three branches: Assisted Housing Management, Loan Management, and Property Disposition. The Director of the Housing and Management Division is William H. Nixon; Chief of the Loan Management Branch is Arlena Esposito; and her Deputy is David Ball.

4. The Loan Management Branch is composed of three divisions: multi-family, which monitors HUD insured and Farmers Home Insurance projects; single-family, which monitors single-family homes that have HUD mortgages; Title 1, handling defaulted mobile homes and home improvement loans.

5. Record facts show that prior to September-October, 1982 there were two voucher clerks in the Loan Management Branch. The voucher clerk[1] examines vouchers submitted from projects, reviews tenant applications which accompany vouchers, and advises the project manager re adjustments to be made to vouchers. Since one of the voucher clerks felt the work was boring, supervisor Esposito suggested that the only way to solve that problem would be to set up a Program Aide position.

6. Two Program Aide jobs were established by management in the fall of 1982. The Program Aide position calls for more versatility than is demanded of a voucher clerk. In addition to typing, the Program Aide orders inspections on projects, examines financial statements, fills out computer forms, and keeps time and attendance records. Esposito asked Flora Tewksbury, who was a voucher clerk in the Loan Management Branch, whether she would be interested in a Program Aide job if three of such positions were established. Record testimony reflects that Tewksbury declined the offer, saying she liked doing Section 8[2] vouchers.

7. While the record does not reflect the exact dates, Tewksbury testified she was secretary-treasurer of the Union in 1983. In June, 1983 the president of the Union herein, Marie W. Vevito, designated Flora Tewksbury as Alternate Principal Representative - 2nd Alternate, on behalf of the Union. For the next few months Tewksbury used very little official time. Upon assuming her role as alternate representative this employee became more active in union affairs. On August 10, 1983 she filed two different charges against Respondent alleging a failure to furnish information to the Union; on September 19, 1983 Tewksbury filed a charge against the agency herein alleging a unilateral reassignment of two employees without bargaining as to the impact and implementation thereof with the Union;[3] on October 6, 1983 she filed a charge, amended thereafter, to allege a denial by Respondent to Tewksbury of a key card for access to the premises to perform government related work;[4] on March 16, 1984 Tewksbury filed a charge against Respondent alleging a refusal to participate in mediation sessions during contract negotiators. In addition to filing the foregoing charges, Tewksbury filed a grievance against management on November 22, 1983 for not having received an "outstanding" rating on her performance during the past year.

[1] Also designated as "Occupancy Clerk".

[2] This involved a very large funding program.

[3] This charge resulted in the issuance on October 31, 1983 of a Complaint by the Regional Director, Region IV against Respondent.

[4] This charge resulted in the issuance on December 14, 1983 of a Complaint by the Regional Director, Region IV, against Respondent.

8. In June, 1983 Tewksbury used about 10% of official time for representational activities. Having become more active thereafter, her use of such time advanced to 25% - 30% through April, 1984.[5] Tewksbury's workload was adjusted by management, at her request, on July 21, 1983, November 8, 1983 and December 12, 1983 due to her representational duties.[6]

9. In a memorandum dated November 23, 1983 the Atlanta Regional Office directed the Columbia Area Office to reduce its staff by 15 positions. Three positions to be abolished were to be from the Loan Management Branch, and the decision as to which ones would be abolished was left to Area Director Nixon.

10. After due consideration Nixon decided to recommend abolishing a position from the technical field in both single and multi-family sections. He decided not to cut the Program Aide position since it was deemed a versatile one. Nixon recommended cutting the Occupancy Clerk (Voucher) position since that clerk just handled vouchers. He concluded that such a decision would be the best for the office as others could be called upon to handle voucher work.

11. Two months later the Columbia area office was permitted to increase its staff by five positions. It was decided to reestablish the two Loan Specialist positions (single and multi-family), and to add a financial analyst as well as a lead clerk. Nixon adhered to his decision[7] to abolish the Occupancy Clerk position due to a change in the workload. Esposito, who conferred with Nixon in this regard, testified that Tewksbury had been able to handle the bulk of Section 8 vouchers. However, new projects were coming in and some rent supplement projects were converting to Section 8. The Loan Management Branch was being assigned 47 projects from Assisted Housing, which were all Section 8, and there was a total of over 200 Section 8 projects. There was no way for one person to handle all Section 8 vouchers. Thus, Esposito suggested establishing a third Program Aide, assigning one to two Loan Specialists. This would not involve crossing lines which occurred between a Program

[5] On November 4, 1983 Tewksbury was designated by the Union President as "Principal Union Representative".

[6] Under Article 7, Section 7.04 of the collective bargaining agreement Tewksbury, in her position as "Principal Office Representative" was entitled to 50% official time where the office has 100 or more employees.

[7] Although the decision to abolish the Occupancy (Voucher) Clerk was made in December, 1983, the plan to do so - as well as reestablish other positions - was not approved till April 2, 1984. The actual notice of a reduction-in-force from this position was issued on May 23, 1984.

Aide and the Occupancy Clerk.[8] The Program Aide would do everything in a certain defined territory for the loan specialist, including the vouchers that fell in that territory.

12. On March 11, 1984 Yvonne Hall, Director of Administration, called Alice Taylor, Vice-President of the union a former President thereof. She asked the union official how the latter felt re staffing of new positions. Taylor insisted it should, as in the past, be merit staffed. Nixon, who intended to transfer Tewksbury laterally into this position, was informed it should be so filled. In accordance therein Hall sent over to Nixon the "best qualified" list of employee for the additional position of Program Aide. Two applicants were qualified: Flora Tewksbury and Margaret Brasington, who had been a Program Aide in Assisted Housing previously. Neither the rating sheets nor the supervisory appraisals for these employees was sent to Nixon. Further, Taylor was not consulted re the selection of either employee for the third Program Aide position.

13. Both Esposito and Nixon interviewed Tewksbury for the Program Aide position.[9] During the interview the employee mentioned she was ready for a change; that she really liked working in the Architectual and Engineering Branch. When asked if she wanted the Program Aide job, Tewksbury replied that she would take it but was anxious to gain experience in another section. Nixon stated he had to know if Tewksbury was interested in the position, and the employee said she did want to be considered.

14. The record reflects that Nixon knew Tewksbury was rated "highly satisfactory"[10] in regard to her performance evaluation; that he assumed she and Brasington were equal in ability and had about the same rating. Based on the recommendation of Esposito and Ball, the Director decided to choose Brasington for the Program Aide position. Esposito testified she did not make a recommendation but that Nixon made the selection.[11] Nixon was advised by Esposito that Brasington was very

[8] Although Nixon testified he expected Tewksbury would bump someone when this position was abolished, no other job existed on her competitive level.

[9] While the testimony of the participants varies to some extent re the particulars of the discussion, the undersigned sets forth the credited version of the relevant portion.

[10] This employee was so rated during the period January 1982 - October 31, 1982, and for the period November 1, 1982 - October 31, 1983.

[11] While Nixon testified he was not present during the interview of Brasington, Supervisor Esposito testified she conducted the interview with the Director. Inasmuch as Nixon was made aware, in either instance, positive about wanting the job, and he concluded that Tewksbury had not shown a decisive interest in same.

Nixon testified that both Tewksbury and Brasington were capable of handling the Program Aide position. The record indicates management did not reject Tewksbury on the ground that she was not qualified for the job. The Director testified he chose Brasington because of her eager desire, in contrast to Tewksbury, to become a Program Aide. He also testified it was his "intention to transfer Tewksbury laterally into that position. However, the Union reminded him it should be merit staffed. Further, that Tewksbury's union activities played no part in his non-selection of that employee for the position.

15. In and about April-May, 1984 Tewksbury was detailed to a GS-5 Title I clerical position where she remained until June 23. At the time of the detail Taylor inquired of Esposito as to the reason therefor. Taylor testified that Esposito informed her they needed a full-time person to do vouchers; that it was Nixon's decision. While Esposito testified in accord with Taylor that she told the latter the decision was made by Nixon, the supervisor denied saying they needed a full-time person to do vouchers. Record facts do show that Esposito did ask Taylor, during Tewksbury's detail, how the latter was doing; that Taylor suggested the supervisor could check the basket which contained the finished work. Further, Esposito on a particular occasion inquired whether Tewksbury was on union time and Taylor replied she had no knowledge thereof.

16. On May 23, 1984 Tewksbury received a notice stating she would be "riffed" on June 23. However, Respondent granted her a 45 day extension until August 11 to perform certain Union duties involving representation of employees. Subsequent to her being "riffed" on August 11, Tewksbury was reemployed as a GS-4 clerk-typist in the Property Disposition Branch.

Conclusions

The sole issue herein is whether Respondent abolished Flora Tewksbury's position as Occupancy Clerk, as well as refused to select her for a Program Aide position, because of her protected concerted activity in violation of Section 7116(a)(1), (2) and (4) of the Statute.

General Counsel contends that, based on the record, a prima facie case of discrimination has been established. It insists that, as set down in Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Boston Air that Brasington was more positive in wanting the position than Tewksbury - which was the basis for his selection of the former - I do not find it necessary to resolve this particular conflict in testimony, or whether an explicit recommendation was made by Esposito.

Route Traffic Control Center, Nashua, New Hampshire, 11 FLRA No. 67, the requisite factors to show such discriminatory action have been proven. Thus, it is asserted that Tewksbury was engaged in protected activities, i.e. requesting information from management, filing of unfair labor practice charges, filing a grievance against the agency, acting on behalf of unit employees; that such activities were known to Respondent; and that such conduct was the basis for the action taken by management toward said employee.

Record facts make it quite clear, and it is undisputed, that Tewksbury engaged in protected concerted activity while employed by Respondent. Further, the record reflects that much of her representational duties, including a request of management for information and the filing of charges as well as a grievance, occurred between June, 1983 and the spring of 1984. Moreover, it cannot be gainsaid that management was aware of Tewksbury's activities as a union representative, and there is no denial by Respondent thereof. In respect to the basis for (1) the abolition of this employee's position as Occupancy Clerk, and (2) the failure to select her as a third Program Aide, the parties are in substantial disagreement. Conceding that direct evidence of illegal motivation in the form of an admission, declaration or the like, may not be apparent herein, General Counsel submits that all the events warrant an inference of a discriminatory motive. It is insisted that the various inconsistencies in the testimony of Respondent's witnesses demonstrate the pretextual nature of the justification advanced by the agency for its conduct toward Tewksbury.

(1) In respect to the termination of the Occupancy Clerk position held by this employee, the decision to abolish it stemmed from the directive issue on November 23, 1983 by the Atlanta Regional office. While it was left to Area Director Nixon to choose the positions to be eliminated, the record indicates he abolished two loan management positions as well as that of the Occupancy (Voucher) Clerk. Pointing to the fact that the Loan Management positions were reestablished by Nixon but not that of the Occupancy Clerk, it is argued that such omission is significant in light of the increased representational duties performed by Tewksbury at that period. Further, it is contended that Esposito admitted she needed every one of her complement of employees and could afford no cuts; that she needed someone to do vouchers 100% of the time.

While it is true that the increase in Tewksbury's "protected activity" was contemporaneous with the decision to abolish her position, it does not follow that management decided to eliminate her job due to such activity. No evidence appears in the record to support a conclusion that either Esposito or Nixon opposed Tewksbury's union activities or took steps to frustrate her representational functions. Contrariwise, management adjusted the employee's workload to accommodate her union duties in July, November and December of 1983. Moreover, Respondent had rated Tewksbury as "highly satisfactory" for the latest period, i.e. November 1, 1982 - October 31, 1983. The record reflects that, in agreement with Esposito, Director Nixon concluded it would be more efficient to establish a third Program Aide in lieu of having a voucher clerk. Further, management decided a better staffing arrangement called for having the Program Aide perform the duties of said clerk and assign each Aide to two Loan Specialists with a defined territory. One may disagree with Respondent's judgment in this respect and deny that the alleged versatility of the Program Aide warrants the addition of a third such position in place of the Occupancy Clerk. However, it does not lie with others to substitute their views in regard to efficiency of operations. Unless it is shown that Respondent's action was a pretext for discriminatory motivation, one cannot fault an employer for its determination concerning such operation.

Despite the fact that Tewksbury became more active after June, 1983 in performing her union duties, including the filing of a grievance and unfair labor practice charges, I do not believe it has been shown that her job as Occupancy Clerk was abolished because of such activities. No anti-unionism has been shown to exist, nor were any acts of interference or coercion directed against Tewksbury. The evidence does not support an inference that her position was eliminated as a result of said employee's union activities, and I conclude that Respondent did not discriminate against Tewksbury by reason of such elimination in violation of the Statute.

(2) Regarding Respondent's non-selection of Tewksbury as a Program Aide in April, 1984, General Counsel adverts to several factors in support of the contention that there was discriminatory motivation therefor. It is maintained, inter alia, that said employee was very well qualified for the position and capable of handling that work; that, while Margaret Brasington was rated "satisfactory," Tewksbury had a higher performance rating; that Nixon had intended to transfer Tewksbury laterally before the Union insisted upon merit staffing; that Esposito and Nixon differed as to whether the latter was present at Brasington's interview; and that said employee was selected on a subjective basis.

Under other circumstances, which are not present herein, such factors might be more persuasive in concluding that the failure to select Tewksbury as a third Program Aide was illegally motivated. None of the foregoing, however, militates against the conclusion that Respondent did not base its decision in this regard upon Tewksbury's union or protected concerted activities. Thus, while not disputing that said employee was well qualified for the Program Aide position, management insists it chose Brasington because she showed more interest in wanting the job. The record supports the fact that, although Tewksbury asked to be considered for the position, she did evince a desire to gain experience in another area of the work. Moreover, in 1982 this employee declined the Program Aide position when asked if she'd be interested in the event an additional Aide was established. It is true that management did not examine the performance appraisals and ratings in making a selection. However, one cannot substitute his judgment for that of the employer in choosing the applicant even though the basis be subjective in nature.

Unless sufficient evidence appears in the record which reflects significant anti-union animus, the undersigned would be reluctant to conclude that the basis for Respondent's selection of Brasington, albeit deemed to be subjective, is a pretextual one. As heretofore indicated, Respondent never interfered with Tewksbury's representational functions and, in fact, accommodated them. It has not been shown that management - despite having knowledge of her activities - resented Tewksbury's union activities or ever attempted to limit or restrain the employee in performing them. Under these circumstances I am not persuaded that Nixon's selection of Brasington over Tewksbury for the third Program Aide position was due to the latter's concerted activities. Accordingly, I conclude that the failure to so select Tewksbury has not been shown to be discriminatory under the Statute.

Having concluded that General Counsel has failed to make out a prima facie case of discrimination under Section 7116(a)(1), (2) and (4) of the Statute, based on the allegations herein, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following:

Case No. 0-NG-916

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Agency

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and raises issues concerning the negotiability of a single Union proposal.[1]

II. Union Proposal

> Employees covered by the agreement and required by management, as a condition of employment, to furnish horse and necessary equipment to be used on the job will be entitled to an allowance of: $115.00 per pay period the first year of the agreement, $120.00 per pay period the second year of the agreement, $125.00 per pay period the third year of the agreement, for its use.

[1] The Agency has requested permission to file an additional submission in this case. However, the Authority finds that no additional submissions are necessary and, pursuant to section 2424.8 of its Rules and Regulations, denies the Agency's request.

> The effective date for payment of this allowance shall be the first full pay period following the beginning of FY 83.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal violates its right to determine its budget under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute. The Union contends that the Agency has not met its burden under the test established by the Authority in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604 (1980), enforced as to other matters sub nom. Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 995 (1982).

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Department of Agriculture (the Agency) conducts the Tick Eradication Program (TEP), which is designed to prevent the reestablishment of cattle fever ticks in the United States. The Agency determined that in order to implement the TEP employees would need to travel by horseback into remote areas. Employees who work in this program are therefore required, as a condition of their employment, to maintain a horse, trailer, and other related equipment. At the time this negotiability dispute arose, the Agency was reimbursing those employees for costs incurred in complying with this requirement at a rate of $110.00 per pay period.[2] This payment is designed solely to reimburse employees for expenses they would not have had but for the Agency's requirement. For this reason, the "horse allowance" is not a part of an employee's wages. That is, it is not a part of the compensation paid to employees in exchange for their labor. For the same reason, it is not a fringe benefit. Matters such as retirement, life and health insurance are not reimbursable employee expenses, but are part of a total compensation package paid to employees.

The Union's proposal requires the Agency to increase the rate of reimbursement of the "horse allowance" to $125.00 over a period of three years. As to the Agency's contention that the proposal is nonnegotiable under section 7106(a)(1), the Authority held in Wright-Patterson that in order to demonstrate that a union proposal directly interferes with management's right to determine its budget it is necessary for the agency either to show that the proposal prescribes the programs and operations to be included in the agency's budget or the amount to be allocated for them, or to make a substantial demonstration that the anticipated increase in costs is significant and unavoidable and is not offset by compensating benefits. It is clear from the record that the proposal concerns a program which already exists, i.e., TEP, and is currently funded by the Agency's budget. Moreover, the proposal does not prescribe the amount to be allocated to this program. Rather, it concerns the cost of only one item within that program, i.e., the "horse allowance."3/ Under the first part of the Wright-Patterson test, therefore, the proposal does not directly interfere with the Agency's right to determine its budget.

[2] Agency Statement of Position at 1-2; Union Reply to Agency Statement of Position at 2.

Under the second part of that test, the Agency has not demonstrated that implementation of the Union's proposal would result in a significant increase in costs. In particular, while the Agency claims that the proposal would require an additional $50,000 for the "horse allowance"4/ that figure represents only 1.7% of the total budget for the TEP5/ and an even smaller percentage of the budget of the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, which administers the program.6/ It is not necessary, therefore, to consider whether the alleged increase in costs is outweighed by compensating benefits. Consequently, in this respect also the Union's proposal does not directly interfere with the right of the Agency to determine its budget under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute. 3/ See Attachment to Agency Statement of Position.

4/ Agency Statement of Position at 2.

5/ Attachment to Agency Statement of Position. The "Grand Total" of all costs for the TEP is stated therein as $2,809,068. The alleged increase in costs for the "horse allowance" of $50,000 is 1.7% of the total. As the Union points out, it is unclear whether that increase in costs represents the additional amount needed for the first fiscal year or for all three fiscal years covered by the proposal. If it is for all three years, of course, the increase is even less significant.

6/ See Appendix To The Budget For Fiscal Year 1983 For The Animal And Plant Health Inspection Service attached to the Union Reply to Agency Statement of Position.

Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 747, 764-66 (1980) (an agency had not demonstrated significant and unavoidable increased costs based upon the percentage increase in costs to that agency for the fiscal year). See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3477 and Commodity Futures Trading Commission, 21 FLRA No. 18 (1986) (Authority held that even if a proposal required the agency to budget larger amounts for its incentive awards program, the agency had not shown that such an increase would not be offset by compensating benefits).

Since the Agency has not demonstrated that the Union's proposal would directly interfere with its right to determine its budget, the proposal is within the Agency's duty to bargain under the Statute.

III. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning the proposal.[7]

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued his Decision in the above-entitled proceeding finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommending that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision; the General Counsel filed a brief answering Respondent's exceptions; the Charging Party filed an opposition to Respondent's exceptions and cross-exceptions to the Judge's Decision; and the Respondent filed an opposition to the Charging Party's cross-exceptions.[1]

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order.

[1] Part 2423 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, entitled "Unfair Labor Practice Proceedings," has no provision for the filing of an "opposition to cross-exceptions" and the Respondent did not seek leave to file such opposition pursuant to section 2429.26 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. Consequently, the Authority has not considered herein the Respondent's opposition to the Charging Party's cross-exceptions to the Judge's Decision.

In agreement with the Judge, we conclude that "[o]nce the participation of an employee has been deemed necessary by the Authority in any phase of any proceeding before the Authority, . . . [t]here is no discretion in the agency to determine whether or not an employee should be on official time . . . ." Respondent's imposition of the condition that those employees whose participation had been deemed necessary either had to wear the appropriate military work uniform in order to receive official time or had to participate at the hearing in an annual leave status, interfered with the protected rights of those employees under the Statute in violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.[2] Contrary to the Respondent's contention, the Judge did not find that the Respondent violated section 7131(c). Rather, the record indicates that the Judge found a section 7116(a)(1) violation premised upon the requirements of section 7131(c) and the provisions of section 7132 concerning the issuance of subpenas. Such matters were fully litigated at the hearing with all parties having had the opportunity to present evidence and witnesses relevant to their positions.[3] Consequently, the Authority finds no merit in the Respondent's contention that it was denied due process in connection with this portion of the Judge's Decision.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 7118 of the Statute and section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the Authority hereby orders that the 162nd Tactical Fighter Group, Arizona Air National Guard, Tucson, Arizona shall:

[2] We find it unnecessary to pass upon the Judge's discussion regarding the duty status of employees participating in Authority proceedings in these circumstances.

[3] A violation of section 7116(a)(8) was not alleged.

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Requiring its employees to wear the military work uniform in order to be granted official time for participation in hearings before the Federal Labor Relations Authority when such participation has been deemed necessary by a designated agent of the Authority.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Provide official time to those employees whose participation in hearings before the Federal Labor Relations Authority on June 23 and 24, 1983 and March 9, 1984 had been deemed necessary by a designated agent of the Authority and make them whole for any annual leave utilized for that purpose.

(b) Post at its Tucson, Arizona facilities copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commander, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region VIII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This decision concerns an amended unfair labor practice complaint issued by the Regional Director, Region Eight, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Los Angeles, California against the 162nd Tactical Fighter Group, Arizona Air National Guard, Tucson, Arizona (Respondent), based on a charge filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2924, AFL-CIO (Charging Party or Union). The amended complaint alleged, in substance, that Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 5 U.S.C. § 7101 et seq. (the Statute), by instructing those employees who had been subpenaed by the Authority to testify in pending unfair labor practice hearings scheduled for June 24, 1983 and March 9, 1984 to wear the appropriate military work uniform if they would be participating while in an official duty status.

The complaint alleged that certain of the subpenaed employees attended the June 24, 1983 hearing in an annual leave status and civilian clothing rather than submit to the directive.

Respondent's answer denied any violation of the Statute.

A hearing was held in Tucson, Arizona. The Respondent, Charging Party, and the General Counsel were represented and afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce relevant evidence, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and file post-hearing briefs. Based on the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

At all times material, Respondent has been, and is now, an agency within the meaning of section 7103(a)(3) of the Statute. Respondent is a Fighter Training Group located at the Tucson International Airport approximately eight miles from downtown Tucson. It has a full time military mission to provide combat air training for student pilots and military training for its air members. It is made up of approximately 1,112 military members of which approximately 410 are also Air National Guard technicians. The technicians' civilian employment status is conditioned on maintenance of military membership in the Air National Guard.

The Charging Party is a labor organization within the meaning of section 7103(a)(4) of the Statute. It has been certified as the exclusive representative of an appropriate bargaining unit at Davis-Monthan Air Force Base, has negotiated a collective bargaining agreement with Davis-Monthan, and provides representation for unit employees at Davis-Monthan.

The Charging Party sought to represent a unit of employees of Respondent. A representation election was held on December 15, 1982. Following the election, objections to the election and unfair labor practice charges were filed. A hearing involving Respondent and the Charging Party was scheduled for June 23, 1983 in Case Nos. 8-CA-30098, 8-CA-30099, and 8-RO-30002 before an Administrative Law Judge of the Authority. Respondent, through then Major Willie D. Kyzer, became aware of this hearing on or about March 1983 and assumed that some of the employees would be called to testify at the hearing.

Prior to the hearing, on or about June 7, 1983, some employees of Respondent, including Jon C. Webb, Ernesto Lopez, and Patrick McIntyre, were subpenaed for the hearing by the Regional Director, Region 8 at the request of Deborah S. Wagner, attorney for the General Counsel. The subpenas stated on the their face that "any witness who is employed by the Federal Government shall be granted official time. . . ." Respondent had knowledge of these subpenas and, in addition, received a letter from Wagner dated June 7, 1983 which stated, in part, as follows:

> As you know, an unfair labor practice hearing on the above-referenced matter will be held on June 23, 1983. The following individuals may be called by the General Counsel as witnesses in this matter:
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | Robert Herreras | Jimmie M. North |
> | Pat McIntyre | Joe Tyrone |
> | George Leflohic | Jon C. Webb |
> | Ernesto W. Lopez | Tom Pachos |
> In accordance with Section 2429.13 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority, an employee who participates as a witness in an unfair labor practice proceeding is entitled to official time to prepare for and participate in the hearing. Kindly notify the supervisor involved that these individuals are entitled to official time for such purposes.

Upon receipt of the June 7, 1983 letter, Respondent researched the matter to determine what the status and entitlements would be for employees participating in the hearing. The attire of National Guard technicians is governed by the National Guard Bureau's Technician Personnel Publications. The applicable regulation, TPR 300, 302.7-6, 17 March 1981, provided, in part, as follows:

> Technicians in the excepted service will wear the military uniform appropriate to their service and federally recognized grade when performing technician duties and while attending courses of instruction at military service schools and at the National Guard Professional Education Center, Camp Robinson, North Little Rock, Arkansas. They will comply with the standards contained in the appropriate regulations pertaining to grooming and wear of the military uniform (AF 600-20, AR 670-5, AR 670-30, AFR 35-10). Official time will not be used for changing to or from the military uniform at the work site. When an Adjutant General determines that the uniform is inappropriate for certain positions or situations, he will forward his determination to the Chief, National Guard Bureau for review. If warranted, the CNGB will authorize other appropriate attire. These provisions apply to all technicians required to be members of the National Guard as a condition of employment, unless otherwise specifically excluded by a negotiated labor agreement. The following situations have been determined to be inappropriate for wear of the military uniform and do not require prior approval:

a. Travel by commercial or private transportation while in an official travel status.

b. While attending courses of instruction in a technician status at locations other than military institutions.

c. Labor organization representatives engaged in labor agreement negotiations.

d. Participation as data collectors during the conduct of Federal Wage System surveys.

e. While serving as hearing examiners.

f. During pregnancy.

No request was made to the Chief, National Guard Bureau by the Union, General Counsel, or Respondent for a waiver from compliance with TPR 300, 302.7-6. Securing a waiver through the procedure outlined in the regulation takes a considerable amount of time.

On June 21, 1983, supervisor Ernie Pain called employees Pat McIntyre, Ernie Lopez, and George Leflohic together and informed them that they must wear the blue uniform to the FLRA hearing. On June 22, 1983, Respondent, by Major Willie D. Kyzer, sent a letter to all of Respondent's employees who were participating in the hearing, including those noted above who had been the subject of FLRA Attorney Wagner's letter and subpenaed by the Authority at the request of the General Counsel to appear on behalf of the General Counsel and the Charging Party. The letter provided, in part, as follows:

> Individuals are authorized official duty status while participating in the hearing plus reasonable travel time. Individuals in an official duty status will be required to wear the appropriate military work uniform. Time cards will reflect individual personnel present for duty.

Some of the employees subpenaed by the Authority objected to the wearing of the uniform to the hearing as unfair, insulting, and on the basis that technicians called for jury duty in the past were not required to wear uniforms. They complained to Respondent and to an attorney for the General Counsel, FLRA. Respondent was aware as early as February 1983 that some of its employees objected to the wearing of the military uniform. Col. John M. Harnett, Respondent's Air Commander, responded to a request that employees be allowed to attend the hearing in civilian clothing. He stated that he was required to comply with the regulations and could not authorize employees to attend the hearing in civilian clothing. However, in recognition of some of the deep-seated feelings, he stated that he had no objection to employees taking annual leave for the hearing and wearing clothing of their choice. He stated that if they did so, they would not be entitled to receive any entitlements. Employees, including those deemed necessary by the General Counsel and subpenaed to appear on behalf of the General Counsel and the Charging Party, were required to appear in uniform in order to receive official time.

On June 23 and 24, 1983, the following individuals appeared and/or testified as witnesses for the General Counsel on behalf of the Charging Party concerning alleged unfair labor practices by Respondent: Roberto Herreras, George Leflohic, Ernesto W. Lopez, Jimmie M. North, Jon C. Webb, Pat McIntyre, Tom Pachos, and Joe Tyrone. On June 23, Herreras, Lopez and Webb appeared in civilian attire while the remainder wore military uniform. On June 24, Herreras, Lopez, North, Webb, and Tyrone wore civilian clothing and the rest wore their uniforms.

On June 23 and 24, 1983, Webb, while under subpena for the hearing, took annual leave rather than appear in military attire. Webb testified for the General Counsel.

On June 23, 1983, Lopez, while under subpena for the hearing, reported to work at 6:15 a.m. At 9:00 a.m. he was put on annual leave status because he changed to civilian clothes for the hearing. Lopez drove to the hearing and remained at the hearing all day, but was not called to testify.

On June 24, 1983, Lopez reported directly to the hearing in civilian clothing. He remained at the hearing all day, as instructed, but was not called to testify. Lopez was also in annual leave status on June 24.

On June 23, 1983, McIntyre, while under subpena for the hearing, also reported to work at 6:15 and worked up until 9:00 a.m. At this time, he changed from his fatigues to dress blues and reported to the courthouse. McIntyre wished to wear civilian clothing, but did not have any annual leave at the time. McIntyre did not return to work as the hearing lasted until 5:00 or 5:30 p.m. On June 24, 1983, McIntyre reported directly to the hearing, as instructed, where he remained for the remainder of the day. McIntyre testified for the General Counsel.

On March 8, 1984, Respondent, by supervisor Pain and Lt. Col. Kyzer, told McIntyre and Lopez that they would have to adhere to the June 22, 1983 Kyzer letter for the March 9, 1984 hearing; that is, that the witnesses would have to wear military clothing in order to be paid official time, or they would have to take annual leave if they appeared in civilian clothes. At the March 9, 1984 hearing, Webb appeared in civilian attire, while McIntyre and Lopez appeared in uniform. Webb, Lopez, and McIntyre were all under subpena by the General Counsel of the Authority for the March 9, 1984 hearing.

As noted, Respondent's employees are required to wear their uniforms when performing day-to-day technicians duties. They are not authorized to wear their uniforms off-base unless they are going to work, coming home from work, or in emergency situations. They are also not authorized to wear their uniforms after duty hours for non-Guard functions at off-base bars or restaurants. Employees have served on jury duty in civilian attire while in a paid leave status. They can also attend women conferences and Hispanic conferences in civilian attire and have done so with the knowledge of Respondent. According to Respondent, employees can attend women and Hispanic conferences in civilian attire because they are attending courses of instruction while in a military technician status pursuant to the above noted provision of TPR 300.

Discussion, Conclusions, and Recommendations

The General Counsel and the Charging Party contend that Respondent's requirement that those employees subpenaed by the Authority to testify in a hearing wear the military uniform in order to receive official time interfered with, restrained, and coerced employees in the exercise of their statutory rights in violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute. The General Counsel and Charging Party maintain that the requirement was designed to stress to the employees that management exercised control over them even to the extent of telling them what they could and could not wear to an off-base hearing before the Authority where employees sought vindication of their rights. The General Counsel relies upon the timing of the issuance of the uniform instructions to employees, the alleged absence of a legitimate work-related purpose for the military uniform requirement, Respondent's alleged discriminatory application of its uniform regulation, and the reaction of the employee-witnesses to the military work uniform orders.

Respondent defends on the basis, inter alia, that technicians are required by National Guard Bureau regulations to wear the uniform while performing technician duties; testifying at an Authority hearing does not fall within one of the enumerated exceptions; the failure to request a uniform waiver pursuant to TPR 302.7-6 estoppes the claim; it would have been impossible to interfere with the employees' ability to unionize because of pending litigation; and the General Counsel failed to prove that the directives interfered with employee rights.

Section 7131(c) of the Statute[1] empowers the Authority to make determinations as to whether employees participating in proceedings before it shall be authorized official time. Section 7132 of the Statute also authorizes the Authority and its designees to issue subpenas requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses.[2] This language in the Statute has been implemented by the Authority in sections 2429.13 and 2429.14 of the Rules and Regulations.[3]

[1] Section 7131(c) provides:

(c) Except as provided in subsection (a) of this section, the Authority shall determine whether any employee participating for, or on behalf of, a labor organization in any phase of proceedings before the Authority shall be authorized official time for such purpose during the time the employee otherwise would be in a duty status.

[2] Section 7132 provides, in relevant part:

(a) Any member of the Authority, the General Counsel, or the Panel, any administrative law judge appointed by the Authority under section 3105 of this title, and any employee of the Authority designated by the Authority may--

(1) issue subpenas requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary or other evidence from any place in the United States[.]

. . . .

(c) Witnesses (whether appearing voluntarily or under subpena) shall be paid the same fee and mileage allowances which are paid subpenaed witnesses in the courts of the United States.

[3] Sections 2429.13 and section 2429.14 provides:

§ 2429.13 Official time.

If the participation of any employee in any phase of any proceeding before the Authority, including the investigation of unfair labor practice charges and representation petitions and the participation in hearings and representation elections, is deemed necessary by the Authority, the General Counsel, any Administrative Law Judge, Regional Director, Hearing Officer, or other agent of the Authority designated by the Authority, such employee shall be granted official time for such participation, including necessary travel time,

Once the participation of an employee has been deemed necessary by the Authority in any phase of any proceeding before the Authority, as here, that "employee shall be granted official time for such participation." There is no discretion in the agency to determine whether or not an employee should be on official time once that employee participation has been deemed necessary. Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Great Lakes Program Service Center, 10 FLRA 510, 512 (1982).

Respondent's position that all technicians participating in the hearing were performing technician duties and, therefore, were required to wear the military uniform in order to receive official time is mistaken. The record reflects that those technicians subpenaed by the Authority on behalf of the General Counsel participated for, or on behalf of, the Charging Party. They testified or appeared in support of allegations raised by the Charging Party concerning election objections and unfair labor practice charges. Section 7131 of the Statute was designed to authorize official time (paid time) for employees to engage in certain activities concerning labor-management relations. H.R. Rep. No. 95-1403, p. 58 (1978). As noted, Section 7131(c) empowers the Authority to make determinations as to whether employees participating for, or on behalf of, a labor organization in proceedings before the Authority shall be authorized official time for such purpose "during the time the employee otherwise would be in a duty status." This qualifying language strongly suggests that employees participating for, or on behalf of, a labor organization during such proceedings are not considered in a duty status. Nor is the conclusion warranted that employees so participating are acting in their "official capacity," "on the job," or on "official business" of the government. See Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, 104 S. Ct. 439 (1983).

as occurs during the employee's regular work hours and when the employee would otherwise be in a work or paid leave status. In addition, necessary transportation and per diem expenses shall be paid by the employing activity or agency.

§ 2429.14 Witness fees.

(a) Witnesses (whether appearing voluntarily, or under a subpena) shall be paid the fee and mileage allowances which are paid subpenaed witnesses in the courts of the United States: Provided, That any witness who is employed by the Federal Government shall not be entitled to receive witness fees in addition to compensation received pursuant to § 2429.13.

Respondent could not require the subpensed employees to take leave. An employee on official time is on paid time, entitled to his or her usual compensation, and is not in a leave status.

Respondent's imposition of the condition that those employees whose participation had been deemed necessary by the Authority either had to wear the uniform in order to receive official time or had to participate in the hearing in an annual leave status, interfered with the right of these employees to receive official time when their participation had been determined to be necessary by the Authority. Accordingly, Respondent's conduct violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute[4] as alleged. Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 15 FLRA No. 108 (1984); Department of the Treasury, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, 13 FLRA No. 94 (1983); U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Prison System, 10 FLRA No. 109, 10 FLRA 662 (1982); Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Great Lakes Program Service Center, 10 FLRA No. 90, 10 FLRA No. 510 (1982); Department of the Treasury, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, 10 FLRA No. 3, 10 FLRA 10 (1982); Department of the Air Force, Space Division, Los Angeles, California, 6 FLRA No. 78, 6 FLRA 439 at 451 (1980).[5]

Based on the foregoing findings and conclusions, it is recommended that the Authority adopt the following Order:

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the 162nd Tactical Fighter Group, Arizona Air National Guard, Tucson, Arizona shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Requiring its employees to wear the military work uniform in order to be granted official time for participation in hearings before the Federal Labor Relations Authority when such participation has been deemed necessary by a designated agent of the Authority.

---

[4] Section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute provides:

> (a) For the purpose of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for an agency--
> (1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter[.]

[5] In view of this disposition and the per se nature of the violation, it is unnecessary to consider the other contentions raised by the parties.

(b) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to affectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute.

(a) Provide official time to those employees whose participation in hearings before the Federal Labor Relations Authority on June 23 and 24, 1983 and March 9, 1984 had been deemed necessary by a designated agent of the Authority and make them whole for any annual leave utilized for that purpose.

(b) Post at its Tucson, Arizona facilities copies of the attached Notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commander and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Commander shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to 5 C.F.R. section 2423.30 notify the Regional Director, Region 8, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Los Angeles, California, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). The issue presented concerns the negotiability of the following provision contained in local agreements disapproved during review of those agreements by the Agency head under section 7114(c) of the Statute:[1]

Article 13, Section 15 (NORD)

Article 13, Section 17 (NCA)

> Once the deadline for filing a grievance or other complaint has passed an employee who has not filed a grievance or complaint or had one filed in their behalf may only be given priority consideration pursuant to an order issued by a higher level authority.

---

[1] The Agency withdrew its objections and the Union withdrew its appeal concerning the negotiability of one additional provision concerning placement of personnel. The Union also withdrew its appeal as to four additional provisions concerning performance evaluations, promotion ranking panels, and sick leave. These provisions will not be considered further here.

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the provision would prohibit it from granting priority consideration to employees adversely affected by an improper promotion action. It therefore concludes that the provision conflicts with the merit system principle set forth at 5 U.S.C. § 2301(b)(1) which provides that selection and advancement should be determined on the basis of "relative ability, knowledge, and skills, after fair and open competition", and the implementing OPM regulation set forth at 5 CFR 335.103. The Agency also argues that the provision would prevent it from applying the necessary corrective remedy for an improper promotion action as required by Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) chapter 335, Appendix A, section A-4(c).

The Union states that its intent with respect to the provision is to prevent the Agency from giving priority consideration for promotion to an employee unless that employee filed a grievance or complaint, or priority consideration was ordered by a higher authority such as OPM, EEOC, or FLRA. Union Reply Brief at 4-5. The Union contends that the provision is not inconsistent with either merit system principles or the FPM. The Union also argues that under Authority precedent the Agency should be prohibited from granting remedies to employees who have not filed timely claims.

III. Analysis

The Authority has held, on the basis of the legislative history of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978,[2] that a merit system principle such as section 2301(b)(1) may not be the basis for finding a proposal nonnegotiable unless the proposal is contrary to a law, rule or regulation implementing or directly concerning the principle. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO,

---

[2] The Joint Explanatory Statement of the Conference Committee for the Civil Service Reform Act stated:

> Unless a law, rule or regulation implementing or directly concerning the principles is violated (as under section 2302(b)(11)), the principles themselves may not be made the basis of a legal action by an employee or an agency.

S. Rep. No. 95-1272, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 128 (1978).

Local 987 and Headquarters, Warner Robins Air Force Logistics Command, Robins Air Force Base, Georgia, 8 FLRA 667, 676-77 (1982) (Union Proposal IV); Association of Civilian Technicians, Inc., Pennsylvania State Council and Adjutant General, Department of Military Affairs, Pennsylvania, 4 FLRA 77, 80-81 (1980). The implementing regulation cited by the Agency, 5 CFR 335.103, requires an agency to make selections for promotion "according to merit." However, contrary to the Agency's contentions, the provision would not interfere with the Agency's exercise of its discretion to make promotions on the basis of merit. In American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 and Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D.C., 6 FLRA 314 (1981), the Authority held that a proposal which would have required the agency to repromote employees who were involuntarily downgraded without personal cause at the first opportunity "except for good cause" was within the duty to bargain. The Authority found that the proposal merely required the agency to consider but not necessarily select the repromotion eligible employee. Thus, the proposal in that case by requiring the agency to give priority consideration to certain employees did not prevent the agency from considering or selecting candidates for promotion from other sources. See also National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue Service, 7 FLRA 275 (1981) (Union Proposals 2-4). Similarly, simply because the provision in dispute here would prohibit the Agency from granting priority consideration to certain employees in the unit of exclusive recognition represented by the Union herein, the provision would not prevent the Agency from considering those employees as candidates for promotion and, consequently, making selections for promotion "according to merit."

Additionally, we find that the disputed provision is not in conflict with Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) chapter 335, Appendix A, section A-4(c).3/ We therefore need not decide whether that section of the FPM is a Government-wide rule or regulation within the meaning of section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute which would bar negotiation on a conflicting union proposal. That FPM section provides that an affected employee "may be given priority consideration" and that agencies "may make the final determination" regarding corrective action. [Emphasis added]. Thus, under the FPM provision, an agency is given discretion concerning whether to grant priority consideration. To the extent that an agency has discretion with respect to a matter affecting the conditions of employment of employees represented by a union in a bargaining unit, that matter is within the agency's duty to bargain. National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 747, 759-60 (1980). Just as an agency has discretion to grant priority consideration, see Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, supra, the Authority finds that an agency also has discretion not to grant priority consideration as a remedy for a flawed promotion action. However, contrary to the Union's assertion, nothing in our precedent prohibits an agency from granting a remedy to an employee who has not filed a timely claim.

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, the Authority finds the provision to be within the duty to bargain.4/to require that the position be vacated, an employee who was not promoted or given proper consideration because of the violation (that is, an employee in the best qualified group who was not selected or an employee who should have been in this group but was not) may be considered for promotion to the vacated position before candidates are considered under a new promotion or other placement action.

(2) If the corrective action did not include vacating the position, an employee who was not promoted or given proper consideration because of the violation may be given priority consideration under a new promotion or other placement action. Agencies may make the final determination on how they will handle actions involving nonselected employees, except when actions are mandated by law or regulation.

4/ In finding the disputed provision to be within the duty to bargain, the Authority makes no judgment as to its merits.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall rescind its disapproval of the disputed provision, which was bargained on and agreed to by the parties at the local level.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practice alleged in the complaint, and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. The General Counsel filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision and a brief in support thereof.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order.*/

*/ In agreement with the Judge, and for the reasons set forth in his Decision, the Authority finds that the proposal at issue was outside the duty to bargain. In view of this disposition, the Authority finds it unnecessary to consider whether the Respondent would have violated the Statute in the circumstances of this case if such proposal had been found negotiable.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This decision concerns an amended unfair labor practice complaint issued by the Regional Director, Region Seven, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Denver, Colorado against the Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland (Respondent), based on a charge filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (Charging Party or Union). The complaint alleged, in substance, that Respondent violated sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 5 U.S.C. § 7101 et seq. (the Statute), on or about January 9, 1984 at its Mid-America Program Service Center, Kansas City, Missouri, by unilaterally changing the terms and conditions of unit employment. The complaint alleges that Respondent implemented "You and the Program Service Center," No. 83-56, regarding the use of unit employee preferences for the selection of work locations, without first reaching agreement or impasse with the union.

Respondent's answer admitted the jurisdictional allegations relating to the Respondent, Charging Party, and the charge, but denied any violation of the Statute. Respondent contends that it implemented the change after discharging its obligation to bargain as provided by the Statute and the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

A hearing was held in Kansas City, Missouri. The Respondent, Charging Party, and the General Counsel were represented and afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce relevant evidence, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and file post-hearing briefs. Based on the entire record,[1] including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

In 1975, after notice to and concurrence by the Union, the Mid-America Program Service Center (MAMPSC), an integral part and agent of Respondent, issued a circular, "You and the Program Service Center," No. 75-11, dated, May 5, 1975, which established a policy and implementation procedures to be used by selecting officials in granting employee preferences for work location assignment when filling identical positions simultaneously at the two work locations in use at that time, i.e., the Federal Office Building (FOB) and Crown Center. A few years later the Crown Center facility was abandoned and the functions previously performed there were moved to the Mid-Town Office Building (MTOB). Notwithstanding this transfer, the Circular No. 75-11 policy and procedures remained in force. The MTOB facility, housing about 600 of MAMPSC's 2800 employees, is seperate from the FOB and requires a shuttle bus trip of 15 to 20 minutes to reach. Unlike the FOB, the MTOB facility does not have cafeteria facilities, a credit union, nor close-in all-day parking.

The procedure, which was implemented in 1975, established that when multiple employees are promoted to identical positions at the two work locations, which were to be filled simultaneously, the selecting official would rank the selectees by grade level and time-in-grade. Thereafter, using the employees' service computation date at the tie-breaker, if necessary, higher graded employees would be "given work location preference" first and thereafter other employees would receive their preference based upon their grade level and time-in-grade, if there were vacancies available at the work location selected by the employee. If an employee in this latter category declined the only available work location, the employee did not receive the promotion. (G.C. Ex. 3). Variations from this policy, for individual situations, were handled by agreement on a case-by-case basis by the Union and MAMPSC. The work location assignment procedure was used from 5 to 10 times per year between 1975 and 1984.

[1] The General Counsel's unopposed motion to correct the transcript is granted. The transcript is hereby corrected as set forth therein.

MAMPSC is divided into branches, then sections, and then modules, with each module responsible for a particular section of the workload. It is necessary to maintain a balanced staff within each module in order to handle the assigned work.

In early to mid-1983, the MAMPSC decided that it wanted to redistribute the workload in the 42 modules where unit employees worked and modify staffing and employee racial and sexual imbalances that had developed over a period of several years. Donald Mings, director of MAMPSC, appointed Betty Cantrell, MAMPSC deputy director of operations, and Suzy Schmidt, MAMPSC assistant labor relations specialist, as his agents to notify the Union that he wanted to change the past practice and to bargain with the Union. By letter dated July 21, 1983 MAMPSC advised the Union that effective July 27, 1983 it would "implement a modified method of work location assignments." Respondent's letter contained a proposed MAMPSC circular delineating the change in past practice, stating, inter alia, "Future building location assignments will be made on the basis of organizational needs, taking into consideration the preference and needs of individual employees." This proposed procedure would have eliminated the use of employee preference as the primary work location assignment criteria. Respondent requested that Union counterproposals be submitted by July 22, 1983. (G.C. Ex. 4).

On July 22, 1983, the Union responded to MAMPSC's proposal and requested bargaining over "the procedures you will follow in carrying out the changes and the arrangements you will make for bargaining unit employees adversely affected." In addition, the Union proposed that no change be made in the current procedure and designated Reginald T. Huey, union executive vice-president, as the Union point of contact. (G.C. Ex. 5).

Huey met with Schmidt and Cantrell on five dates (July 28, August 3, 4, 9 and 12, 1983), covering 12 workdays. Proposals were exchanged on August 3, 4, and 12, and a mediator from the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service (FMCS) participated on August 9 and 12, 1983, at the Union's request. During bargaining it was MAMPSC's position that the Union proposals were nonnegotiable and interfered with management rights concerning the assignment of employees. (Tr. 28-29, 88, 102). Huey expressed the Union's position that, notwithstanding MAMPSC's management rights, the Union had a right to bargain pursuant to Section 7106(b) of the Statute. At the August 12, 1983 bargaining session, the mediator advised the parties that they were at impasse.

At no time during the bargaining, from July 28, 1983 through August 12, 1983, did the management representatives tell the Union that, pursuant to the collective bargaining agreement, after ten bargaining sessions or ten workdays they would no longer bargain with the Union. It was normal procedure to extend bargaining beyond ten days to accommodate the mediator if he was not immediately available.

Respondent advised the Union that it was going to implement, but before that was done it received a copy of the Union's request of August 24, 1983 for the assistance of the Federal Services Impasses Panel (FSIP). (G.C. Ex. 6). FSIP acknowledged receipt of the request on September 1, 1983. (G.C. Ex. 7). Respondent provided a position paper to FSIP on October 17, 1983. Respondent asserted that the Union proposals, submitted in August 1983, were nonnegotiable as inconsistent with the agency's authority to assign employees or to assign work under sections 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. Respondent asked the Panel to decline the Union's request.

As a result of Respondent's nonnegotiability declaration, Huey submitted a new proposal directly to the MAMPSC, with a copy to FSIP, on October 24, 1983. The letter provided, in part, as follows:

> We are herein submitting the following proposal in order to resolve our current impasse. This proposal constitutes Union Proposal No. 6:
> > When simultaneously filling identical positions, at more than one building location, the following procedure will be used:
> > (1) Each employee selected for promotion to one of the identical positions, will indicate his/her preference of building locations to be assigned.
> > (2) Should the above procedure fail to produce the desired staffing need at each location, selected employees with the earliest service computation dates will be afforded a choice of available building locations.

Huey followed up the letter with a telephone call to Schmidt in which he requested her opinion as to whether the proposal was negotiable. Schmidt replied that she couldn't tell as she didn't understand the proposal. Huey explained what he had in mind. On November 8, 1983, Huey requested a written response. On November 9, 1983, Respondent replied by memorandum as follows:

> On the afternoon of November 8, 1983, you asked to be furnished with a written response to the proposal you had submitted on October 24, 1983, and identified as Union Proposal No. 6. This proposal in actuality is the seventh proposal the union has submitted on this issue.
> Article 4, Section 1 of the National Agreement specifies:
> > "The union will submit written proposals if applicable within a reasonable period after notice of the proposed change. Bargaining will begin as soon as possible, and will not exceed ten (10) working days. All issues not resolved at that time may be referred to the Federal Service Impasse Panel for resolution under its rules."
> You were notified of the change in method of making building location assignments on July 21, 1983. You requested negotiations on July 22, 1983, and the parties began bargaining on July 28, 1983. Proposals continued to be submitted by both parties throughout the bargaining and mediation sessions which ended on August 12, 1983.
> This matter is now before the Impasse Panel, and any correspondence concerning this case should be directed to the Panel. It is inappropriate, and contrary to the contractual provision, to be submitting a written proposal to management while the issue is currently under the jurisdiction of the Panel.

Respondent mailed a copy to the FSIP. At the same time, Schmidt read the memorandum to the Union and the FSIP over the telephone.

By letter dated November 10, 1983, the Union requested the FSIP to find its final proposal negotiable and in accordance with the Statute. (G.C. Ex. 11). On November 28, 1983 the FSIP declined jurisdiction. The FSIP stated, in part, as follows:

> Because there are threshold questions concerning the Employer's obligation to bargain over the Union's proposals, the Panel declines to assert jurisdiction > until the questions have been resolved in an appropriate forum. (G.C. Ex. 12).

On December 27, 1983, Respondent notified the Union, inter alia, that it had fulfilled its bargaining obligation on the issue and would implement its last best offer made in August 1983 on January 9, 1984. (G.C. Ex. 13).

In response to this announcement, Huey sent MAMPSC a letter dated January 5, 1984, but received January 6, 1984, stating that the October 24, 1983 proposal was still on the table and requesting that MAMPSC either negotiate or submit the matter to arbitration. (Tr. 113; G.C. Ex. 14).

On January 9, 1984, MAMPSC distributed 3000 copies of a new "You and the PSC" circular implementing the new procedure. Initial printing arrangements for the circular had been made in mid-December. The new policy changed the existing past practice by making organizational needs rather than employee preferences the primary consideration in work location assignments. Respondent stated, "Although every reasonable effort will be made to accommodate individual needs and preferences, employees should realize when applying for a position which has vacancies in both buildings that there is a possibility that they may not be assigned to the building of their preference." (G.C. Ex. 15).

BACKGROUND OF ARTICLE IV OF THE NATIONAL AGREEMENT[2]

Article IV, Section 1, as applicable to the present case, states:

> The Union will submit written proposals if applicable within a reasonable period after notice of the proposed change. Bargaining will begin as soon as possible, and will not exceed ten (10) working days. All issues not resolved at that time may be referred to the Federal Service Impasses Panel for resolution under its rules.

Bargaining over the national agreement, of which Article IV is a part, encompassed an 18 month period from June 10, 1980 through and including December 21, 1981. The bargaining process encompassed both general sessions between all team members from both sides and "side-bar" meetings between selected representatives of the teams. The Union negotiators in the side-bar meetings were not authorized to enter into agreement during these meetings and, in fact, brought back all Respondent proposals to the team as a whole for discussion. This procedure was also used regarding Article IV. It was the articulated position of the Union throughout the bargaining sessions, that it would not waive any of its statutory rights in the agreement.

[2] In view of the disposition of this matter on other grounds, it is unnecessary to resolve the conflict between Respondent and the Union as to the negotiations leading to this provision, the practice of the parties in implementing the provision, and the interpretation of the provision.

Arthur Johnson, AFGE, Local 1336 president, treasurer of the National Council of Social Security Payment Center Locals, and chief spokesperson for the consolidated AFGE unit was a negotiator (side-bar and general sessions) and signatory on the agreement. He testified on behalf of the Union regarding bargaining history. As to the quoted provision of the Article, supra, Respondent initially asked that there be no unreasonable delay in mid-term bargaining. This was based upon the mediator/arbitrator's insistence that the parties shorten their bargaining process. In response to Respondent's position, the Union in February or early March 1981, first proposed that mid-term bargaining not exceed 60 days. Subsequent bargaining occurred over Article IV, Section 1, as applicable herein, and the Union proposed the present "10 working day" language.

The cited portion of the agreement does not qualify the word "working day" with the adjective "consecutive" or other modifier. The cited agreement article does not explain nor discuss what procedures the parties would use should FSIP fail or refuse to assert jurisdiction. There have been no agreements or arbitration decisions clarifying the meaning and intent of the cited section of the Article. The cited provision of the Article is silent as to what would happen after ten days of bargaining occurred if a request to FSIP were not made.

Donald M. Mings, director of the MAMPSC, was deputy chief negotiator for the management team. He testified that Article IV was one of the last articles upon which agreement was reached. Mings testified that the language of Article IV, Section 1 was worked out at a side-bar meeting between two representatives of management, Mings being one of them, and two representatives of the Union. According to Mings, the intent of the parties at the side-bar meeting was that bargaining would be concluded within 10 days unless the parties mutually agreed to extend the time. After 10 days, according to Mings, the parties were free to select other courses of action beyond negotiations. The Article drafted at the side-bar meeting was agreed to by the whole bargaining team, but there was no discussion before the whole team of the meaning of "10 working days."

Reginald T. Huey, executive vice president of Local 1336, testified that in past negotiations the "10 working days" language has not been interpreted to be 10 consecutive days, but to encompass 10 working days of bargaining over a period of time. In contrast to Huey, Susy Schmidt, Respondent's assistant labor relations specialist, testified that in past negotiations the 10 day provision has started running at the first meeting between the parties and the 10 day time frame has been adhered to in the absence of mutual agreement to extend the time.

Discussion, Conclusion, and Recommendations

The General Counsel contends that Respondent violated section 7116(a) (1) and (5) of the Statute by unilaterally terminating the past practice of using employee preference for work location assignments when there existed a viable union bargaining proposal of October 24, 1983 which Respondent had not addressed either through bargaining, a declaration of non-negotiability, or impasse procedure. The General Counsel asserts that the proposal was clearly negotiable, and the union did not waive its right to bargain through Article IV, Section 1 of the agreement or otherwise.

Respondent defends on the basis that it implemented the change only after discharging its duty to bargain as expressed in the Statute and the parties' agreement. Respondent contends, inter alia, that the Union's initial action shows surface bargaining and dilatory tactics; that after August 12, 1983 the parties were outside the 10 days provided for bargaining in Article 4, Section 1 of the agreement; that the Union's October 24, 1983 proposal is non-negotiable; that the Union's inaction after the FSIP decision justified Respondents' notice to implement; and the Union's response to that notice was untimely.

The threshold question is whether the Union's October 24, 1983 proposal was negotiable under section 7106 of the Statute since if the proposal was not negotiable Respondent was privileged to refuse to bargain with the Union. Internal Revenue Service (District, Region, National Office Units) and National Treasury Employees Union, 16 FLRA No. 124, 16 FLRA 904 (1984). As noted, the Union proposal provided:

> We are herein submitting the following proposal in order to resolve our current impasse. This proposal constitutes Union Proposal No. 6:
> > When simultaneously filling identical positions, at more than one building location, the following procedure will be used:
> > (1) Each employee selected for promotion to one of the identical positions, will indicate his/her preference of building locations to be assigned.
> > (2) Should the above procedure fail to produce the desired staffing need at each location, selected employees with the earliest service computation dates will be afforded a choice of available building locations.

Paragraph (2) is the only portion in dispute. Mr. Reginald T. Huey, Union executive vice president, explained that under the proposal if management had staffing needs for identical positions at two building locations, it would first consider individual preferences in trying to fill the positions. If this procedure failed to produce the desired staffing at each location, assignment would be made based on seniority with employees with seniority receiving their building preference. Those with less seniority could be assigned to the remaining positions. Mr. Huey acknowledged that if management had a particular need for the skills of an employee at one building location, but based on seniority the employee was entitled to go to another building, management would have to assign the employee based on his seniority and could not assign the employee where it considered his services to be needed the most.

Respondent contends that the proposal violates 7106(a) of the Statute.[3] Respondent claims that identical positions do not equate with equal performance, and it must be able to place personnel in the locations where the respective abilities of the individual can be best utilized in order to have a balanced staff and equalize service to beneficiaries among the modules assigned to the different buildings.

The right to assign employees which is reserved to management under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute encompasses management's discretion to establish the qualifications and skills necessary to perform the duties generally assigned to the position as well as such job-related individual characteristics as judgment and reliability and to determine whether an employee meets those qualifications. > § 7106. Management rights

> (a) Subject to subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this chapter shall affect the authority of any management official of any agency —
> . . . .
> (2) in accordance with applicable laws —

> (A) to . . . assign . . . employees in the agency . . .;
> (B) to assign work . . . [.]

1148-49 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub. nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945, 102 S. Ct. 1443 (1982). In Wright-Patterson the Authority found various proposals (IV-VII and XIII) outside the duty to bargain. These proposals, which compelled the selection of a particular individual for assignment to a position based on either employee seniority, lack of seniority, or by employee preference, directly interfered with the agency's discretion to determine which employee to assign and, thus, were inconsistent with section 7106(a)(2)(A).

The proposal in issue does not strictly involve a change of position, as in Wright-Patterson, but rather the procedure for assigning employees when several identical positions are available at more than one building location. However, management's discretion under section 7106(a)(2)(A) to determine whether an employee has the requisite individual characteristics, such as judgment and reliability, to do the work in a particular location also comes into consideration in this instance. In American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 5 FLRA No. 15, 5 FLRA 83 (1981) the Authority found a proposal whereby "qualified and available employees with requisite skills" would be offered temporary duty assignments in the same position on the basis of seniority within the duty to bargain. The Authority noted that the terms "qualified" and "requisite skills" would serve as a limitation on the operation of the seniority criterion and would permit the agency to decide that it would not select the most senior or least senior employee where it determined that the employee was not qualified or did not possess the needed skills. Similarly, in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 6 FLRA No. 97, 6 FLRA 508 (1981) a union proposal required that volunteers and seniority status be used by management "among the qualified employees" when necessary to reassign employees due to a staffing imbalance. The Authority noted the "qualified employees" restriction and accepted the union's explanation that an employee, to be included within the operation of this proposal, "could be transplanted and be expected to perform in a substantially similar manner." A similar union proposal in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 14 FLRA No. 45, 14 FLRA 243 (1984), (provision 6), was also held to be within the duty to bargain where management retained the discretion to limit the selection to qualified employees. In that case the Authority also held negotiable a proposal that required prime shift vacancies to be filled by second shift personnel who had one year seniority on the other shifts. However, this proposal also was restricted to "qualified" employees. As noted above, it is apparent that "qualified" meant qualified in the judgment of management. It is not equated with merely meeting the qualification standards for a position.

Since the Union's proposal places no such limitation on the operation of the seniority criterion but would compel management to meet staffing needs in the various modules by assigning employees to building locations based strictly on their preference and seniority, it directly interferes with the agency's discretion to determine which employees to assign and is inconsistent with section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. The proposal is not within the duty to bargain. Thus, it is concluded that Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) by refusing to bargain on the proposal and by implementing its last best offer a reasonable time after the decision of the FSIP.

In view of this disposition it is unnecessary to reach the other contentions of the parties. Based upon the foregoing findings of fact and conclusions of law, it is recommended that the Authority adopt the following Order.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority, in accordance with section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, based on a stipulation of facts by the parties, who have agreed that no material issue of fact exists. Briefs for the Authority's consideration were filed by the Respondent, the General Counsel and the Charging Party, Barry Nelson.

The complaint alleges that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by promulgating and maintaining a rule or directive that unlawfully interfered with the rights of its employees, protected by section 7102 of the Statute,[1] to engage in campaigning on behalf of candidates in an internal union election during non-work time in non-work areas.

[1] Section 7102 provides:

§ 7102. Employees' rights

> Each employee shall have the right to form, join, or assist any labor organization, or to refrain from any such activity, freely and without fear of penalty or

II. The Facts

The American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (National Council of Social Security Payment Center Locals) (the Union), has been the exclusive representative of a unit of Social Security Administration employees appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining, including employees of the Respondent Southeastern Program Service Center. On or about January 20, 1982, the Union's Election Committee Chairman met with the Respondent's Labor Relations Officer for the purpose of arriving at rules and policies governing the conduct of nominees, campaign workers and other employees who were to be actively involved in campaigning in an upcoming election for selection of the Union's convention delegates. A written agreement was entered into by the Respondent and the Union and a copy was given to various officers and members of the Union in the form of an "Office Memorandum" on January 21, 1982. Some of the electioneering rules contained in the agreement were as follows:

> Candidates may personally campaign in the cafeteria providing they are on their lunch break or approved leave.

> reprisal, and each employee shall be protected in the exercise of such right. Except as otherwise provided under this chapter, such right includes the right--
> (1) to act for a labor organization in the capacity of a representative and the right, in that capacity, to present the views of the labor organization to heads of agencies and other officials of the executive branch of the Government, the Congress, or other appropriate authorities, and
> (2) to engage in collective bargaining with respect to conditions of employment through representatives chosen by employees under this chapter.

> No campaigning is permitted in the main lobby or the pod entrance and exit areas.
> No posters, display or campaign literature of any type is permitted in the main lobby, pod areas or cafeteria.
> No campaign literature is to be attached to vehicles parked in program service center premises.
> On election day, February 1, 1982, employees must vote only during nonduty hours. Morning and afternoon breaks are considered duty hours.
> Any candidate or employee violating any of the above rules may have his/her campaign and/or distribution privileges revoked and may be subject to appropriate disciplinary action.

III. The Issues

A. The first issue is whether employees campaigning on behalf of candidates in an internal union election should have the same right to campaign, that is, to solicit support of candidates and to distribute campaign literature, during non-work time in non-work areas at their place of employment, as do employees during elections to determine questions concerning representation.

B. The second issue is whether, even if the employees have such a right, the Respondent should not be found in violation of that right by promulgating and maintaining a restrictive campaigning rule or directive, because the Union here had signed an agreement with regard to restrictions placed on employees by the Respondent.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The Charging Party and the General Counsel argue that employees have the statutory right to campaign and solicit support for candidates in internal union matters without interference of any sort from management, so long as that activity is on non-work time in non-work areas. Further, they argue that this right may not be waived by any labor organization, even one t[illegible] represents them at the work place. Thus, they argue that the restrictions placed on employees by management were unlawful. The Respondent argues that the entire matter is an internal union matter that is not in the nature of an unfair labor practice, and that the restrictions in any event were agreed to by the employees' exclusive representative and the agreement should be honored by the Authority.

V. Analysis

A. The right to campaign

The Authority has previously held that the right guaranteed employees under section 7102 of the Statute to ". . . form, join, or assist any labor organization . . ." encompasses the right of employees to distribute literature "in non-work areas during non-work time." General Services Administration, 9 FLRA 213 (1982); Internal Revenue Service, North Atlantic Service Center, Andover, Massachusetts, 7 FLRA 596 (1982). The Authority has also determined that the right of employees to engage in solicitation on behalf of a labor organization during non-work time is similarly protected by the Statute, Oklahoma City Air Logistics Center (AFLC), Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma, 6 FLRA 159 (1981), and that such right may even extend to solicitation in work areas (not here involved) absent any disruption of the Activity's operations or other unusual circumstances. Social Security Administration, 13 FLRA 409 (1983).

In the Authority's view, section 7102 of the Statute affords employees the same right to engage in solicitation and distribution of literature on behalf of candidates for union office as they would have if they were acting on behalf of or in opposition to representation by a labor organization generally. In this regard, the identity of the officers and representatives of a labor organization substantially influences the character and nature of the labor organization as a collective bargaining agent, and the right to solicit or distribute literature on behalf of candidates for union office is interwoven with the right to campaign for or against an exclusive representative. An employer violates the protected rights of employees under section 7102, and therefore also section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute, when in the course of an intra-union election it enforces overly broad no-solicitation/no-distribution rules, absent a showing of disruption of agency operations or unusual circumstances.[2] There is no evidence in this case that the rules imposed by management were necessary to protect against disruption of the agency's operations and no evidence of any unusual circumstances. Further, for the reasons stated above, the Respondent's argument that this matter is not in the nature of an unfair labor practice must be rejected.

B. The effect of the Respondent/Union's agreement

The fact that the restrictions placed upon employees by management were embodied in a bilateral agreement is no defense.[3] The right to solicit and to distribute literature on subjects of statutorily protected interests at proper times and places is one guaranteed to employees by the Statute, which the bargaining representative has no authority to waive.[4]

[2] In interpreting virtually identical language contained in section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act, the NLRB has determined, with court approval, that the right of private sector employees to engage in solicitation or distribution of literature on behalf of candidates in an internal union election is protected by the Act, and that an employer violates section 8(a)(1) when, in the course of an intra-union election campaign, it enforces overly broad no-solicitation/no-distribution rules. See General Motors Corporation, 211 NLRB 986 (1974), enf'd. 512 F.2d 447 (6th Cir. 1975); Arkansas Best Freight, 257 NLRB 420 (1981), enf'd. 673 F.2d 228 (8th Cir. 1982).

Ct. 1099 (1974), where the Court was called upon to interpret virtually identical language contained in section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act, in circumstances where the collective bargaining agent had agreed to certain restrictions upon the rights of employees to solicit or to distribute literature in the context of a union organizing campaign. Articulating a concept applicable here, the Court stated that:

VI. Conclusion

The Authority has considered all the facts and circumstances of this case, including the positions of the parties. The Authority concludes that the Respondent's actions in promulgating and maintaining a rule or directive enforcing the specific campaign rules set forth above violated its employees' rights under section 7102 of the Statute, and therefore section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute, and the Respondent shall be ordered to revoke and rescind such electioneering rules in order to make it clear that such rules will not be enforced in the future.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Authority and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Southeastern Program Service Center, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Interfering with, restraining or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in section 7102 of the Statute by promulgating or maintaining any rule or directive prohibiting employees from soliciting, during non-work time, on behalf of candidates in an internal union election, or from distributing literature on behalf of any such candidates in non-work areas, during non-work time, providing there is no disruption of the work of the Agency.

> The place of work is a place uniquely appropriate for dissemination of views concerning the bargaining representative and the various options open to the employees. So long as the distribution is by employees to employees and so long as in-plant solicitation is on nonworking time, banning of that solicitation might seriously dilute § 7 rights.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing any employee in the exercise of any right assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Rescind and revoke the election campaigning rules issued on January 21, 1982, to the extent such rules prohibit employees from soliciting, during non-work time, on behalf of candidates in an internal union election, or from distributing literature on behalf of any such candidates in non-work areas, during non-work time, and there is no disruption of the work of the Agency.

(b) Post at its Southeastern Program Service Center, Birmingham, Alabama, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the Center Director, or a designee, and shall be posted in conspicuous places, including bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region IV, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with it.

Issued, Washington, D.C., May 12, 1986.

DIGEST NOTES

The issue before the arbitrator was whether the union violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement when it used and encouraged unit members to use other than the contractual grievance procedure to seek redress from the activity in matters covered by the grievance procedure. The grievance concerned management's decision to place a teacher on enforced leave without pay instead of reassigning her to another teaching location following the Spanish government barring her from her teaching location on a naval base in Spain. The union had written several letters to the Director of Department of Defense Dependents Schools, the President of the United States and members of Congress seeking assistance on management's decision not to reassign a teacher. Also the union urged unit employees to send similar appeals to such persons. The arbitrator found that the union violated the spirit and the intent of the parties' agreement by not resolving the matter through the grievance procedure and ordered the Union to cease and desist from such conduct.

In its exception, the union argued that the award was contrary to the First Amendment of the U.S Constitution, 5 U.S.C. § 2302(b), § 7211 and § 7102 of the Statute. Under 5 U.S.C. § 7211 provides that the right of Federal employees, individually or collectively, to petition Congress or a Member of Congress, or to furnish information to either House of Congress, or to a committee thereof, may not be interfered with or denied. Similarly, § 7102 provides for the protection of certain rights of Federal employees, including the right "to present the views of the labor organization to ". . . officials of the executive branch of the Government, and the Congress . . ."

The Authority held that the conduct of the union found by the arbitrator to have violated the spirit and intent of the parties' agreement was conduct protected by both § 7102 and 5 U.S.C. § 7211. Consequently, the Authority found that portion of the award deficient as contrary to section 7102 and 5 U.S.C. § 7211 and modified the award.

    - Union's Representation Rights
    - Waiver of Union's Representation Right

DIGEST NOTES

A union's right under section 7114(a)(2)(A) to be represented at formal discussions means more than merely to be present; it also means the right to comment, speak and to make statements. Of course, this does not entitle a union representative to take charge of, usurp, or disrupt the meeting. Comments by a union representative must be governed by a rule of reasonableness, which requires that there be respect for orderly procedures and that the comments be related to the subject matter addressed by the agency representative(s) at the meeting. In applying such rule in the future, the Authority will consider the purpose of the meeting conducted by the agency representative(s) and all of the surrounding circumstances in determining the extent of a union representative's right to participate in any formal discussion.

When the agency prevented the union representative from speaking at the formal discussion, the Respondent violated § 7116 (a)(1) and (8). The agency conducted a meeting, conceded by the parties to be a formal discussion under section 7114(a)(2)(A), concerning a planned reorganization of one of its offices which involved bargaining unit employees. During the meeting, a union representative was interrupted by agency management when he attempted to comment on why certain employees had zeros place beside their names in a staffing plan. He was also interrupted when he attempted to explain to employees at the meeting how they should route their comments and suggestions to the union.

The Authority found that the union had not waived it's right to have an opportunity to be represented at formal discussions due when it negotiated a provision in the parties' collective bargaining agreement concerning formal discussions. Such a statutory right must be consciously yielded before the Authority will defer to the parties' agreement.

The agency did not violate § 7116(a)(1) and (8) by conducting a formal discussion with unit employees at which the union was not represented. The exclusive representative had been notified of the meeting but chose not to attend

A violation of § 7114(a)(2)(A) concerning formal discussions does not itself give rise to an obligation to negotiate and cannot, therefore, form the basis of a § 7116(a)(5) violation. (footnote 1)

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator considered whether the grievant had lateral retreat rights in a RIF to a position he had previously held before being promoted and subsequently reduced in grade. He concluded that the interpretation of an OPM official that retreat was always to a lower grade was wrong. Rather, the arbitrator found that under the plain language of FPM letter 351-14, the grievant had lateral retreat rights. As his award, the arbitrator reversed the grievant's RIF separation by ordering that the grievant be placed in the position to which he sought to retreat laterally and to be made whole.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

In its first exception, the agency contended that the arbitrator exceeded his authority in disregarding OPM's interpretation of FPM letter 351-14. The Authority concluded that OPM guidance set forth in interpretations of FPM letters is entitled to consideration but is not binding on agencies. Furthermore, 5 CFR part 351, the controlling regulation, does not prohibit reassignments to positions at the same grade level. Moreover FPM letter 351-14 indicates that lateral retreat is permissible in circumstances where the employee previously held the position and was promoted from it to a higher-graded position from which he was later reduced in grade.

In its second exception, the agency contended that the arbitrator's award was contrary to 5 U.S.C. § 5362(c)(2) which prohibits the use of an employee's retained grade for purposes of applying RIF procedures. The agency alleged that the arbitrator improperly considered the grievant's retained grade of GS-13 in applying the RIF procedures to him as a GS-12. The Authority held that the agency's argument constitutes nothing more than disagreement with the arbitrator's reasoning and conclusions which does not provide a basis for finding the award deficient.

      Mandatory Retroactive Application of Agreed Upon Terms

DIGEST NOTES

A prospective bargaining order is neither inadequate nor inherently restrictive of the parties' rights to address the adverse effects on unit employees caused by the agency's refusal to negotiate procedures to be followed in implementing new performance standards and critical elements. The agency's refusal to negotiate had been found to be a violation of § 7116(a)(1) and (5) by the Authority in a previous case; the case was appealed; the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia remanded the case to the Authority for a fuller explanation of its remedy. At the time of the violation, the agency was acting under a Congressional mandate requiring the issuance of revised performance standards by a specific date. It was conceded that a status quo ante remedy was unwarranted and the Authority found that by ordering retroactive effect to any bargain reached could disrupt the agency's operations. However, a prospective bargaining order allows the parties the flexibility to bargain freely with regard to how past actions may have affected any given employee. Bargaining which explores such effects may itself reveal situations that call for retroactive remedial action, about which the parties are free to agree. The parties might be less reluctant and more expeditious in reaching an overall agreement if they retain the flexibility to determine which provisions will be given retroactive effect. Finally, where a remedy requires the parties to bargain, it is entirely possible that an impasse may occur during bargaining and the matter will be sent to FSIP. In that event, the FSIP, when considering impassed proposals, would properly consider a proposal for retroactive application.

The activity violated § 7116(a)(1) when it engaged in a campaign of harassment of the chief steward for participating in protected activity, the Judge held in a decision adopted by the Authority. The chief steward's second line supervisor threatened him by making statements to the effect that previously filed unfair labor practice charges were worthless and that there would be repercussions for filing such charges. Also a supervisor told the steward, at the direction of the second line supervisor, that the activity did not want him to transact union business.

The activity violated § 7116(a)(1) and (2) by refusing to remove an AWOL charge against the chief steward and to pay him for the time charged AWOL, the Judge held in a decision adopted by the Authority. The activity engaged in a campaign of harassment of the chief steward for his protected activity. In the incident that gave rise to this violation, the steward called his supervisor to request leave because a family member was ill who he had take to the doctor. His supervisor responded ". . . I don't want to hear it . . . . I'm giving you one hour to get here at work." His supervisor further stated that if the chief steward did not like those instructions, to call the second line supervisor. The chief steward telephoned the second line supervisor, but he could not be reached. Then the steward called the commander of the naval supply center where he worked, whose statements the steward understood to be approval of the request for leave. Later the commander denied granting approval, although he admitted he could have been misunderstood. The activity charged the chief steward with three hours AWOL; then agreed to rescind the AWOL; never rescinded the AWOL; and refused to do so.

      - Administrative Leave in Lieu of Forced Annual Leave

DIGEST NOTES

Compelling need determinations may be made in unfair labor practice proceedings when the agency raises compelling need as an affirmative defense. There is a substantial public benefit from unified processing of a "compelling need" allegation as part of the unfair labor practice case involving unilateral change. This procedure effectuates Congress' goal to facilitate and promote the collective bargaining process by providing for the resolution of all relevant issues in one proceeding, thereby obviating the delay inherent in two separate and consecutive proceedings. Moreover, whether an agency's change is found to be nonnegotiable because there is a compelling need for the agency regulation or negotiable because there is no compelling need for the regulation which prompted the change, the agency is not improperly adversely affected. Even if the Authority determines that the purposes and policies of the Statute are best effectuated by an order rescinding a unilateral change over which there was a duty to bargain, such a result would only deprive the agency of results of a unilateral change it should not have made without first bargaining.

The activity failed to sustain its burden of establishing a compelling need for its regulation barring negotiations over the granting of administrative leave in lieu of forced annual leave on the day following Thanksgiving when its operations would be curtailed. The granting of administrative leave to unit employees in connection with the temporary curtailment of agency operations is a negotiable matter affecting working conditions of unit employees. The compelling need for the regulation, the agency argued, was that it was essential to meet its objective in curtailing operations, which was to conserve energy. But the agency did not demonstrate how the granting of administrative leave to unit employees, rather than annual leave, in any way affects the activity's stated goal of energy conservation. Thus the Authority held that the activity violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when it refused to bargain concerning the union's proposal to grant employees administrative leave on the day after Thanksgiving, submitted in response to the activity's notice that operations would be curtailed on that date.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Thomas F. Carey filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

A grievance was filed by the Activity and submitted to arbitration where the Arbitrator stated the issue as whether the Union violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement when it used and encouraged unit members to use other than the contractual grievance procedure to seek redress from the Activity in matters covered by the grievance procedure. In resolving the grievance, the Arbitrator in particular addressed an incident cited by the Activity as supporting its grievance. This incident involved the barring by the Spanish government of an overseas teacher from her teaching location on a naval base in Spain, and management's decision to place her on enforced leave without pay instead of reassigning her to another teaching location. The Arbitrator specifically noted evidence of several letters on union stationery from the local union president to the Director of Department of Defense Dependents Schools, to the President of the United States, and to several members of Congress seeking assistance on the decision of the Spanish government to bar the teacher from her place of employment and the decision of the Activity not to reassign her. The Arbitrator further noted evidence that the local union president in his representative capacity also urged unit members to send similar appeals to such persons. On the basis of this evidence, the Arbitrator determined that these actions of the Union in seeking assistance on management's decision not to reassign the teacher violated the spirit and intent of the collective bargaining agreement and to this extent he accordingly sustained the grievance. As a remedy the Arbitrator directed as follows:

> The Union is directed to inform its local Union leaders, in writing, of their contractual obligation to utilize the contractual grievance procedure for those contractual "matters relating to their employment which are within the control of the Employer" as specified and distinguished in the body of this Decision, and to further advise them to cease and desist from taking such identifiable contractual matters, which are grievable under the Agreement, to other forums before exhausting the various levels of these prescribed, agreed upon contractual procedures.

III. EXCEPTION

In its exception the Union contends that to the extent the award has sustained the grievance and has directed the Union to cease and desist from the actions found violative of the collective bargaining agreement, the award is contrary to the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, 5 U.S.C. SS 2302(b), 7211 and section 7102 of the Statute.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

In 5 U.S.C. § 7211, the right of Federal employees to petition Congress is unequivocally protected. That section provides that "[t]he right of employees, individually or collectively, to petition Congress or a Member of Congress, or to furnish information to either House of Congress, or to a committee or Member thereof, may not be interfered with or denied." Section 7102 of the Statute similarly provides for the protection of certain rights of Federal employees. Specifically, section 7102 pertinently provides:

> Each employee shall have the right to form, join, or assist any labor organization, or to refrain from any such activity, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal, and each employee shall be protected in the exercise of such right. Except as otherwise provided under this chapter, such right includes the right--
> (1) to act for a labor organization in the capacity of a representative and the right, in that capacity, to present the views of the labor organization to heads of agencies and other officials of the executive branch of the Government, the Congress, or other appropriate authorities[.]

Moreover, the Authority has expressly ruled under section 7102 that the legitimate conduct of an employee, acting in a representative capacity, to publicize and communicate information on issues having a direct bearing on the working conditions of unit employees enjoys the protections of the Statute. Bureau of Prisons, Federal Correctional Institution, Danbury, Connecticut, 17 FLRA 696 (1985); compare United States Forces Korea/Eighth United States Army, 17 FLRA 718 (1985) (actions found to have exceeded the bounds of protected activity).

In this case the Authority finds that the conduct of the local union president found by the Arbitrator to have violated the spirit and intent of the parties' collective bargaining agreement was conduct protected by both section 7102 of the Statute and 5 U.S.C. § 7211. Thus, the Arbitrator's award by sustaining the grievance on the basis of such conduct and enforcing the parties' agreement to effectively direct that the Union cease and desist from such conduct constitutes restraint of and interference with protected employee rights.

Consequently, the Authority finds that this portion of the award is deficient as contrary to section 7102 of the Statute and 5 U.S.C. § 7211.*/

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for these reasons, the award is modified to strike that portion of the award sustaining the grievance and directing a remedy.

Issued, Washington, D.C., May 12, 1986.

*/ In view of this decision, it is not necessary or appropriate for the Authority to address the Union's First Amendment contentions. Although the Union also contends that the award is contrary to 5 U.S.C. § 2302(b)(8), the exception provides no basis for finding the award deficient in this respect. The Union fails to establish in what manner the Arbitrator's award is contrary to section 2302(b)(8) which prohibits certain agency officials from taking specified actions against any employee as a reprisal for the disclosure of information under certain conditions.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case comes before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It raises issues concerning the negotiability of the following two proposals.

II. Proposals

Union Proposal 1

Article X Mid-Term Agreements, Section 3-A5 - Those receiving official time pursuant to (d) above will receive reasonable travel and per diem expenses to attend those negotiations.

Union Proposal 2

Article 6 Stewards, Section 2H - When a grievant, appellant or employee is authorized official time and expenses to travel to any of the above, one union representative will also receive time and expenses to travel as long as he/she is the designated representative in the matter.

(Only the underlined portion of the proposal is in dispute.)

III. Positions of the Parties

As explained by the Union, the proposals are not intended to conflict with any applicable law or regulation. The Union's position is that the proposal's "reasonable" standard allows for all relevant factors--case law, regulations and other appropriate factors--to be considered in determining what is or is not reasonable. Indeed, the Union states that the Agency could deny payment of travel expenses where reimbursement for a particular event is barred by law or regulation, where there is no nexus to government interests or when it is not in the best interest of the government.

The Agency contends that the proposal is not within the duty to bargain for the following reasons:

a. They do not concern conditions of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute because payment of travel expenses is specifically provided for by law; and

b. they are inconsistent with Federal law or Government-wide regulation.

IV. Analysis

A. "Conditions of Employment"

The Agency involved in this case makes essentially the same "conditions of employment" argument made by the agency in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986). The Authority rejected that argument in Customs Service and it is rejected here for the same reasons set forth in that case.

Representation of employees in matters concerning their employment affects the working conditions of those employees. A proposal seeking payment of travel expenses incurred because of such representational activity clearly involves a condition of employment not excepted from the definition thereof.

The Travel Expense Act governs the general subject of payment of travel expenses for employees traveling on "official business"; it does not specifically address payment for travel engaged in while conducting labor-management activity. Thus, a proposal concerning such payment is not precluded as involving a matter specifically provided for by Federal statute so as to be excepted from the definition of conditions of employment.

B. Inconsistent with Federal law or Government-wide rules or regulations

The Agency contends, in essence, that under the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701, et seq. and the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs), 41 CFR, Part 101-7, a determination as to whether an employee is on "official business" is dependent on the particular facts involved in each individual situation. Consequently, such a determination is not a matter of unlimited discretion on the part of the Agency.

For reasons set forth in its decision in Customs Service, the Authority has found that agencies have discretion, under the Travel Expense Act and implementing regulations, to determine whether, and under what circumstances, travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business and, hence, to pay for resulting appropriate expenses from Federal funds. The exercise of that discretion is subject to the negotiation process. The Agency here makes no specific argument that the proposals do not meet the statutory and regulatory standards discussed in Customs Service. Moreover, as noted in the Union's Position, the proposals envision case by case determinations as to appropriateness of specific travel and expenses which are necessary and proper under law and governing regulation. Given these circumstances, and for the reasons expressed in Customs Service, the Agency's contention that the proposals are inconsistent with law and Government-wide regulations must be rejected.

V. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, the Authority finds that the proposals concern a condition of employment which is within the Agency's administrative discretion, and they are not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. Therefore, they are within the duty to bargain.*/

---

*/ In finding these proposals within the duty to bargain, the Authority makes no judgment as to their merits.

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request, or as otherwise agreed to by the parties, bargain concerning Union Proposals 1 and 2.

Respondent

and Case No. 3-CA-40346

NATIONAL TREASURY EMPLOYEES UNION

Charging Party

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge filed by the Respondent. The exceptions are limited to the Judge's finding that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by holding a formal discussion within the meaning of section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute on April 6, 1984, without permitting the Charging Party's designated representative an opportunity to participate in the discussion.[1] No exceptions were filed to the Judge's additional finding that the Respondent did not also violate the Statute by conducting a formal discussion with unit employees on April 5, 1984, because the Charging Party had been notified of the meeting but chose not to attend. In the absence of exceptions to this finding, the Authority adopts it without comment.

[1] The Judge dismissed the section 7116(a)(5) aspect of this allegation, citing Department of Defense National Guard Bureau, Texas Adjutant Guard's Department, 149th TAC Fighter Group (ANG)(TAC), Kelly Air Force Base, 15 FLRA 529, 533 (1984), in which the Authority concluded that section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute does not itself give rise to an obligation to negotiate and cannot, therefore, form the basis of a section 7116(a)(5) violation.

II. Background Facts

On April 6, 1984, representatives of the Respondent conducted what all parties concede was a formal discussion within the meaning of section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. The meeting was conducted by the Director of the Administration and Resource Control Staff, Francis P. Gillespie, and involved the employees of the Accident Evaluation Division. The subject matter of the meeting concerned a planned reorganization of the Office of Nuclear Research, of which the Accident Evaluation Division is a component. In addition to all of the employees in the Accident Evaluation Division, including the Division and Branch Chiefs, Labor Relations Specialist Theresa Spearman was in attendance on behalf of management and Martin Levy was in attendance as the designated union representative. Upon completing his prepared remarks, which included comments regarding why a zero was placed next to certain employees' names on the staffing plan previously supplied to employees in attendance, Gillespie asked for questions. None were forthcoming. Gillespie then advised the employees that any comments or suggestions they had should be routed through the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU), the exclusive representative of the employees in attendance. Levy then rose, identified himself by name and NTEU position, and began to discuss the zeroes in the staffing plan. After being interrupted by Spearman several times while attempting to comment about the zeroes, Levy dropped the matter and attempted to explain to employees how they should route their comments and suggestions to the NTEU. He was again interrupted by Spearman who prevented him from explaining anything further to the employees other than that they should see their union steward.

III. Judge's Decision

In finding that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute when it effectively prevented Levy from speaking, thereby interfering with the Union's right to be represented at a formal discussion under section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute, the Judge concluded that the statutory phrase "right to be represented" means the right to comment, speak and to make statements. He noted, however, that this right does not entitle a union to take charge of the proceedings. In this respect, the Judge found that Levy's comments were related to matters discussed either directly or indirectly by Director Gillespie.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent took the position in its exceptions that the NTEU representative had no right under section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute to discuss how bargaining unit employees should communicate with the NTEU because such discussion constitutes internal union business. With respect to the Judge's finding that the NTEU representative was prevented from discussing the staffing plan, the Respondent contends that Spearman was merely attempting to prevent Levy from discussing matters beyond the scope of what had been addressed by Gillespie at the meeting. The Respondent also argued that its agent's conduct in preventing the NTEU representative from continuing was based on a legitimate interpretation of the parties' collective bargaining agreement, which includes language addressing NTEU's rights at a "formal discussion," and therefore involves only differing and arguable interpretations of their agreement with regard to formal discussions rather than an unfair labor practice.

In its opposition to the Respondent's exceptions, NTEU contends that the first two exceptions constitute mere disagreement with the Judge's findings that both matters which the NTEU representative was prevented from addressing at the meeting were related to matters commented on directly or indirectly by Gillespie. With respect to the Respondent's final exception, the NTEU contends that the applicability of the collective bargaining agreement was not at issue and is beyond the scope of the exceptions. Further, the NTEU argues that the cases relied on by the Respondent are not applicable because they involve management changes in working conditions alleged to be covered by a collective bargaining agreement rather than a violation of a specific statutory right.

V. Analysis

The Authority specifically adopts the Judge's conclusion and supporting rationale that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by effectively preventing the NTEU representative, Martin Levy, from speaking at a formal discussion within the meaning of section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. Thus, as concluded by the Judge, the language in section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute that the "exclusive representative . . . shall be given the opportunity to be represented" at a formal discussion means more than merely a right to be present. It also means that a union representative has a right to comment, speak and make statements. Of course, as noted by the Judge, this does not entitle a union representative to take charge of, usurp, or disrupt the meeting. Comments by a union representative must be governed by a rule of reasonableness, which requires that there be respect for orderly procedures and that the comments be related to the subject matter addressed by the agency representative(s) at the meeting. Further, in applying such a rule in future cases, the Authority will consider the purpose of the meeting conducted by the agency representative(s) and all of the surrounding circumstances in determining the extent of a union representative's right to participate in any formal discussion.

As noted above, the Respondent essentially contends in its first two exceptions that the subject matter of the NTEU representative's comments went beyond what should be permissible, while the NTEU argues in opposition to those exceptions that they constitute mere disagreement with the Judge's factual analysis. The Authority agrees with the NTEU that these two exceptions present no issue that the Judge did not consider and address in his Decision. In the Authority's view, such exceptions are without merit.

The Authority also concludes that the Respondent's final exception is without merit. Thus, the language contained in the parties' collective bargaining agreement concerning "formal discussions" does not constitute a clear and unmistakable waiver of the NTEU's section 7114(a)(2)(A) right to have an opportunity to be represented at a formal discussion. Such a statutory right must be consciously yielded before the Authority will defer to the parties' collective bargaining agreement.2/

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms these rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the Respondent's exceptions to the Judge's finding of violation, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommended Order. We therefore conclude that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by preventing the Charging Party's representative from speaking at the April 6, 1984 formal discussion, within the meaning of section 7114(a)(2)(A), thus failing to comply with its obligations under that provision. Noting that no exceptions were filed, we also conclude that the Respondent did not fail to comply with section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute in violation of section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) with respect to the April 5, 1984 meeting conducted by the Respondent. Finally, we conclude that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(5) with respect to the April 6, 1984 formal discussion. Accordingly, these aspects of the complaint shall be dismissed.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and section 7118 of the Statute, it is ordered that the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Holding or conducting formal discussions within the meaning of section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute with bargaining unit employees without permitting the exclusive bargaining representative, the National Treasury Employees Union, an opportunity to be represented at such formal discussions.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Post at its facilities copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by an authorized official and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with it.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the remaining allegations of the complaint in Case No. 3-CA-40346 be, and they hereby are, dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101 et seq., 92 Stat. 1191 (hereinafter referred to as the Statute) and the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA), 5 C.F.R. Chapter XIV, § 2410 et seq.

An unfair labor practice charge was filed on April 24, 1984 by National Treasury Employees Union (hereinafter called NTEU and the Union) alleging that the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission (hereinafter called NRC and the Respondent) violated the Statute. Based upon the foregoing the General Counsel of the FLRA, by the Regional Director of Region 3, issued a Complaint and Notice of Hearing on July 27, 1984 alleging that NRC violated Sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute by holding two formal discussions within the meaning of Section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute without, in one case, notifying the NTEU of the discussion and, in the other, without permitting the Union to participate in the discussion. Respondent filed a timely Answer denying it had violated the Statute.

A hearing was conducted before the undersigned in Washington, D.C. NRC, NTEU and General Counsel of the FLRA were represented and afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce evidence, to argue orally and to file post-hearing briefs. NRC and General Counsel of the FLRA argued orally and NRC filed a post hearing brief, which has been fully considered.

Based upon the entire record in this matter, my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from my evaluation of the evidence, I make the following:

Findings of Fact

At all times material herein NTEU was the collective bargaining representative for a nationwide unit of NRC's professional and non-professional employees and WG employees, with certain exclusions, not here relevant. The employees that are the subject of this case are within the unit described above.

Prior to a reorganization that took place in April of 1984 the NRC Office of Nuclear Research was divided into six divisions, one of which was the Administration and Resource Control Staff,[1] headed by Director Francis P. Gillespie. Each division was in turn subdivided into branches. Gillespie was the chief administrative officer for the Office of Nuclear Research and his division included personnel, resource allocation and space allocation responsibilities.

At all times material NRC and NTEU were parties to a collective bargaining agreement covering the employees in the nationwide unit. Section 4.2 of the contract states that notice of formal discussions will be given to the NTEU chapter president or his designee. At NRC the Union has designated stewards in the various facilities to receive notices of formal discussions and, in the past, the practice had been to notify the stewards in each facility of formal discussions.[2]

[1] After the reorganization the Administration and Resource Control Staff had its name changed to the Policy, Planning and Control Staff.

[2] In a communication to "NRC Office Directors and Regional Administrators" in March 1982, NTEU Chapter 208 President Jim Thomas advised, with respect to formal discussions, ". . . In most cases, verbal notice to the steward assigned to your area will be sufficient toward meeting this [Section 7114(a)(2) of the Statute] requirement."

In the Spring of 1984 Gillespie and his division were in the process of planning and coordinating a reorganization of the Office of Nuclear Research. Early in April, before meetings held on April 5 and 6, 1984, Gillespie sent notifications and detailed information to the affected employees and to the Union, concerning the reorganization of the Office of Nuclear Research.

All the employees in all the divisions, except the Administration and Resources Control Staff, were notified in writing that at scheduled times on April 6, 1984 each division would meet separately and Gillespie would explain the reorganization. The notice stated that "all personnel are requested to attend." Also Union Steward and Chapter Vice-President Rene Audette received reorganization charts and a list of all employees, their grades, if the employees would be "impacted" by the reorganization and, if a "0" is next to an employee's name, that the employee's position would not be filed if the position became vacant.

Gillespie, by the memoranda dated April 5, 1984 described above, advised 5 divisions within the Research Office of the April 6, 1984 meetings to discuss the reorganization. He had neglected to schedule such a meeting for his own Administration and Resource Control Staff because it had been intimately involved with the reorganization. Gillespie became aware of the oversight during the morning of April 5, 1984 and decided to have a meeting with his staff that morning to explain the organization. He told his secretary Betty Cianci and his two branch chiefs about the meeting and told Cianci to talk to Union Steward Rene Audette to see if he had any objection to such a meeting.

At about 9:45 AM, Cianci went to Audette's place of work with a package containing the staffing plan and related papers and advised him of Gillespie's oversight to notify his own staff and that Gillespie wanted to have a meeting with his staff at about 11:00 AM. Audette indicated that such a meeting was no problem and it could proceed.[3] Audette is not, professionally, assigned to Administration and Resource Control Staff.[4] Cianci then advised Gillespie that Audette had no objection to the meeting. Gillespie instructed Cianci to call the secretaries in the Administration and Resource Control Staff and have them tell the employees that there was to be a meeting at 11:00 AM in room 1133 of the Willstee Building concerning the reorganization and the material about the reorganization that had already been distributed. Some of the employees in the Administration and Resource Control Staff were located in the Willstee Building in Silver Spring, where the meeting was to be held, and others were located in other buildings somewhat nearby.

[3] Audette's recollection is less clear and reliable than Cianci's. He does not recall being advised of their April 5 meeting, but does recall another April 5 meeting that was apparently held on April 6. Generally, I credit Cianci's recollection of the events in so far as notifying Audette of the April 5 meeting.

[4] The practice had been that at meetings the Union representative should not be assigned to the group involved in the meeting.

The meeting of the Administration and Resource Control Staff was held at about 11:00 AM in room 1133 of the Willstee Building. Present at the meeting was Gillespie, who chaired it, the two branch chiefs, and the section chiefs. About 20 of the approximately 22 employees in the staff attended. No NTEU representative was present at the meeting.

Although Respondent's witnesses testified that the meeting was "voluntary," there is no indication that the employees were told that it was voluntary and that they need not attend, rather, the record establishes that they were informed that there would be a meeting over which Gillespie would preside.

Gillespie chaired the April 5 meeting. He described the reorganization and stated that nobody on his staff would lose his job, although a couple would be physically moved from one nearby building to the Willstee Building. He also stated that the technical divisions would be reduced in number from five to four. Gillespie referred to the reorganization description that had been distributed to employees. Gillespie then asked if there were any questions. No questions were asked. Gillespie instructed the employees to transmit comments through the Union. The meeting took about 10 minutes.

One of the meetings held on April 6, 1984 involved the Accident Evaluation Division. Martin Levy attended this meeting at the NTEU representative. The meeting was held in room 1133, a conference room, of the Willstee Building. The employees were notified of this meeting by the memorandum to employees described above. The meeting started at about 12:45 PM. Present at the meeting were Gillespie, Accident Evaluation Division Chief Bassett, Labor Relations Specialist Theresa Spearman and two or three branch chiefs. About 30 or 40 employees in the bargaining unit were also present. There were virtually all the employees of the division. NTEU representative Martin Levy also attended. Prior to the meeting Levy had received from NRC a copy of the staffing plan for the reorganized office.

Gillespie chaired the meeting. He did not introduce Levy. Gillespie informed the employees of the reorganization and stated that there would be no adverse actions or any adverse effect upon employees, their grades or promotion potential. Gillespie, in referring to the staffing plan, a copy of which had been previously supplied to the employees, stated that a zero next to an employee's name didn't mean anything. He stated it was simply a bookkeeping method of providing that a position would not be filled once it was vacated. Gillespie finished his statement and then asked for questions. None were forthcoming.

Gillespie advised the employees that if they had any comments or suggestions they should route them through NTEU. Levy rose and identified himself by name and NTEU position. Levy began to discuss the zeros in the staffing plan. As soon as he began to speak, Levy was interrupted by Spearman who stated that full-time allotment was not a subject of the reorganization and Levy would not be permitted to speak about it. Levy stated that it was the first time NTEU and the employees had learned about it and Gillespie brought it up so it was a matter of the reorganization. Levy again tried to address this matter and was interrupted again by Spearman. She interrupted Levy five or six times as he attempted to address the zeros in the staffing pattern. Gillespie and the other management officials sat there and said nothing. Levy then dropped that matter and told the employees that there were quality groups in each division and they advised the Union as to bargaining positions. Again Spearman interrupted Levy about three times saying this was not something covered by the reorganization and prevented Levy from explaining the quality groups. Levy, because he was not permitted to discuss the two matters described above, finally just told the employees that those who have a problem should see the Union steward.[5]

Discussion and Conclusions of Law

Section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute provides as follows:

> § 7114. Representation rights and duties
> . . . .
> (a)(2) An exclusive representative of an appropriate unit in an agency shall be given the opportunity to be represented at --
> (A) any formal discussion between one or more representatives of the agency and one or more employees in the unit or their representatives concerning any grievance or any personnel policy or practice or other general condition of employment[.]

In the instant case it is clear that the April 5 and 6, 1984 meetings dealt with the reorganization of the Nuclear Research Office which involved the physical reassignment of employees from one facility to another. The reorganization involved and affected a "personnel policy or practice or other general condition of employment" within the meaning of Section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. Also, despite NRC's contention of the contrary, the two meetings were "discussions" within the meaning of Section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. Department of Defense, National Guard Bureau, Texas Adjutant General's Department, 149th TAC Fighter Group, Kelly Air Force Base, 15 FLRA No. 111 (1984). In this regard, it is further noted that at the conclusion of each meeting Gillespie invited questions from the employees present.

[5] In setting forth this description of the April 6, 1984 meeting I credit the versions of Levy and the other employees who testified and I do not credit Spearman, Gillespie and the other NRC witnesses. I find Levy's recollections were precise and consistent with the surrounding circumstances. I find the NRC witnesses testimony was less reliable and precise.

It is concluded that both the April 5 and 6, 1984 discussions were "formal" within the meaning of Section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. The April 5, 1984 meeting was held in a conference room and two or three levels of supervisors were present, including Gillespie the Director of the staff, two branch chiefs and section chiefs. Further, although the employees did not receive advance written notification of the meeting, this was admittedly an oversight on NRC's part; Respondent had intended to hold a series of meetings to discuss the reorganization in each of the divisions and the April 5 meeting was to be one of this series of meetings. Although there was no "agenda" as such, when notified of the meeting the employees were told it was to discuss the reorganization. Thus there was in fact an agenda. This is especially so because, in advance of the meeting, the employees had received copies of the reorganization plan. Finally, although the meeting was supposedly voluntary, the employees when told about the meeting, were not told it was voluntary and that they need not attend. In the circumstances here present, when employees were told that there would be a meeting of the Administration and Resource Control Staff concerning the reorganization and chaired by the Director of the staff, such a meeting can hardly be deemed voluntary, unless the employees were specifically so informed, which was not the case herein. Further, substantially all the employees on the staff attended the meeting. In light of the foregoing, I conclude that the April 5 meeting was a formal discussion within the meaning of Section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. See United States Customs Service, Region VIII, San Francisco California, 18 FLRA No. 27 (1985), and the cases cited therein.

It is further concluded that the April 6, 1984, meeting was "formal" within Section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. In addition to the presence of all of the indicia present in the April 5 meeting discussed above, the employees of the Accident Evaluation Division were notified in advance, in writing, of the meeting and that it would concern the reorganization. Again the written announcement of the meeting did not state it was a voluntary meeting. Further in addition to Gillespie, present was Director of the Division of Accident Evaluation Sam Bassett, Labor Relations Specialist Spearman and two or three branch chiefs. In light of the foregoing it is concluded the April 6, 1984 meeting of the Accident Evaluation Division was a formal discussion within the meaning of Section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. See, United States Customs Service, Region VIII, San Francisco, California, supra, and the cases cited therein.

With respect to the April 5 meeting NRC notified Union Steward Audette of the meeting and NTEU chose not to attend. NRC fulfilled its obligations under Section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute when it notified a Union representative of the meeting. General Counsel of the FLRA's argument that notice to Audette was not sufficient is rejected. Section 4.2 of the collective bargaining agreement provides that the Union can designate those to receive notice of formal meetings. The record establishes that, in writing and under past practice NTEU stewards were the appropriate persons to receive such notice of meetings. Accordingly, I find with respect to the April 5 meeting NRC did meet all its obligations under Section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute and therefore it did not violate the Statute with respect to the April 5, 1984 meeting.

At the conclusion of the April 6 meeting of the Division of Accident Evaluation the NTEU Representative, Levy, who had received notice of the meeting, was effectively prevented by Spearman from speaking to the employees and commenting on the meaning and effect of the staffing plan and about the quality groups. These were both matters discussed, directly or in directly by Gillespie. Gillespie discussed the meaning of the "O" next to employees names on the staffing plan, one of the matters Levy attempted to address. Further Gillespie stated that employees should channel their comments to management through the NTEU. The quality groups are the means for the employees to communicate with NTEU about the local working conditions.

Insofar as Section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute provides that a union should be represented at formal discussions, it means more than merely to be present, it also means the right to comment, speak and to make statements. I adopt the discussion and reasoning set forth in Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Cleveland, Ohio District Office, OALJ 83-60 (1983). The FLRA has held that such union participation does not, however, entitle the Union to take charge of the proceedings. Internal Revenue Service, Fresno Service Center, Fresno, California, 7 FLRA 371 (1981). It is concluded, in light of the foregoing, NRC interfered with NTEU's rights to be represented at a formal discussion conducted on April 6, 1984 in the Division Accident Evaluation, when it effectively prevented Levy from speaking. In so doing NRC interfered with NTEU's rights under Section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute "to be represented at a formal discussion." Accordingly, I conclude that Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute,[6] and recommend that the Authority issue the following:

[6] I conclude there was no violation of Section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute. Department of Defense, National Guard Bureau, Texas Adjutant General's Department, 149th TAC Fighter Group (ANG)(TAC), Kelly Air Force Base, supra.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and Section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

   (a) Holding or conducting formal discussions with bargaining unit employees without permitting the exclusive bargaining representative, the National Treasury Employees Union, to be represented at such formal discussions.

   (b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

   (a) Post as its facilities copies of the attached Notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by an authorized official and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

   (c) Pursuant to Section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director of Region 3, Federal Labor Relations Authority, 1111 18th Street, N.W., Room 700, P.O. Agency

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Sherman Dallas filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance before the Arbitrator involved the question of whether the grievant had lateral retreat rights in a reduction-in-force (RIF) situation to a position he had previously held. The grievant had been a GS-12 Community Planning and Development Specialist and had been promoted to Chief of Program Support, GS-13. The Agency conducted a RIF and the grievant was reassigned from the GS-13 position to a GS-12 Realty Specialist position. The Agency subsequently conducted a second RIF in which the grievant was separated from the Federal service. In the course of the second RIF, the grievant sought to retreat laterally from the GS-12

Realty Specialist position to his previous GS-12 position of Community Planning and Development Specialist. The Agency determined that retreat rights were only to lower-graded positions and that the grievant was not entitled to retreat laterally to his former GS-12 position. The Agency based its determination on a letter from an official in the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) to an Agency official in response to the Agency's request for an interpretation of Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) letter 351-14.[1] The Agency therefore denied the grievant's request.

The Arbitrator found that under the plain language of FPM letter 351-14 the grievant had lateral retreat rights. Expressing respect and "great deference" for OPM's role in the matter, the Arbitrator concluded that the interpretation of the OPM official that retreat was always to a lower grade was wrong. Accordingly, as his award, the Arbitrator sustained the grievance and ordered that the grievant be placed in the GS-12 position he sought and be made whole.

[1] FPM letter 351-14 provides, in pertinent part:

> When an agency is unable to offer an employee who has been released from his or her competitive level a position at the same grade or rate through reassignment or bumping rights, the agency then determines whether the employee has RETREAT rights to a better offer of assignment.
> An employee has retreat rights ONLY to positions that are identical or essentially the same as positions he or she actually held in the past, and from which or through which the employee was subsequently promoted. An employee does not acquire retreat rights by merely being qualified for a position held by an employee in the same subgroup.
> Retreat rights are almost always to positions at a lower grade. In order for an employee to have retreat rights to a position at his or her present grade, the employee must have formerly held a position at the present grade and have been promoted out of it to another position. In short, the employee must have held a position with a grade which is higher than his or her present grade.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

As its first exception, the Agency contends that the Arbitrator exceeded his authority in disregarding OPM's interpretation of FPM letter 351-14. In support of its contention, the Agency argues that the Merit Systems Protection Board has determined that OPM's interpretation of its RIF regulations is entitled to great deference[2] and that the Arbitrator erred in rejecting OPM's interpretation of FPM letter 351-14 and in giving greater weight to his own interpretation of that issuance.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The question raised by the Agency's exception is whether the Arbitrator was obligated to accept the letter from the OPM official to the Agency as controlling the disposition of the case. The Authority has previously noted that OPM guidance set forth in FPM letters is merely that and not binding on Federal agencies. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2, slip op. at 4 n.3 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 27, 1986). Similarly, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit has ruled that OPM advice and guidance is precisely that and not binding on agencies. Federal/Postal/Retiree Coalition v. Devine, 751 F.2d 1424, 1431 (D.C. Cir. 1985). Additionally, the Merit Systems Protection Board has indicated that OPM guidance set forth in the FPM may not serve to contravene requirements set forth in its published regulations and that oral instructions transmitted by OPM personnel to an agency do not constitute "regulations" governing agency actions in disposing of employee rights under 5 CFR part 351. Mallory v. Department of the Army, 3 MSPB 100, 103 (1980). The Authority therefore concludes that the OPM letter to the Agency in this case was an advisory opinion and that while it was entitled to consideration, it was without controlling effect in this matter.

Furthermore, the regulations which appear to be controlling in the RIF involved in this case, 5 CFR part 351 (1983), do not prohibit lateral reassignments to positions at the same grade level. In that regard, 5 CFR § 351.703 (1983) provided for the reassignment of an employee to a position from or through which the employee had been promoted, or to an essentially identical position.3/ Moreover, although it is essentially interpretive guidance, FPM letter 351-14 expressly provides that "retreat rights are almost always to positions at a lower grade," i.e., not always to lower-graded positions; and further clearly indicates that retreat to a position at the same grade level is permissible in some limited circumstances, i.e., where the employee previously held the position and was promoted from it to a higher-graded position. Thus, while the letter from the OPM official relied upon by the Agency in denying the grievant lateral retreat rights warrants consideration, the Agency fails to establish how the Arbitrator erred in rejecting the advisory opinion of the OPM official and interpreting FPM letter 351-14 in accordance with the plain language of the issuance. The Authority therefore concludes that the Agency has failed to establish that the Arbitrator exceeded his authority or erred in this matter as alleged.

3/ The Authority notes that the most recent final regulations governing RIFs, 5 CFR part 351 (1986), promulgated by OPM also do not prohibit lateral reassignments or restrict retreat rights only to positions at lower grades. In that regard, the Authority further notes that the supplementary information published by OPM concerning these most recent regulations clearly indicates that an employee has retreat rights to positions at the same grade level which were previously held by the employee. 51 Fed. Reg. 318 (Jan. 3, 1986).

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contention

In its second exception, the Agency essentially contends that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to 5 U.S.C. § 5362(c)(2), which prohibits the use of an employee's retained grade for purposes of applying RIF procedures. In support of this contention, the Agency argues that the Arbitrator improperly considered the grievant's retained grade of GS-13 in applying the RIF procedures.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority finds that the Agency has failed to establish that the Arbitrator improperly considered the grievant's retained grade in determining his entitlement to retreat to the GS-12 Community Planning and Development Specialist position. Rather, the Arbitrator's award is specifically founded on his interpretation of the express language of FPM letter 351-14 and his conclusion that the grievant was entitled to lateral reassignment to the position he had previously held and from which he had been promoted. It is clear that the thrust of the Agency's argument constitutes nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's reasoning and conclusions based on the evidence before him. Consequently, the exception does not provide a basis for finding the award deficient. See, e.g., Federal Correctional Institution, Petersburg, Virginia and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2052, Petersburg, Virginia, 13 FLRA 108 (1983).

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Agency's exceptions are denied.

DECISION AND ORDER ON REMAND

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority pursuant to a remand from the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit "for a fuller explanation of its choice of remedy or for reconsideration of its decision."

II. History of the Case

A. The Authority's Decision

On November 30, 1984, the Authority issued its Decision and Order in Environmental Protection Agency, 16 FLRA 602, adopting the decision of its Administrative Law Judge that the Respondent had violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by implementing procedures for the establishment of performance standards and critical elements of unit employee positions without notifying and bargaining in good faith with the Charging Party (the Union) over such procedures, and by failing and refusing to negotiate over ground rules for such negotiations or conditioning any meeting or negotiations on the submission by the Union of specific, substantive, written proposals concerning the performance standard-setting process.

To remedy the unfair labor practice found, the Judge had recommended that the Respondent be ordered to bargain over ground rules for negotiations and concerning procedures for the establishment of performance standards and critical elements of employee positions, and to give retroactive effect to any agreement reached. The Authority modified the Judge's recommended Order by deleting the requirement that retroactive effect be given to any agreement reached as a result of bargaining, stating that "it is the opinion of the Authority that a prospective bargaining order will fully remedy the violations found."

B. The Court's Opinion

On February 5, 1986, the Court issued its opinion in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO v. FLRA, No. 85-1057 (D.C. Cir. Feb. 5, 1986). The Court, acknowledging that the Authority has broad discretion to order remedies in unfair labor practice cases, and acknowledging that an explanation for its choice of remedy is not necessary in all cases, concluded that it could not discern from the Authority's decision in this case why the Judge's recommended remedial order had been modified. The Court thus remanded the case.

III. Reconsideration on Remand

A. The Judge's Decision

The Respondent pointed out in its brief to the Judge that it had taken the action here in question in response to a Congressional mandate contained in 5 U.S.C. § 4302, and implementing regulations published by the Office of Personnel Management, which required the agency to issue revised performance standards by a specific date. In view of this Congressional mandate, the General Counsel's brief to the Judge did not request a status quo ante remedy. The General Counsel also acknowledged that "overriding exigencies involved" would make a status quo ante remedy inappropriate. Nonetheless, the General Counsel urged that the Judge should order retroactive application of agreed upon terms, rather than a prospective bargaining order, because prospective bargaining orders are inadequate in general and a prospective bargaining order here would necessarily limit the Union's opportunity to bargain about the effects of any of the changes already made. The Judge did not have before him specific allegations with regard to the effect that retroactive application of agreed upon terms might have upon the operations of the agency. The Judge granted the remedy requested by the General Counsel, stating without supplying any rationale that he agreed such an order would best effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute.

B. Positions of the Parties

In its exceptions to the Judge's decision, the Respondent argued that to make retroactive changes in already established performance standards would have the effect of negating a Congressional mandate; that such a remedy would seriously interfere with the effectiveness of the agency's operations; and that, in any event, none of the changed performance standards had been applied yet to any of the employees represented by the Union.

In its opposition to the Respondent's exceptions, the Union again argued as it did before the Judge that the nature of the Respondent's violation justified the granting of a status quo ante remedy. It also argued alternatively that the retroactive remedy ordered by the Judge was acceptable, and took issue with the factual and legal arguments of the Respondent.

IV. Analysis

The Authority notes that the Respondent was acting under a Congressional mandate requiring the issuance of revised performance standards by a specific date, and that the General Counsel conceded that a return to the status quo ante was unwarranted. The Authority finds convincing the Respondent's arguments with regard to the potential disruption that ordering retroactive effect to any bargain reached would have on the agency's operations. Taking all the circumstances of this case into consideration, we adhere to our original determination that a prospective bargaining order will best effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute.

A prospective bargaining order is neither inadequate nor inherently restrictive of the parties' rights to address the effects on unit employees of changes already made, as argued by the General Counsel. Rather, it allows the parties the flexibility to bargain freely with regard to how past actions may have affected any given employee. Bargaining which explores such effects may itself reveal situations that call for retroactive remedial action, about which the parties are free to agree. Indeed, the parties might be less reluctant and more expeditious in reaching an overall agreement if they retain the flexibility to determine which provisions will be given retroactive effect. Further, since the issuance of our original Decision in this case, the Authority has had occasion to deal generally with the question of whether to grant remedies that require retroactive application of bargaining terms. In Federal Aviation Administration, Washington, D.C., 19 FLRA No. 59 (1985), the Authority adopted the Judge's recommendation to deny such a requested remedy, stating that:

> Where, as here, the basic remedy requires the parties to engage in negotiations, it is entirely possible that an impasse may occur during bargaining and the matter will ultimately be sent to the Federal Service Impasses Panel (FSIP) for resolution. In that event, the FSIP, when considering impassed proposals, would properly consider a proposal for retroactive application and imposing such a requirement at the present time would deprive the FSIP of that option and thereby impair the flexibility the FSIP requires to execute its statutory function.

Moreover, the remedy ordered in this case is similar to the type of remedy the Authority has ordered for similar violations of the Statute. For example, in Internal Revenue Service (District, Region, National Office Units), 16 FLRA 904 (1984), the Authority adopted its Judge's recommended order refusing to require retroactive application of the parties' negotiation because "[b]y ordering retroactivity as part of the remedy I would essentially be imposing a term of a proposal on [the agency], a matter I am not disposed to do"; in Internal Revenue Service, 16 FLRA 845 (1984), the Authority rejected its Judge's recommended order requiring the agency to give retroactive effect to any agreement reached with the union in circumstances where the agency had unlawfully failed to give the union adequate prior notice of the implementation of its Taxpayer Compliance Measurement Program and refused to bargain as requested on the procedures to be utilized in implementing the program or concerning appropriate arrangements for affected employees; in Department of Health and Human Services, Washington, D.C., 16 FLRA 288 (1984), the Authority refused to order that any agreement reached between the parties as a result of further bargaining over reduction-in-force (RIF) procedures be applied on a retroactive basis, concluding that an order requiring the agency to bargain concerning negotiable RIF procedures would best effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute; and in Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, Region VIII, San Francisco, California, 9 FLRA 606, 608 n.3 (1982), aff'd, 732 F.2d 703 (9th Cir. 1984), the Authority refused to adopt the ALJ's recommended order to the extent that it would have required giving retroactive effect to whatever final agreement the parties would reach concerning starting and quitting times and lunch hours of newly-established tours of duty because "[s]uch an order would be inconsistent with the Authority's conclusion that a status quo ante remedy is unwarranted in the circumstances of this case, and, further, would be speculative."

The circumstances of this case are different from circumstances in which the Authority has ordered parties to give retroactive effect to the provisions of a collective bargaining agreement, a remedy which the Authority may, but is not required, to order. 5 U.S.C. § 7118(a)(7)(B) (1982). In this regard, the Authority has ordered a retroactive application remedy in a case where the agency has refused to bargain on a specific proposal which was substantially identical to a proposal previously found by the Authority to be within the duty to bargain. Veterans Administration Regional Office (Buffalo, New York), 10 FLRA 167 (1982). The Authority has also ordered an agency to incorporate into the parties' collective bargaining agreement the specific terms of an interest-arbitration award retroactively to the date the award became final and binding. U.S. Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 15 FLRA 151 (1984), aff'd, 775 F.2d 727 (6th Cir. 1985), in which the agency had unlawfully refused to implement the arbitration award to which no timely exceptions had been filed and which therefore became final and binding; the refusal to comply with the award constituted a failure to cooperate in impasse procedures.

Thus, the Authority has ordered such a remedy in cases involving violations of the Statute by refusing to bargain over specific proposals which had previously been held by the Authority to be within the duty to bargain or by refusing to implement the specific terms of an interest-arbitration award to which timely exceptions were not filed, rather than cases where specific proposals were not at issue, and where the Authority issued a prospective bargaining order to remedy the violation, as it did in this case.

V. Conclusion

The Authority is of the view that the rationale of the Federal Aviation Administration and Internal Revenue Service cases cited above applies equally to the circumstances of this case. We also conclude that to grant the requested remedy and thus require retroactive application of the parties' bargaining terms may unnecessarily disrupt or impair the efficiency and effectiveness of the agency's operations. Accordingly, we reaffirm our Decision and Order in Environmental Protection Agency, 16 FLRA 602 (1984).

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the U.S. Naval Supply Center, San Diego, California (Respondent), had engaged in certain of the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommending that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action. The Judge further found that the Respondent had not engaged in other alleged unfair labor practices and recommended that the complaint be dismissed with respect to such allegations. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision and the General Counsel filed an opposition to the Respondent's exceptions.*/

*/ The Respondent excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Judge. The demeanor of witnesses is a factor of consequence in resolving issues of credibility, and the Judge has had the advantage of observing the witnesses while they testified. The Authority will not overrule a Judge's resolution with respect to credibility unless a clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence demonstrates that such resolution was incorrect. The Authority has examined the record carefully, and finds no basis for reversing the Judge's credibility findings.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, it is hereby ordered that the U.S. Naval Supply Center, San Diego, California shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Interfering with the protected rights of Chief Steward Larry Cooper, or any other employee, by making threats or statements that previously filed unfair labor practice charges are worthless and that there will be repercussions for filing such charges.

(b) Interfering with the right to engage in activity protected by the Statute by telling Chief Steward Larry Cooper, or any other employee, that union activities are not desired at this Activity.

(c) Engaging in a campaign of harassment against Chief Steward Larry Cooper, or any other employee, by, among other things, monitoring his activities and ridiculing him because of his involvement in union activities.

(d) Discriminating against Chief Steward Larry Cooper, or any other employee, because of his participation in protected activity, by charging him with AWOL.

(e) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Pay Chief Steward Larry Cooper for the time he was charged with AWOL on November 19, 1984, and remove the notation of the AWOL charge from his record.

(b) Post at its facilities copies of the attached Notice, on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commanding Officer, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region VIII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with it.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Paragraph 9 of the consolidated complaint pertaining to statements made during separate telephone incidents be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This proceeding, under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the United States Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq.,1/ and the Final Rules and Regulations issued thereunder, 5 C.F.R. § 2423.1, et seq., concerns the Chief Steward having been charged three hours AWOL, alleged to have been in violation of § 16(a)(2) of the Statute, and various acts of alleged harassment against the Chief Steward, asserted to have been in violation of § 16(a)(1) of the Statute. Case No. 8-CA-50008 was initiated by a charge filed on October 4, 1984 (G.C. Exh. 1(a)). A Complaint in Case No. 8-CA-50008 issued on December 31, 1984 (G.C. Exh. 1(b)) and hearing was set for February 11, 1985. By Order dated February 7, 1985 (G.C. Exh. 1(e)) the hearing in Case No. 8-CA-50008 was rescheduled for April 16, 1985. Case No. 8-CA-50064 was initiated by a charge filed on November 15, 1984 (G.C. Exh. 1(f)). On March 29, 1985, an Order Consolidating Case Nos. 8-CA-50008 and 8-CA-50064, the Consolidated Amended Complaint and Amended Notice of Hearing issued (G.C. Exh. 1(g)); hearing was set for June 10, 1985; and pursuant thereto a hearing was duly held on June 10, 1985, in San Diego, California, before the undersigned.

1/ For convenience of reference, sections of the Statute hereinafter are, also, referred to without inclusion of the initial "71" of the statutory reference, e.g., Section 7116(a)(2) will be referred to, simply, as "§ 16(a)(2)".

All parties were represented at the hearing, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved and were afforded the opportunity to present oral argument which each party waived. At the close of the hearing, July 10, 1985, was fixed as the date for mailing post-hearing briefs, which time was subsequently extended, upon timely motion of the General Counsel, to which the other parties did not object, for good cause shown, to August 8, 1985, and each party has timely mailed an excellent brief, received on, or before August 8, 1985, which have been carefully considered. Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings and conclusions:

Findings

1. Mr. Larry Cooper has been employed as a warehouse worker at the Naval Supply Center since 1971 or 1972 (Tr. 14, 31). He has been Chief Steward for American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1399, AFL-CIO (hereinafter referred to as the "Union") for the last three years for a unit of about 1,500 employees (Tr. 14, 15) and prior to that had been a steward for about three and one-half years (Tr. 14). In his capacity as a Union official, Mr. Cooper has filed or been involved with over a hundred grievances, has filed or has been involved with the processing of unfair labor practice charges, and has attended labor-management meetings (Tr. 14-15, 17, 116, 156; G.C. Exhs. 2 and 3). Mr. Cooper has carried out his job duties in an exemplary manner, (G.C. Exhs. 4, 5, 6, 9).

2. In July, 1984, Mr. Cooper was reassigned from the Material Accuracy Team where his first line supervisor was a Mr. Mantonana to the first line supervision of Mr. Kenneth Adams (Tr. 20, 24-25, 139). At that time, Mr. Adams was responsible for Buildings 68, 69, 70 and 3322 and his office was in Building 3322 (Tr. 136). Prior to becoming a supervisor in about 1980 (Tr. 149), Mr. Adams had been an active member of the Union, served as 1st Vice-President, 2nd Vice-President, and had been a member of the Union's negotiating team when the still applicable Agreement was negotiated in 1977 (Tr. 149, Res. Exh. 2). Mr. Cooper's second line supervisor was Mr. Charles Lawson, General Foreman (Tr. 172).

3. In July, Mr. Cooper worked in Buildings 68 and 69. There was no telephone in Buildings 68, 69 or 70 but there was a telephone in Building 3322, in Mr. Adams' office, which was available to employees (Tr. 137, 138). In fact, there was extension on the dock outside Mr. Adams' office, to which, although locked, employees also had ready access as the key was readily available whether Mr. Adams was present or not (Tr. 137-138). During July, 1984, Mr. Adams testified that while in Building 70 he saw Mr. Cooper at Building 66, which is directly in front of building 70, sitting at a desk in Building 66 using the telephone (Tr. 140, 160). Mr. Adams stated that this was during working hours (Tr. 140); that Mr. Cooper was out of his work area and was supposed to be working in Building 68 (Tr. 160); and that Mr. Cooper had not requested permission to leave the work area before using the telephone (Tr. 140). Mr. Adams stated that he talked to Mr. Cooper and told him he must get permission to leave the work area to use the telephone (Tr. 140). Mr. Adams further stated that he had previously informed all of his employees, including Mr. Cooper, at daily stand-up safety meetings of the telephone policy, namely that if they were to leave their work site to use a telephone they must get prior approval from him to leave the work area (Tr. 138, 139, 140).

Mr. Cooper testified that he had gone to Buildings 64 and 65 to use the telephone (Tr. 26) and that Mr. Adams told him he had received information that he was in another area using the telephone; that he, Cooper, had responded that he had checked with people in the area and had permission to use their telephone and he had done so on his own time; that Adams said ". . . he didn't want me using no phone even on my own time." (Tr. 27). I do not credit Mr. Cooper's testimony in this regard and, instead, credit Mr. Adams' testimony which I found far more convincing. First, Mr. Cooper concedes that he had left his work area during working hours without either the knowledge or permission of Mr. Adams and, while he may have had permission from other people to use their telephone, his response, did not address Mr. Adams' concern, namely, leaving the work site without permission, and, although he asserted he was on his "own time", the record does not show that Mr. Cooper left his work site during any general break period, such as lunch break, when Mr. Adams would have known he was not on duty time. To the contrary, Mr. Adams credibly testified he saw Mr. Cooper using the telephone in Building 66 during working hours. Second, if Mr. Cooper, as Chief Steward, had in fact been denied permission to use the telephone at any time, including his "own time", it is unrealistic that he would have dropped the matter when, as he stated, Mr. Adams made no response as to what "am I supposed to do." (Tr. 27). Third, as the record shows, Mr. Cooper not only knew a telephone was available in Mr. Adams' office but he made use of it. Moreover, the record shows that Mr. Cooper continued to use telephones in other buildings (Tr. 47).

4. In October, 1984, Mr. Cooper was standing using the telephone in Mr. Adams' office when Mr. Adams came in. Mr. Cooper stated that Mr. Adams picked the telephone up from his desk and ". . . slammed it down" on another desk that was adjacent (Tr. 100) and said, ". . . Cooper, get to work" (Tr. 101) and as he, Cooper, was getting ready to hang up said, "Don't -- don't stand over my desk." (Tr. 101).

Mr. Adams testified that when he came into his office Mr. Cooper was using the telephone facing the desk; that when he, Adams, came in Cooper turned his back to him; that he, Adams, asked Mr. Cooper to move the telephone and sit in the chair; that Cooper ignored his request and that he, Adams, got up and moved the telephone from the desk to the credenza and again asked Copper to sit down; that Cooper did not sit down but continued to talk for two to five minutes; and when Cooper hung up, he, Adams, told Cooper it was not courteous to stand with your posterior to someone else's face (Tr. 142). Again, I found Mr. Adams' testimony more convincing than Mr. Cooper's and, therefore, I credit Mr. Adams' testimony; but under neither version do I find any conduct that would be violative of the Statute.

5. In September, 1984, Mr. Cooper was temporarily detailed to work for Mr. Albert Taylor in Building 64 for not longer than 30 days; however, Mr. Adams continued to keep his time (Tr. 157-158) and Mr. Lawson remained his second line supervisor. Mr. Cooper testified that on September 24, he was in Building 64 on a forklift, looking for Mr. Taylor to let him know he was leaving for a previously scheduled labor-management meeting. Mr. Lawson entered the building from the opposite direction on his bicycle, rode up to Cooper's forklift and said "those ULPs don't mean s--t and we are going to put these size 13s up your ass" (Tr. 33, 77, 78, 79). Mr. Cooper said he hit the brake and asked, "What did you say?" but that Mr. Lawson just smiled and rode off (Tr. 33). Mr. Cooper stated that he proceeded and his former supervisor, Mr. Monty Mantonana, came around the corner and he asked him if he had been Mr. Taylor and Mr. Mantonana told him that Mr. Taylor was out in the yard. Mr. Cooper parked his forklift and started walking out of Building 64 towards Mr. Taylor, whom he now saw, when Mr. Lawson came up from behind him on his bicycle and said something he couldn't understand and continued past Mr. Cooper to Mr. Taylor; that he could see Taylor and Lawson talking but could not hear them. Mr. Lawson left and came back towards Mr. Cooper and repeated his earlier statement (those ULPs don't mean s--t and we are going to put these size 13s up your ass). When Mr. Cooper got to Mr. Taylor, Mr. Taylor told him that, ". .. Lawson had been at him again, after asking him questions . . . about my meetings and he he said he had told Mr. Lawson the fact that I was doing a good job and that I had previously had the meeting and so on scheduled, he knew about it, and there was no reason . . . that he shouldn't release me . . . ." (Tr. 35). Mr. Cooper said that he contacted the labor relations office and Commander Palanuk about what Mr. Lawson had said. (Tr. 35).

Mr. Lawson testified that he had never addressed Mr. Cooper while riding his bicycle (Tr. 179); never made any remark to Mr. Cooper (Tr. 179); and definitely did not say, "Your ULPs dont't mean s--t, and I'm going to put a size 13 brogan up your ass" (Tr. 180). Mr. Taylor is no longer working at the facility (Tr. 43) and did not testify.

6. Mr. Cooper testified that on September 26, 1984, he had gone to the garage but could not find his forklift and then went to Building 64, arriving at 7:00 or 7:02, to see if it were there. He met another employee, Berwin Jackson, who was on a forklift, and they stopped and chatted briefly. Mr. Lawson was in front of Building 64 and was watching him. Lawson called Mr. Taylor out, "Taylor, Taylor, get out here" and when Mr. Taylor came out, Lawson said, "Aren't your people supposed to be working? Why isn't he working?" (Tr. 37) and Mr. Taylor looked at him and looked at his watch and said, "Man, they just started. He just got here" and then, "Look . . . you keep me out of this. I don't want to be involved in it", threw up his hands and went back into the building. (Tr. 37). Mr. Cooper stated that he went on to talk to Mr. Taylor about a meeting he had scheduled and Mr. Taylor told him that Mr. Lawson had directed him to cancel all of my meetings, that this was what Mr. Evans [Deputy Department Director] and the Command wanted (Tr. 37). Mr. Taylor told him that Mr. Lawson had said he was under a lot of pressure from Mr. Evans to keep Cooper on the job (Tr. 37-38). Mr. Cooper stated that he told Mr. Taylor, ". . . I work for you. I do my job . . . that's between you and me . . . why do they have to interfere?" and Mr. Taylor had said, "Well, they don't want you doing, you know, union business . . . They want you to do something wrong . . . And what the problem is you do good work." (Tr. 38). Mr. Cooper testified that on October 1, 1984, Mr. Taylor told him that Lieutenant Pemberton had told him he wanted Taylor to report to him every time Cooper had to go somewhere. (Tr. 40).

Mr. Cooper testified that on October 12, 1984, Mr. Taylor told him that Mr. Lawson had called Mr. Evans concerning a meeting Cooper had scheduled and Evans had told Lawson to have it cancelled, so Taylor said, "Larry, your meeting . . . is cancelled." (Tr. 42). Mr. Cooper further stated that Mr. Taylor told him that Mr. Lawson had called a meeting of all supervisors and that Cooper was the subject of the meeting; that Mr. Lawson had told the supervisors, ". . . Cooper is really f------ Mr. Evans and the Command" and when a supervisor asked what he meant, Mr. Lawson had replied, "You know what I mean with that, you know, dam (sic), dam (sic) union, and those damned people with those, you know, ULP's . . . ." (Tr. 43).

Mr. Lawson testified that he directed his foreman when ". . . we're in a backlog mode to hold people back sometime if you can't let then go because of the backlog. But if you can't let then go, be sure to let them - - set a time that they can go." (Tr. 184). Mr. Lawson did not recall any specific time he might have directed Mr. Taylor to cancel out a meeting Mr. Cooper had scheduled (Tr. 184-185). Mr. Lawson denied any instruction from upper level of management regarding Mr. Cooper (Tr. 194). Although Mr. Cooper testified that he was prevented from going off on official time on October 12 (Tr. 88), Respondent Exhibit 3, a Labor Distribution record kept by Mr. Adams, shows that on October 12, 1984, Mr. Cooper was on official time for union business for 6.5 hours (Res. Exh. 3, Tr. 144-145).

7. Later in October, Mr. Taylor told Mr. Cooper that he was being reassigned back to Mr. Adams (Tr. 46). Mr. Cooper had an EEO meeting already scheduled for that day and called Ms. Deborah Voss, EEO

Specialist, and told her that he had been reassigned to work for Mr. Adams and anticipated that there might be a problem and asked her to call Mr. Adams. Mr. Cooper said that she told him, "Larry, don't worry about it . . . you just tell him that you have your meeting and its already been scheduled and approved" (Tr. 146). Mr. Cooper then went to Mr. Adams' office to report for work and Mr. Adams told him to go to Building 68 (Tr. 46). Mr. Cooper then told Adams he had an EEO meeting scheduled and Adams told him he didn't want to talk about it and when Cooper asked when they could talk about it, Adams said, "I'll let you know." (Tr. 46-47). Mr. Cooper stated that he went to Mr. Taylor's office in Building 65 and called Ms. Voss again and she told him, ". . . go back and don't worry about it." (Tr. 47). Mr. Cooper said he then returned to Mr. Adams' office and heard him talking to someone on the telephone. Mr. Cooper stated that he heard Mr. Adams say, ". . . Yes, I know I'm supposed to keep Cooper on the job. I know, I know, I'm trying . . . ." . . . . (Tr. 47). Mr. Adams was not asked about this incident.

8. From July through October, 1984, Lawson and another foreman, Charles Richardson, who worked on the other side of the compound in Building 322 and who supervised no employees where Mr. Cooper was working, repeatedly approached Cooper at work. Lawson would stand, arms akimbo, and just stare (Tr. 28, 38), and occasionally made remarks such as "You'd better be working" or "We're going to put you in line (Tr. 28, 30, 45). Mr. Richardson, who did not testify, never said anything but would come to where Mr. Cooper was working, sometimes 3 or 4 times a day, and just stare at Mr. Cooper, look at his watch and smirk or laugh (Tr. 29, 30, 39, 44, 85, 86).

9. Mr. Cooper testified that in April, 1985, his previous supervisor, Mr. Yarborough, told him he should talk to Mr. Lawson, that Lawson was just doing what he was told and that he, Lawson, wanted to talk to Cooper (Tr. 57). Mr. Cooper at that time was working for Commander Palanuk and Mr. Lawson approached him in Building 322. Mr. Cooper stated that Tommie Williams and Deanna Kelly were present when Mr. Lawson came in and said he wanted to talk to him (Tr. 57); that Mr. Lawson said, I've got a truck" (Tr. 57) and we got in the truck and rode to the boat lock on the Naval Station; that, when they arrived at the boat lock, Mr. Lawson said, ". . . Larry . . . I want to let . . . I'd like to bury, you know, what happened between us . . . As far as I'm concerned . . . you can do your union business or whatever you need to do . . . I am not going to be the scapegoat no more . . . Mr. Evans can say anything they want, but I'm not going to do it no more." (Tr. 58). Mr. Cooper was too dumbfounded to respond (Tr. 58).

Respondent's attorney did not ask Mr. Lawson about this alleged conversation, or the unusual circumstances in which it occurred; but, at the conclusion of the examination of Mr. Lawson, I asked if, in April, 1985, he had had a conversation with Mr. Cooper which was preceded by his getting into Lawson's pick-up truck and driving to the boat lock and Mr. Lawson responded, "I can't recall that." (Tr. 196). Mr. Lawson further stated that he did not recall any conversation with Mr. Cooper in April, 1985, concerning his performance of union duties (Tr. 196). Mr. Yarborough did not testify nor did Mr. Williams or Ms. Kelly, and I do not find Mr. Lawson's, "I can't recall" a denial or refutation of the testimony of Mr. Cooper of an extraordinary statement by Mr. Lawson made under most unusual circumstances and, accordingly, I fully credit the testimony of Mr. Cooper. Mr. Lawson's statement to Mr. Cooper directly relates to the credibility of Mr. Lawson's testimony concerning all of his conduct and actions and, accordingly, I fully credit Mr. Cooper's testimony in all respects with regard to statements and actions of Mr. Lawson and Mr. Richardson.

10. At about 7:00 a.m. on Monday, November 19, 1984, Mr. Cooper called Mr. Adams to request leave. Mr. Cooper testified that his child had suddenly became ill and the doctor had told him to bring her in; that he had called Mr. Adams and told him he had an emergency whereby he had an illness in his immediate family and needed . . . to take them to . . . the doctor's"; but before he could explain further Mr. Adams said he ". . . didn't want to hear it . . . I'm giving you one hour to get here at work." (Tr. 48). Mr. Cooper said he stated, "Well did you just hear what I said? I said I've got an emergency . . ." and that Mr. Adams said loudly, "I'm giving you one hour to get at work . . . If you don't like it, you can call Mr. Lawson and check with him." (Tr. 48). Mr. Adams testified that Mr. Cooper initially told him that he had some personal business that had arisen over the weekend (Tr. 146, 164-165) and he, Adams, told Cooper that the work backlog would not permit him to grant him leave to take care of his business; that he needed him on the job; and that he would have one hour to report (Tr. 146). Mr. Adams admitted that Mr. Cooper then said it was an emergency, but Adams told him he still had an hour to report and if he wished to take the matter any further, he could call the general foreman [Lawson]. Mr. Adams said he told Cooper that anything after one hour would be charged to AWOL (Tr. 146). I found Mr. Cooper's testimony far more convincing and plausible than Mr. Adams' version and therefore credit Mr. Cooper's testimony. In any event, Mr. Adams admitted that Mr. Cooper told him it was an emergency.

After talking to Mr. Adams, Mr. Cooper testified that he did call Mr. Lawson but his secretary, Pat, said Lawson wasn't there (Tr. 48-49, 84). Mr. Cooper stated that he believed he also asked Pat if Lieutenant Pemberton was there and he thought she said that he wasn't (Tr. 84). Mr. Cooper then called Commander Palanuk. Mr. Cooper testified that he told Commander Palanuk what had happened with Adams and himself and that "He [Commander Palanuk] then, he asked me . . .'Well, Larry . . . Do you think you'll be off all day?'" and that he [Cooper] had responded, "No, Sir, I only take off whatever's necessary . . . I'm going to take them to the doctor and as soon as I . . . get that done . . . I'll be right in." (Tr. 49, 92). Mr. Cooper further testified that Commander Palanuk aid "Okay" (Tr. 92). Mr. Cooper reported in at 12:30 p.m.; filled out a leave slip and under "Remarks" wrote emergency leave "Approved by Commander Palanuk" (Tr. 49-50, 92). Mr. Cooper stated that he then called Ms. Candice Nutwell, in labor relations, and informed her what had happened (Tr. 50).

Commander Palanuk, Director of the Materials Department, testified that Mr. Cooper called him either before or shortly after 7:00 a.m.; that he appeared upset and when he asked what was the matter, Mr. Cooper told him ". . . he had asked his foreman for leave -- he had an emergency -- and his foreman had turned him down. And I asked him if he had tried to reach anyone else . . . He said he had tried and nobody was available, and that's why he had called me." (Tr. 113). Commander Palanuk said he thanked Mr. Cooper for the telephone call (Tr. 113) and after he had hung up, called Lieutenant Pemberton and asked if he was aware of the situation about Mr. Cooper and he said he was not and had not received any phone calls in his office and he had been there since early in the morning (Tr. 113). Commander Palanuk did not recall whether Mr. Cooper called him again when he reported in at 12:30 p.m., but conceded that he might have (Tr. 119). Later, Commander Palanuk said he learned that Mr. Cooper had submitted a leave request on which he indicated as approved by him (Palanuk) when Ms. Nutwell called and told him. Commander Palanuk testified,

> ". . . I was flabbergasted. I said . . . 'How could he construe his phone call to me as granting him leave?. . . .' She said, 'Well, did he call you?' and then I related the conversation . . . And then she said, 'Well, gee, maybe he did interpret that as --' I said, 'I'm not in the habit of granting leave, so I don't know how he did, but anything's possible.'" (Tr. 131).

Thereafter, on the next pay day, Mr. Cooper felt his paycheck was for less than he expected and called the payroll office and was told that he had got AWOL for November 19 (Tr. 51-52). Mr. Cooper immediately called Ms. Candice Nutwell in labor relations. Ms. Nutwell told Cooper she had talked with Mr. Adams about the AWOL and Mr. Cooper, testified that he said, "Candice, you knew that I was getting the AWOL. How come nobody didn't tell me?" (Tr. 52) and she responded, "It wasn't my responsibility to tell you, it was Adams, and if Adams didn't tell you . . . then he didn't do his responsibility . . . ." (Tr. 52). Mr. Cooper said he told Ms. Nutwell, "You know what happened . . . I even told you about it. I reported the incident to you the whole day of what happened . . . This is it . . . I have to do something . . . Things are just getting too reckless." (Tr. 52-53). Mr. Cooper stated that Ms. Nutwell asked him to ". . . just hold off . . ." and give her some time to see if she could get this squared away and he said he would. (Tr. 53).

Mr. Cooper stated that Ms. Nutwell called him back within the hour and told him she had just talked to Commander Palanuk who told her that he could perceive how Cooper believed he had approved his leave request (Tr. 53). Mr. Cooper said he replied, "Candice . . . what do you mean 'perceive'? . . . He approved my leave . . . Why would I come in . . . and thank him, and at the same time put in a leave slip . . . If he didn't approve my leave . . . I would have been talking to the XO (sic) or the Captain. I could not come in." (Tr. 53). Mr. Cooper said that Ms. Nutwell again told him she would try to get the matter squared away (Tr. 53). Mr. Cooper stated that Ms. Nutwell called back a second time and told him, ". . . I talked to Commander Palanuk and we're going to go ahead and square it away" (Tr. 54). Mr. Cooper said he asked if he were going to get a check today and Ms. Nutwell said, "No, Larry, I'm sorry. You're going to have to wait for . . . the next pay period. That's the best we can do . . . ." (Tr. 54).

Nevertheless, the matter was never resolved (Tr. 54). Mr. Cooper testified that in December, 1984, Ms. Nutwell told him ". . . Larry, I really feel bad because . . . they told me they were going to go ahead and . . . get these things done and they haven't done anything yet." (Tr. 55). Mr. Cooper testified that in January or February, 1985, Ms. Nutwell called him and told him they wanted proof that he actually had an emergency when he requested leave on November 19, 1984 (Tr. 55). Mr. Cooper was upset and told Ms. Nutwell, ". . . What are you doing right now? Are you guys calling me a liar? . . . Now, first you say you are going to get it squared away. Then you tell me you were going to get it away. And now you're telling me (sic) want me to bring a document . . . This is wrong . . . Now, you're questioning the validity of me -- of my conversation I gave you concerning my emergency . . . That's enough" (Tr. 56). Mr. Cooper said Ms. Nutwell said, ". . . let me try one more time and see if I can get this thing squared away . . ." (Tr. 56). Mr. Cooper said Ms. Nutwell called back and said, "Larry . . . I'm sorry. I tried, but that's it." (Tr. 56).

Ms. Nutwell did not testify.

Mr. Adams testified that he asked Mr. Lawson if he had given Mr. Cooper leave for that day [November 19] and Lawson said that he had not. Therefore, "I charged Cooper with AWOL". (Tr.166, 167).

Conclusions

A. Asserted Campaign of Harassment of Chief Steward Cooper

For the most part, I found Mr. Cooper an entirely credible witness,2/ and I fully credit his testimony concerning Mr. Lawson's

---

2/ As noted earlier, I did not credit Mr. Cooper's testimony that Mr. Adams told him he could not use the telephone at any time, including his own time; but, rather credited Mr. Adams' testimony. In addition, I did not credit Mr. Cooper's version of the October, 1984, telephone incident in Adams' office, but, instead, found Mr. Adams' version more convincing; however, as stated, under neither version did I find any conduct violative of the Statute.

statements and conduct. Mr. Lawson neither denied nor refuted Mr. Cooper's testimony concerning an extraordinary conversation in which he, in effect, admitted his campaign of harassment of Mr. Cooper at the direction of his superior, Mr. Evans. Moreover, I specifically take note of Respondent's failure to call witnesses, such as Messrs. Yarborough and Taylor, to refute Mr. Cooper's testimony of statements they had made to him. Finally, Mr. Richardson's conduct was so extreme that it plainly showed it was part of a campaign to harass Mr. Cooper. First, Mr. Richardson did not testify. Second, frequently with Mr. Lawson, when Mr. Lawson made comments to Mr. Cooper, and at other times alone, he came to a building where Cooper was working and stared, looked at his watch, smirked, or laughed. Third, for a foreman to leave his assigned area and come to buildings some distance away where he had no employees but where Mr. Cooper was working, sometimes three or four times a day, to stand and stare at Mr. Cooper was bizarre, to say the least, and continued over a three month period is explainable only as part of a campaign designed to harass Mr. Cooper. Accordingly, I conclude, that from July through October, 1984, Respondent, through Lawson and Richardson, engaged in a campaign of harassment of Mr. Cooper because of Mr. Cooper's protected activity; that on September 24, 1984, Respondent, through Lawson, threatened Mr. Cooper by making statements to the effect that previously filed unfair labor practice charges are worthless and that there would be repercussions for filing such charges; and that Respondent on October 12, 1984, through Taylor, at the direction of Lawson, told Mr. Cooper that it did not want him to transact union business, and that by such conduct Respondent violated § 16(a)(1) of the Statute. B. Cooper Charged AWOL

At about 7:00 a.m. on November 19, 1984, Mr. Cooper called Mr. Adams and asked for emergency leave to take his child to the doctor. Mr. Adams refused to grant the leave and told Mr. Cooper he would give him one hour to get to work and if he didn't like it, he could call Mr. Lawson. Mr. Cooper called for Mr. Lawson but he was not in, nor was Lt. Pemberton. Mr. Cooper then called and talked to Commander Palanuk. Commander Palanuk stated that Cooper appeared upset and when he asked what was wrong, Mr. Cooper told him he had asked his foreman for leave - he had an emergency- and his foreman had turned him down and that he asked it he had tried to reach anyone else he said he had tried and nobody was available and that was why he called him (Commander Palanuk). The only significant point of difference in the testimony of Commander Palanuk and Mr. Cooper is whether Commander Palanuk approved the leave request. Mr. Cooper testified that Commander Palanuk asked, ". . . Do you think you'll be off all day?" and he had replied, "No . . . sir, I only take off whatever's necessary . . ." and that Commander Palanuk said "Okay". I have considered their testimony and credit Mr. Cooper's testimony. Not only was Mr. Cooper's testimony more convincing and plausible, but, under the circumstances, in view of Commander's Palanuk's conceded questions, I find it implausible that Commander Palanuk would not have asked whether Cooper was asking leave for the entire day. Mr. Cooper did not say that Commander Palanuk said "Your leave is approved", but only that he said "Okay". Perhaps Commander Palanuk did not intend to approve the leave request, but I find that he did say "Okay" from which Mr. Cooper reasonably believed that he had approved his request for leave. Indeed, even if Commander Palanuk's version were accepted, it reasonably appeared that he had approved Mr. Cooper's request, for will full knowledge that Mr. Cooper had called him: (a) because his foreman had denied his request; (b) because he had tried to reach others and nobody else was available; and (c) because he had an emergency and could not come in, Commander Palanuk did not tell Mr. Cooper that he did not approve such requests; did not tell Mr. Cooper to call anyone else; did not tell Mr. Cooper that his request was denied; or even tell Mr. Cooper he would look into it. Rather, according to Commander Palanuk, he thanked Mr. Cooper for the telephone call. When Mr. Cooper reported in at 12:30 p.m., he filled in a leave request and under "Remarks" wrote emergency leave "Approved by Commander Palanuk", which he left on Mr. Adams desk, and then called Commander Palanuk to thank him. In addition, Mr. Cooper testified that he called Ms. Nutwell, in labor relations, and told her what had happened.

Notwithstanding that he received a leave request which stated "Approved by Commander Palanuk", Mr. Adams checked only with Mr. Lawson who said he had not given Mr. Cooper leave that day and therefore, "I charged Cooper with AWOL". I would agree that at the point Mr. Adams denied Mr. Cooper's request for leave and gave him an hour to report, Mr. Cooper knew that he would be placed on AWOL after that grace period, unless, as Mr. Adams suggested, he talked to Mr. Lawson. Mr. Cooper did not, in fact, talk to Mr. Lawson, as he was not in, but, instead talked to Commander Palanuk who, as I have found, approved Mr. Cooper's request, and Mr. Cooper so stated on the leave request. Respondent's assertion that Cooper's ". . . own annotation 'approved by CDR Palanuk' in the Remarks Block of the leave slip (Tr. 30) was nothing more than a self-serving attempt to intimidate and force Adams' approval' (Respondent's Brief, p. 10), is pure sophistry. So far as I am aware, and nothing in the record is to the contrary (See, e.g., Res. Exh. 2, Art. 10), leave requests are normally submitted to the immediate supervisor. Here, Mr. Cooper followed the procedure he would normally have followed and indicated "Approved by Commander Palanuk" which should have caused Mr. Adams, if he did not approve the request, to: (a) forward the request to Commander Palanuk; (b) return the request to Mr. Cooper for submission to Commander Palanuk; or (c) notify Mr. Cooper that his request was denied. But Mr. Adams did none of these things, but, rather, charged Mr. Cooper three hours AWOL without notice to Mr. Cooper. Respondent further asserts, "Cooper did not believe he had any responsibility or obligation to discuss the matter with his supervisor, Adams . . . ." (Respondent's Brief, p. 10). This is pure hogwash. By stating on the leave slip, "Approved by Commander Palanuk", Mr. Cooper had fully informed Mr. Adams all that he could have told him. If Mr. Adams had any possible doubt he could asked Mr. Cooper or Commander Palanuk.

But the saga became even stranger. When Mr. Cooper learned, after he received his next paycheck, that, despite Commander Palanuk's approval of his emergency leave, he had been charged AWOL, he called Ms. Nutwell and Mr. Cooper testified that she, after talking twice to Commander Palanuk, told him ". . .we're going to go ahead and square it away" and he would be paid for the time charged AWOL in the next pay period. As noted, Ms. Nutwell was not called as a witness and I fully credit Mr. Cooper's testimony that he was told by Respondent that he would be paid for the time charged AWOL on November 19, 1984. Despite the assurance of Ms. Nutwell that he would be paid for the AWOL time, Mr. Cooper was not paid. Mr. Cooper stated that, in January or February, 1985, Respondent, for the first time, demanded ". . . proof of emergency, of the emergency on the day" and Mr. Cooper, understandably angered, declined to provide any such document. Respondent asserts that ". . . Cooper . . . acted irresponsibly by refusing to provide a doctor's slip in support of his position, . . ." (Respondent's Brief, p. 11). I do not agree. Commander Palanuk accepted without question Mr. Cooper's representation that he had an emergency (Tr. 118) and Ms. Nutwell told Mr. Cooper that he would be paid for the time charged AWOL (three hours) without qualification. Mr. Adams, although he testified that he had counseled Mr. Cooper once for leaving to conduct union representation affairs without approval (Tr. 152), did not testify that he had ever otherwise counseled Mr. Cooper for abuse of leave. Article 10, Section 3, of the parties' agreement provides that, "Action to correct abuse of sick and/or annual leave privileges shall be equitably applied to all employees in the Unit" (Res. Exh. 2), but the record does not show when, or under what circumstances, a doctor's statement is required of "all employees" or, indeed, that any employee, other than Mr. Cooper, had ever been asked to submit a doctor's certificate. Although Mr. Adams did not indicate whether he referred to annual leave or sick leave or both, his testimony that he had approved leave for Mr. Cooper both before and after November 19, 1984, on the basis of a telephone call (Tr. 151-152), in the absence of evidence to the contrary, strongly suggests the absence of any such requirement. (Actually, I do not know, and the record does not show whether emergency leave for such purpose would be considered "annual" or "sick" leave).

Why, then, was Mr. Cooper charged AWOL for three hours on November 19, 1984? On the one hand, the record shows, and I have found, that Respondent, through General Foreman Lawson and Foreman Richardson, engaged in a campaign of harassment of Mr. Cooper because of Mr. Cooper's protected activity and, from Mr. Lawson's undenied admission to Mr. Cooper, ". . . Mr. Evans [Deputy Department Director] can say anything they want, but I'm not going to do it no more" (Tr. 58), I draw the inference that Mr. Lawson acted at the direction of Mr. Evans. General Counsel asserts that, ". . . the only conclusion that can be drawn is that Cooper was charged AWOL solely because of his status as an employee who was an active Chief Steward on behalf of the Union . . . ." (General Counsel Brief, p. 26). On the other hand, although Respondent does not so assert, it could be argued that Adams' actions, for whatever reasons, are beside the point for the reason that Respondent agreed to pay Mr. Cooper for the three hours he had been charged AWOL and, although Respondent reneged, all Respondent is guilty of is a breach of contract. Nothing in Mr. Adams' initial refusal to grant Mr. Cooper leave on November 19 indicates that he did so out of union animus. Mr. Adams was a former active Union member and officer and, while Mr. Cooper testified that he overheard a portion of a telephone conversation in which Mr. Adams said, "Yes, I know I'm supposed to keep Cooper on the job . . . .", the record does not show that Mr. Adams ever did anything to interfere with Mr. Cooper's use of official time for Union activity, and on November 19, Mr. Adams charged Mr. Cooper only three hours AWOL when, in fact, he was five and one-half hours late in reporting, so Mr. Adams did give Mr. Cooper appreciable consideration. I find Mr. Adams' action after Mr. Cooper reported and left the leave request on his desk strange, indeed; but later events nullified Mr. Adams' conduct. Respondent agreed to pay Mr. Cooper for the three hours AWOL. Ms. Nutwell did not say who had agreed; however, the only person she indicated she had talked to was Commander Palanuk. Ms. Nutwell was not called as a witness and Commander Palanuk was never asked about Ms. Nutwell's statement, as Respondent's agent, that Respondent had agreed to pay Mr. Cooper for the three hours he had been charged AWOL. Respondent wholly ignores the Nutwell statement; advanced as defenses allegations, such as that Mr. Cooper attempted to intimidate Mr. Adams by submission of his leave request with the notation "Approved by Commander Palanuk", which I have found wholly without merit; and wholly ignored Mr. Lawson's "confession" which implicated Deputy Director Evans. General Counsel showed that Mr. Cooper engaged in protected activity and has shown that that conduct was a motivating factor in the campaign of harassment against Mr. Cooper. Respondent has failed to show by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have refused to pay Mr. Cooper for the three hours AWOL in the absence of his protected activity. Accordingly, in agreement with the General Counsel, I find that Respondent violated §§ 16(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute by refusing to remove the AWOL charge against Mr. Cooper and to pay him for the time charged AWOL. Internal Revenue Service, Washington, D.C., 6 FLRA No. 23, 6 FLRA 96 (1981).

Having found that Respondent violated §§ 16(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute, it is recommended that the Authority adopt the following:

ORDER

Pursuant to § 18(a)(7) of the Statute, 5 U.S.C. § 7118(a)(7), and § 2423.29 of the Regulations, 5 C.F.R. § 2423.29, the Authority hereby orders that U.S. Naval Supply Center, San Diego, California, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Discriminating against Chief Steward Larry Cooper, or any other employee, by threats or statements that previously filed unfair labor practice charges are worthless and that there will be repercussions for filing such charges.

(b) Interfering with the right to engage in activity protected by the Statute by telling Chief Steward Larry Cooper, or any other employee, that Union activities are not desired at this Activity.

(c) Engaging in a campaign of harassment against Chief Steward Larry Cooper, or any other employee, by, among other things, monitoring his activities and ridiculing him, because of his involvement in Union activities.

(d) Discriminating against Chief Steward Larry Cooper, or any other employee, because of their participation in protected activity by charging them with AWOL.

(e) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Pay Chief Steward Larry Cooper for the time he was charged with AWOL on November 19, 1984, and remove the notation of the AWOL charge from his record.

(b) Post at its facilities copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commanding Officer and shall be posted and maintained for sixty (60) consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to § 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director of Region 8, Federal Labor Relations Authority, 350 South Figueroa Street, 10th Floor, Los Angeles, California 90071, in writing, within 30 days of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that Paragraph 9 of the Consolidated Complaint be, and the same is hereby, dismissed.

Case No. 3-CA-20077

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF

LOCAL LODGE 2424, AFL-CIO

Charging Party

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions to the attached Administrative Law Judge's Decision filed by the General Counsel. The Respondent filed an opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions. The complaint in this case alleged a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) when the Respondent refused to negotiate on the Charging Party's proposal to grant administrative leave rather than "forced annual leave" on the day after Thanksgiving when Respondent's operations would be closed.

II. Background

Aberdeen Proving Ground, Department of the Army (Respondent), met on September 15, 1981, with the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, Local Lodge 2424, AFL-CIO (the Union), and informed the Union of its decision to curtail operations of the Aberdeen Proving Ground on the day after Thanksgiving, and that employees would be placed on "forced annual leave" for that day. The Union sought to negotiate concerning the impact of the Respondent's decision to curtail its operations and the procedures leading to its implementation.

During negotiations held in October, the Union presented, among other things, two proposals to grant administrative leave to all employees during the closure of the Respondent's operations on the day after Thanksgiving, rather than, as decided by the Respondent, to place employees on forced annual leave. The Respondent refused to bargain on these proposals, stating that Department of Defense (DOD) and Department of the Army (DA) regulations precluded a grant of administrative leave for an anticipated closure of operations. The negotiating session ended shortly thereafter. The following day, and again a few days before Thanksgiving, the Respondent offered to negotiate with the Union on procedures and appropriate arrangements concerning the upcoming closure but the Union declined.

III. Judge's Decision

The Judge concluded that the Respondent had no duty to bargain over the Union's proposal regarding the granting of administrative leave because the subject of the Union's proposal was inconsistent with Agency regulations which specifically barred administrative leave for an anticipated curtailment of operations and the Authority had not previously determined that there was no compelling need for the conflicting regulation.

The granting of administrative leave to unit employees in connection with the temporary curtailment of agency operations is a negotiable matter affecting working conditions of unit employees. See Long Beach Naval Shipyard, Long Beach, California and International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, Local 174, AFL-CIO, 7 FLRA 362 (1981). The Judge noted this decision, but dismissed the complaint because the Authority had not yet determined that no compelling need existed for the DOD and DA regulations upon which the Respondent specifically relied.

IV. Positions of the Parties

Exceptions to the Judge's findings and conclusions were filed by the General Counsel concerning the issue of compelling need for the DOD and DA regulations which were raised as a bar to negotiations on the Union's proposal for administrative leave. The General Counsel contended that the question of compelling need for an agency regulation may be raised as part of an unfair labor practice proceeding, and that when the Respondent in this case asserted a compelling need for its regulations it had the burden of establishing this assertion before the Judge. The General Counsel argued that the Respondent did not meet the burden of establishing compelling need for the regulations and as a consequence violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. The General Counsel also excepted to certain credibility resolutions made by the Judge.

In its opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions, the Respondent contended that it had no duty to establish a compelling need for its regulations without the issue having been raised by the Union under the Authority's negotiability procedures. Moreover, although continuing to agree with the Judge that compelling need must be determined in a separate proceeding, the Respondent asserts that a compelling need existed for the regulations in question on the grounds that the regulations, which precluded a grant of administrative leave under the circumstances, are essential to the accomplishment of the stated objective of curtailing operations on the day in question in order to conserve energy. Further, the Respondent asserts in its opposition that compelling need was established at the hearing.

V. Analysis

Section 7117(b) of the Statute empowers the Authority to resolve compelling need issues where, during the course of collective bargaining, "an exclusive representative alleges that no compelling need exists for any rule or regulation . . . which is then in effect and which governs any matter at issue in such collective bargaining . . . ." Subsequent to the Judge's Decision, the Authority issued Defense Logistics Agency (Cameron Station, Virginia), 12 FLRA 412 (1983), affirmed sub nom. Defense Logistics Agency, et al. v. FLRA, 754 F.2d 1003 (D.C. Cir. 1985),[1] where it was concluded that issues relating to whether there exists a compelling need for an agency regulation so as to bar negotiations on inconsistent proposals appropriately may be raised and decided in an unfair labor practice proceeding when the agency raises compelling need as an affirmative defense in such an unfair labor practice proceeding.[2]

[1] The court remanded the matter to the Authority for the sole purpose of permitting the petitioners to present evidence as to whether or not there existed a compelling need for the particular regulation at issue. On April 22, 1985, the Authority remanded the proceeding to the Chief Administrative Law Judge for disposition consistent with the direction of the court. Thereafter, on March 31, 1986, the complaint was withdrawn. In the instant case, by contrast, as the Respondent asserts that compelling need was established at the hearing as well as that compelling need must be determined in a separate proceeding, the Authority concludes that the Respondent was permitted to present evidence as to whether or not there existed a compelling need for the regulations at issue.

As indicated in Defense Logistics Agency, when an agency refuses to bargain over a union proposal during ongoing collective bargaining negotiations because the proposal is alleged to be inconsistent with an existing agency-wide regulation for which a compelling need exists, section 7117 of the Statute requires that the issue be resolved through the procedures in section 7117 of the Statute and Part 2424 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. A different situation is presented in cases of disputes involving an agency's alleged unilateral changes in conditions of employment, where issues of negotiability--including, as in the instant case, assertions of compelling need for agency regulations--are raised as affirmative defenses. To resolve such disputes, the Authority has promulgated procedures (5 C.F.R. §§ 2423.5 and 2424.5) which recognize a union's right either: (1) to seek resolution of the entire dispute, including the negotiability issues, in the unfair labor practice forum; or (2) to seek initial and separate resolution of the negotiability issues in the negotiability appeal forum.

It is a well-established principle in both private sector and federal sector labor law that an employer's unilateral change in what subsequently can be shown to be a bargainable working condition violates the bargaining obligation and constitutes an unfair labor practice. See NLRB v. Katz, 369 U.S. 736 (1962) (private sector); FLRA v. United States Department of the Air Force, Tinker Air Force Base, 735 F.2d 1513 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (federal sector). In such cases, one of the defenses available to management is that the substance of the change is nonnegotiable. In the Authority's view, allowing the resolution of compelling need issues in an unfair labor practice proceeding where the issue was raised as a defense to the unfair labor practice charge, is supported by the Statute, its legislative history, and public policy. It is not disputed that when such a defense of nonnegotiability concerns the kind of negotiability issue that is otherwise processed under the section 7117(c) procedure, that defense can be resolved as part of the unfair labor practice case.3/ Neither the Statute nor its legislative history suggests that Congress intended to make an exception in the federal sector to this principle when the defense of nonnegotiability involves the kind of negotiability issue that is otherwise processed under the section 7117(b) procedure.

[2] The Authority notes that the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit recently reversed an Authority decision on this same issue, U.S. Army Engineer Center and Fort Belvoir, 13 FLRA 707 (1984), reversed sub nom. United States Army Engineer Center v. FLRA, 762 F.2d 409 (4th Cir. 1985), rehearing denied (July 26, 1985). In the Authority's Supplemental Decision and Order in that case, U.S. Army Engineer Center and Fort Belvoir, 19 FLRA No. 92 (1985), the

Section 7117(b)(1) of the Statute states, in part, that "[i]n any case of collective bargaining in which an exclusive representative alleges that no compelling need exists for any rule . . . which is then in effect and which governs any matter at issue in such collective bargaining, the Authority shall determine . . . whether such a compelling need exists." (Emphasis added.) The underscored language reveals

Authority stated it "accepts the Court's opinion as the law of the case and, consistent with that opinion, shall order that the complaint in Case No. 3-CA-20133 be dismissed." Slip op. at 2.

3/ Indeed, the Authority often has made negotiability determinations in unfair labor practice proceedings where necessary to resolve the allegations that unlawful unilateral changes in working conditions were made in violation of the duty to bargain in good faith. See, e.g., Department of Transportation, 19 FLRA No. 1 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2747 v. FLRA, No. 85-1561 (D.C. Cir. September 9, 1985); Immigration and Naturalization Service, Eastern Regional Office (Burlington, Vermont), 18 FLRA No. 103 (1985); Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, 10 FLRA 77 (1982); Oklahoma City Air Logistics Center, Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma, 8 FLRA 740 (1982), enforced sub nom. FLRA v. United States Dept. of the Air Force, 735 F.2d 1513 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

that the section 7117(b) procedure is tailored to apply to situations where, during ongoing negotiations, an agency asserts that a proposal is nonnegotiable because it is inconsistent with an existing agency regulation for which there is a compelling need. This language of the Statute does not preclude the Authority from resolving any necessary negotiability issues, including those related to the compelling need for an agency regulation, in a unilateral change unfair labor practice case.

An examination of the legislative history of the Statute supports the Authority's conclusion. Thus, the 1975 amendments to the pre-Statute labor-management relations program, Executive Order 11491, authorized precisely what the Authority's procedures, codified at 5 C.F.R. §§ 2423.5 and 2424.5, were promulgated to permit: unified processing of any compelling need negotiability issue in the unfair labor practice proceeding in which it arises.4/ The enactment of the Statute in 1978 did not indicate a congressional intent to reject the continuation of this well-established practice. Rather, as the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit found, Congress did not intend to change the existing practice of allowing all issues to be resolved in one proceeding. See Defense Logistics Agency v. FLRA, 754 F.2d 1003, 1008-1011 (D.C. Cir. 1985).

In the Authority's view, there is substantial public policy benefit from unified processing of a "compelling need" allegation as part of the unfair labor practice case involving unilateral change, where such an allegation of nonnegotiability arises as an affirmative defense. This procedure effectuates Congress' goal to facilitate and promote the collective bargaining process by providing for the resolution of all relevant issues in one proceeding, thereby obviating the delay inherent in two separate and consecutive proceedings. Moreover, whether an agency's change is found to be nonnegotiable because there is a compelling need for the agency regulation or negotiable because there is no compelling need for the regulation which prompted the change, the agency is not improperly adversely affected. Even if the Authority determines that the purposes and policies of the Statute are best effectuated by an order rescinding a unilateral change over which there was a duty to bargain, such a result would only deprive the agency of the results of a unilateral change it should not have made without first bargaining.

The D.C. Circuit has noted agreement with the Authority's practice of allowing negotiability issues--including, as in the instant case, assertions of compelling need for agency regulations--to be resolved in an unfair labor practice proceeding. It concluded a review of the Statute and its legislative history as well as the Authority's policy arguments by stating:

> . . . We think it is clear that the Authority's distinction between ongoing negotiations and unilateral changes reflects not only a permissible reading of the Statute, but also a reasonable one, in the truest sense--namely, that the Authority had good reasons for reading the Statute in that way. . . . We therefore hold that in ULP proceedings over alleged unilateral changes in employment conditions effected by agency-wide rule, the Authority may determine whether there was a compelling need for the rule, and thus whether the rule was negotiable without first having made such a determination pursuant to § 7117(b). Defense Logistics Agency, et al., 754 F.2d at 1014.

In sum, the Authority, consonant with the holding of the D.C. Circuit quoted above, reaffirms its finding that unified processing of a "compelling need" allegation as part of the unilateral change unfair labor practice case in which such an allegation of nonnegotiability arises as an affirmative defense is appropriate.

The Authority in this case concludes that the Respondent has failed to sustain its burden of establishing a compelling need for the DOD and DA regulations in accordance with criteria in section 2424.11 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations (5 C.F.R. § 2424.11 (1981)). As noted, the Respondent argues that there is a compelling need for the regulations because they are essential to meet its objective in curtailing operations, which was to conserve energy. However, the Respondent has failed to establish a nexus between its goal of conserving energy and the regulations in question.[5/] The record is barren of evidence which would demonstrate how the granting of administrative leave to unit employees, rather than annual leave, as the Union's proposal at issue here would require, in any way affects the Respondent's stated objective of conserving energy; operations would be curtailed to the same extent, and energy conserved to the same extent, whether the employees affected were on annual leave or administrative leave on the day in question. Therefore, the Respondent has failed to demonstrate how the regulations in question would be essential or even helpful to achieving the Agency's stated objective in curtailing operations.

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision and the entire record in this case, and, contrary to the Judge, concludes that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute when it refused to bargain concerning the Union's proposal to grant employees administrative leave on the day after Thanksgiving, submitted in response to the Respondent's notice that operations would be curtailed on that

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the Aberdeen Proving Ground, Department of the Army shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing or refusing to negotiate with the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, Local Lodge 2424, AFL-CIO, the exclusive representative of a unit of its employees, concerning the Union's proposal to grant administrative leave in lieu of forced annual leave for its unit employees in connection with the closure of the operations of the Aberdeen Proving Ground, Department of the Army, on November 27, 1981.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request, negotiate with the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, Local Lodge 2424, AFL-CIO, the exclusive representative of a unit of its employees, concerning the Union's proposal to grant administrative leave in lieu of forced annual leave for its unit employees in connection with the closure of the operations of the Aberdeen Proving Ground, Department of the Army, on November 27, 1981.

The demeanor of the witnesses is a factor of consequence in resolving issues of credibility, and the Judge has had the advantage of observing the witnesses while they testified. The Authority will not overrule a Judge's resolution with respect to credibility unless a clear preponderance of all relevant evidence demonstrates that such resolution is incorrect. The Authority has examined the record carefully, and finds no basis for reversing the Judge's credibility findings.

(b) Post at its facility, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commander, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Department of the Army, or a designee, and shall be maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that said Notices are not altered, defaced or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This proceeding, under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the United States Code, 5 U.S.C. §7101, et seq.[1], and the Final Rules and Regulations issued thereunder, 5 C.F.R. §2423.1, et seq., which concerns the alleged refusal to bargain in good faith on the Union's proposal that administrative leave be granted for the Friday following Thanksgiving Day in response to Respondent's decision to close Aberdeen Proving Ground on Friday, November 27, 1981, was initiated by a charge filed on October 27, 1981 (G.C. Exh. 1(a)) which alleged violation of §§16(a)(1), (2), (3), (5) and (8) of the Statute. The Complaint and Notice of Hearing issued on February 26, 1982 (G.C. Exh. (c)) and the Complaint alleged violation only of §§16(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. Pursuant to the Notice of Hearing, a hearing was duly held on April 6, 1982, at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland, before the undersigned.

[1] For convenience of reference, sections of the Statute hereinafter are, also, referred to without inclusion of the initial "71" of the Statute reference, e.g., Section 7116(a)(5) will be referred to, simply, as "16(a)(5)".

All parties were represented at the hearing, were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved, and were afforded opportunity to present oral argument, which right both parties waived. At the close of the hearing, May 6, 1982, was fixed as the date for mailing post-hearing briefs which time was subsequently extended, for good cause shown, to May 13, 1982. Counsel for each party timely mailed a helpful brief, received on, or before May 12, 1982, which have been carefully considered. Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings and conclusions:

FINDINGS

1. Respondent, to conserve energy, on September 14, 1981, decided to close operations of the Aberdeen Proving Grounds on November 27, 28, and 29, 1981. As most employees work only Monday through Friday, as a practical matter, this meant that Aberdeen Proving Ground (hereinafter also referred to as "APG") would be closed on the Friday after Thanksgiving except for operation of utilities, security and essential activities. Mr. David R. Weppner, Labor Relations Specialist for Respondent, called all of the unions on September 14 and arranged a meeting for the following day, September 15. Mr. Weppner and his superior, Mr. Franklin M. Bradley, Chief of the Management Employee Relations Division, met with representatives of the various unions, including Messrs. Joseph McDeshen, Jr., President, and Harvey W. Mitchell, Vice President of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, Local Lodge 2424, AFL-CIO, (hereinafter also referred to as "IAM"), and informed the Unions that the decision had been made to curtail operations. Respondent advised the Unions that APG employees would be placed on "forced annual leave" (Tr. 58). There are various tenant activities housed at APG, such as the Chemical Systems Laboratory and the Ballistic Research Laboratory, which are not under the command or direction of APG, and the different assurances given by their commanders were discussed. Respondent stated that it was aware that because of the nature of their missions, experiments and tests in progress, that the policy of certain tenant activities might differ (Tr. 59-60), but that Respondent had concluded that APG's tests could be held in abeyance without impairment of its mission (Tr. 60).

2. Following the meeting of September 15, at which the Unions, including IAM, were informed of the decision to close APG on Friday, November 27, 1981, Colonel William R. Watts, Commander of APG, by letter dated September 23, 1981, advised Mr. McDeshen in writing, in part, as follows:

> "1. I have decided, after due consideration, to close Aberdeen Proving Ground on Friday, 27 November 1981. Only essential post services will continue to function.
> . . .
> "4. Specific details and clarification concerning the policy of leave for civilian and military personnel will be published shortly" (G.C. Exh. 2).

3. On October 2, 1981, Colonel Watts issued guidelines on how leave would be used for the Thanksgiving curtailment of activities (G.C. Exh. 3) which was distributed, inter alia, to the unions, including IAM.

4. A special meeting of Area Energy Resources Conservation Officers was held on October 6, 1981, to discuss leave procedures to be used for the period of the closure. IAM was represented by five individuals, including Messrs. McDeshen and Mitchell (Res. Exh. 2, Tr. 64). Colonel Robert P. Jones, who chaired the meeting, reviewed the October 2 letter (G.C. Exh. 3) and pointed out that:

> ". . . civilian employees will take annual leave if they have it accrued. If not, and leave can be accrued by the end of the year, they may be given advanced leave. If they have compensatory time, this can be taken. They may also elect to take leave without pay. If an employee has no annual leave, the individual will be allowed to work" (Res. Exh. 2; see, also, G.C. Exh. 3).

One or more of the union representatives requested that administrative leave be granted and Mr. Weppner responded, in part, that,

> ". . . administrative leave cannot be authorized. Administrative dismissal without charge to leave is only appropriate for unanticipated situations, or for brief periods of time" (Res. Exh. 2, Tr. 65).

5. After the Energy Resources meeting, Mr. Weppner on October 6, 1981, prepared a memorandum, signed by Mr. William J. Foland, Civilian Personnel Officer, addressed to the various Union Presidents, including IAM, which referred to the Letters of September 23 and October 2, and also attached an additional copy of the October 2 letter, which stated, in part, as follows:

"2. This officially transmits Inclosure 1 [October 2, 1981, letter]. . . so that management can meet its obligation under Title VII of Public Law 95-454 to negotiate concerning the impact and implementation of this decision.

"4. To effect the post-wide curtailment of operations, all employees not required to work on Friday, 27 November 1981, the day after the Federal holiday, must be placed on annual leave. Because the closure is anticipated and entirely within the control of management, there is no basis to dismiss employees without charge to leave or loss of pay as could be done for an unforeseen event.

"6. Any union desiring to negotiate concerning impact and implementation of this decision is invited to do so. . . ." (Res. Exh. 1).

6. By letter dated October 6, 1981, IAM requested negotiations stating, in part, as follows:

"We have received your decision to close on 27 November 1981.

"We again request to negotiate the impact of your decision. . . ." (G.C. Exh. 4, Res. Exh. 3; Tr. 19).

7. Negotiations were held on October 19, 1981. Chief spokesman for Respondent was Mr. Weppner; and IAM was represented by its negotiating team consisting of Mr. McDeshen, Chief spokesman, Mr. Mitchell, Vice President, Mr. Arnold Hughes, Chief Steward, Mr. Bill Brooks, Mr. Sam Cannizzaro and Ms. Marvel Trusclair (Tr. 21, 72). Mr. Weppner outlined "where we were, why we were together" (Tr. 22, 72) and Mr. McDeshen "suggested to Mr. Weppner that in lieu of that, that all employees be put on administrative leave" (Tr. 22). Mr Weppner responded that "the rules and regulations . . . do not permit him to do this and that it verges on nonnegotiability in his opinion" (Tr. 23). Mr. McDeshen then suggested that "if he would not buy my proposal of eight hours of administrative leave, then we would split it with him" by which he meant that "if management would grant four hours administrative leave that we would take, we being the employees, would take four hours anual (sic) leave, split the difference, four and four, four hours annual leave, four hours administrative leave" (Tr. 23). Mr. McDeshen testified that Mr. Weppner's response,

> ". . . was the same as the first, that it was not permitted by rules, laws and regulations and that it was out of the question and out of hand. Also, that it would create a holiday for both proposals . . .
> . . .
> "A. An extra holiday. The FPM's state something to that effect that you will not grant a date off to create another holiday" (Tr. 23-24).

8. Mr. Weppner had no recollection of any proposal by IAM for four hours administrative leave (Tr. 85-86). Mr. Weppner testified that after the IAM made its proposal for administrative leave (Tr. 72), which was not a new idea but had been discussed on October 6 and again on October 15 when Mr. Weppner met with Messers. McDeshen and Mitchell (Tr. 45), and which he rejected for the same reasons he had previously stated (Tr. 74), IAM then made two further oral proposals. One that employees who had no annual leave be advanced leave; and the other was that those who had no annual leave at all be allowed to work; to which he had responded that that was what Respondent had proposed, namely "that people who had no leave as of the 27th of November would be advanced leave from a period to December . . . that anyone who had used their total leave accrual for the whole year . . . that we had at least 15 opportunities to work 15 persons. . . ." (Tr. 83).

9. Following a caucus, IAM presented a written proposal, prepared by Mr. Mitchell (Tr. 47), as follows:

> "To provide employees who desire to work be permitted to do so and that those who work be provided all the rights as per the negotiated agreement" (G.C. Exh. 5).

Mr. Weppner testified that he caucused with his team and when they reconvened he rejected the IAM proposal because it was too broadly written, "we would have no idea how many people would show up, when they would go to work. I was concerned about safety of those who might be working alone . . . about the buildings, which ones to open, which ones weren't going to be used . . . . And I started to give these reasons to Mr. McDeshen and he said . . . The commander has made his decision. There is no sense in talking anymore. We are leaving . . . I said I felt that was inappropriate. So the union walked out. . . ." (Tr. 87).

Mr. Weppner stated that he spoke further to Mr. McDeshen in the hallway and asked "Is there any need to get together this afternoon. He indicated no" (Tr. 88). After lunch Mr. Weppner called Mr. McDeshen and, again, Mr. McDeshen declined to come back on the afternoon" (Tr. 88). Finally, on the following day, October 20, Mr. Weppner called Mr.

McDeshen and "again he felt that there would be no further need to get together. . . ." (Tr. 88).

10. Mr. McDeshen substantially agreed with Mr. Weppner but his emphasis was somewhat different. Thus, he testified, in part, as follows:

"Q. What if anything was management's response to your written proposal?

"A. Their response was they rejected it totally out of hand, unacceptable.

"Q. Was a reason given?

"A. The reason given was that if they permitted employees to work it would defeat the whole purpose of the post closure for saving energy.

"Q. What if anything happened after management rejected the third proposal?

"A. After they rejected that proposal, it was getting close to lunch time and I reminded Dave Weppner of the time. He asked me was there any sense in my opinion for us to reconvene after lunch at one o'clock.

"Q. What did you respond?

"A. I asked him if he would come off of his position of the letter of October 2 guidelines where (sic) that he would close, he was not permitting anyone to work. He said no, he cannot change that decision. The decision has been made. And therefore he can not change it. So I said, well, I see no sense in us reconvening after lunch. He says he agrees and we broke at that time off negotiations" (Tr. 26).

Mr. McDeshen admitted that Mr. Weppner had said that if any employees had no leave, "they would find work for then somewhere and he said he was speaking of maybe 15 employees" (Tr. 42).

11. There is no dispute that at a negotiating session held on November 24, 1981, with respect to a similar closing of APG on December 24 and December 31, 1981, IAM refused to bargain about the November 27 closing of APG because "we had filed a ULP" (Tr. 41) and when asked if he would discuss the Thanksgiving closing at the November 24 meeting, Mr. McDeshen said, "No. I would not" (Tr. 41). Mr. Weppner testified that

Mr. William Layman, IAM Grand Lodge Representative, who attended the November 24 meeting, had stated "we refuse to negotiate because we have this unfair labor practice charge pending" (Tr. 98).

12. The December 24 and 31 closing of APG is not in issue; however, General Counsel does assert that Respondent agreed to IAM's October 19 written proposal (G.C. Exh. 5) in December. On November 4, 1981, Respondent issued notice of its decision to curtail operations on December 24 and 31, 1981 (Res. Exh 7) and the guidelines were substantially the same as those issue on October 2, 1981 (G.C. Exh. 3) for November 27, 1981 except as noted hereinafter; various proposals were submitted (G.C. Exhs. 7, 8, 9, and 10); but the ultimate agreement was as follows:

> "1. Liberal Leave Policy.
> "2. For those who work the terms of the agreement be upheld commensurate with the purpose of achieving energy savings." (G.C. Exh. 11).

CONCLUSIONS

There is no dispute that Respondent, on October 19, 1981, rejected IAM's proposal for administrative leave. Indeed, on October 6 Respondent had stated that under Army Regulations, etc., administrative leave could not be granted for the reason that closure of APG was an anticipated and planned closing. This was repeated at a meeting held on October 15 with Messrs. McDeshen and Mitchell at which time copies of various regulations and a Comptroller General's decision was given to them; and on October 19, 1981, Mr. Weppner once more stated that administrative leave could not be granted under Army Regulation CPR 990-2 (C14), 610.53 (Res. Exh. 6) and Department of Defense Regulation 1400.25-M, CPM 990-2, 610.3 (Res. Exh 4). CPR 990-2 provides, in part, as follows:

> "83-2. Relieving Daily, Hourly, or Piecework Employees from Duty
> "c. Where advance notice can be given. The Authority to excuse employees administratively is not to be used in instances where the period of interrupted or suspened operations can be anticipated sufficiently in advance to permit arranging for assignment to other work or the scheduling of annual leave. Normally, where 24 hours' advance notice can be given, employees who cannot be assigned to other work must be placed on annual leave with or without their consent." (Res. Ex. 6).

DOD Regulation 1400.25-M provides, in part, as follows:

"S3-1 . . .
"d. Limitation on Authority to Dismiss Employees Without Change to Leave

"(2) When, because of planned management reasons, the closing of all or part of an activity is required for short periods of time, employees will be notified no less than one full work shift in advance and will be required to take annual leave unless leave without pay is requested.

"(3) Group dismissal authority will not be used to create a holiday.

Obviously, Respondent's reliance on the DOD and DA Regulations as the basis for its rejection of IAM's demand for administrative leave was in good faith; nevertheless, General Counsel asserts that because of the Authority's decision in Long Beach Naval Shipyard, Long Beach, California, 7 FLRA No. 53 (December 16, 1981), Respondent was wrong, IAM's proposal was negotiable, and, as Respondent failed and refused to bargain on IAM's proposal, it violated §§16(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. I have given careful consideration to the Authority's decision in Long Beach Naval Shipyard, supra, but, while it is certainly dispositive of the negotiability of IAM's proposal under the Federal Personnel Manual, upon which Respondent also relied (Res. Exh. 5), I find nothing therein that addresses the more specific provisions of the DOD or DA Regulations upon which Respondent principally relied. General Counsel's response to the DOD and DA Regulations was, simply, to ignore them. FPM Supplement 990-2, specifically provided:

> "(6) 'Supplemental regulation. Each department and agency is authorized to issue supplemental regulations not inconsistent with this subpart'" (S3-2 c. (6); Res. Exh. 5).

Neither the DOD nor DA Regulations are inconsistent with the provisions of the FPM, cf., Defense Contract Administration Services Region, Boston, Massachusetts, et al., Case Nos. 1-CA-212, 1-CA-298, 1-CA-299, and 1-CA-300 (OALJ-81-024, December 22, 1980); Harry Diamond Laboratories, et al., Case Nos. 3-CA-719, 3-CA-889, and 3-CA-970 (OALJ-81-104, May 18, 1981). Certainly, the DOD Regulations were "agency" regulations within the meaning of §17(a)(2) and (3) of the Statute and the DA Regulations were issued by a "primary national subdivision of said agency" within the meaning of §17(a)(3) of the Statute; IAM is not the exclusive representative of the majority of employees of either the DOD or DA; and, pursuant to §17(a)(2), "matters which are the subject of any agency rule or regulation referred to in paragraph (3) of this subsection" are subject to the duty to bargain "only if the Authority has determined under subsection (b) of this section that no compelling need . . . exists for the rule or regulation." The Authority has made no such determination that no compelling need exists for either the DOD or the DA Regulation, nor do I infer such a determination from the Authority's Long Beach Naval Shipyard, supra, negotiability decision. To the contrary, in the absence of any reference whatever by the Authority to DOD or Department of the Navy Regulations in its Long Beach Naval Shipyard decision, supra, I must assume that the question of agency regulation, if applicable to the closure there involved, was not raised. In the absence of a determination by the Authority, pursuant to §17(b) of the Statute,[2] that no compelling need exists for the rule or regulation, Respondent was under no duty to bargain as to the grant of administrative leave for November 27, 1981, as the controlling DOD and DA Regulations specifically provided, inter alia that administrative leave for such period "is not to be used" for anticipated closures planned in advance.

Respondent further asserts that IAM, in effect, "dropped" its demand for administrative leave when it presented its written proposal, which did not include it, nor did IAM thereafter renew its oral demand for administrative leave. IAM asserts it did not "drop" its demand for administrative leave. In view of my conclusion that Respondent was not, in any event, obligated to bargain on the matter of administrative leave, it is unnecessary to resolve this further assertion.

Although not alleged in the Complaint, General Counsel further asserts that Respondent bargained in bad faith on October 19, 1981, by rejecting "a Union proposal which would have allowed a liberal leave policy" which it granted on December 16, 1981, as to the December 24 and 31, 1981, closure. For reasons set forth hereinafter, I do not agree.

IAM's written proposal of October 19 was that:

> ". . . employees who desire to work be permitted to do so and that those who work be provided all the rights as per the negotiated agreement" (G.C. Ex. 5).

The agreement of December 16, 1981, was:

[2] Boston District Recruiting Command, Boston, Massachusetts, Case No. 1-CA-206, et al., OALJ-81-023 (December 22, 1980); Defense Logistics Agency (Cameron Station, Virginia), et al., Case No. 1-CA-213, OALJ-81-131 (July 7, 1981); Headquarters, Defense Logistics Agency, et al., Case No. 3-CA-664, et al., OALJ-81-133 (July 10, 1981); Harry Diamond Laboratories, et al., Case No. 3-CA-719, et al., OALJ-81-104 (May 18, 1981).

> "2. For those who work the terms of the agreement be upheld commensurate with the purpose of achieving energy savings" (G.C. Exh. 6).

General Counsel uses the phrase "Liberal Leave Policy" to mean something quite different than the words would indicate, namely, that Respondent would operate, i.e., APG would not be closed. Of course, there was no question that Respondent had proposed to grant leave liberally. If it were assumed that "liberal leave policy" meant that APG would be open, then IAM's October 19 proposal that "employees who desire to work be permitted to do so" may have implied the same meaning; but more significant is that Paragraphs 6 and 7 of Respondent's November 4, 1981, notice provided, in part, as follows:

> "6. I realize that some employees will desire to come to work rather than choose the leave/compensatory options available to them as listed in paragraphs 4 and 5 above. Employees choosing to work will, in most cases, be required to work in minimally heated facilities. Installation-wide support is needed in curtailing operations during this period . . .
> "7. Guidance previously disseminated in DF, STEP-CP-M, 2 October 1981, subject: Thanksgiving Day Holiday Period, regarding the curtailment of operations during that period remains as stated therein. Individual latitude regarding work during the Christmas period is being granted since sufficient time may not remain for some employees to accrue leave to cover absences during this time frame" (Res. Exh. 7).

Consequently, Respondent's decision to curtail operations on December 24 and 31, 1981, was significantly different than its decision as to November 27, 1981, in that, because it recognized that some employees would be unable, in the time remaining in the leave year, to accrue leave to cover the December dates, Respondent proposed to grant "individual latitude regarding work during the Christmas period". Accordingly, there was no question that the bargaining which took place was foursquare within the bounds of impact and implementation of Respondent's curtailment decision.

I have grave reservations that IAM's written proposal of October 19 was within Respondent's obligation to bargain on impact and implementation. That is, where management exercises a reserved right in deciding to close a facility, bargaining on impact and implementation does not extend to negating that decision. Nevertheless, I do not reach this question. Rather, I conclude that IAM terminated negotiations on October 19 without bargaining fully. In this regard, I fully credit the testimony of Mr. Weppner that when he started to give his reasons for rejecting IAM's proposal because it was too broadly written, "we would have no idea how many people would show up, where they would go to work. I was concerned about safety . . . about the buildings, which ones to open, which ones weren't going to be used . . .", Mr. McDeshen said "There is no sense in talking anymore. We are leaving . . . I said I felt that was inappropriate. So the Union walked out. . . ." (Tr. 87). There is no dispute that Respondent rejected IAM's written proposal; but from the testimony of Mr. Weppner, which is fully supported by the testimony of Ms. Marguerite Zealor, Labor Relations Specialist (Tr. 108), Mr. Kersey Alexander Jones, Jr., Material Testing Director (Tr. 113), and Mr. Thomas S. Swarts, Facilities Engineering Director (Tr. 117-119), members of Respondent's negotiating committee, the record does not show any refusal of Respondent to bargain on October 19. To the contrary the record shows that Respondent indicated it would still like to discuss impact (Tr. 119) and, although Respondent stated that it was unacceptable to have no control, the record does not show that Respondent in any way foreclosed consideration of IAM's proposal that employees be permitted to work. Indeed, the record shows that further negotiations were foreclosed only by IAM's precipitous termination of negotiations. If, as might appear from Mr. McDeshen's testimony (Tr. 26) and from the testimony of Mr. Mitchell (Tr. 48), that IAM was, in fact, seeking to change the decision to close the APG on November 27, which was a reserved right of management, then Respondent's refusal to bargain would not, in any event, have violated §§16(a)(1) or (5) as Respondent was obligated to bargain only as to impact and implementation, i.e., as the Statute states, "procedures which management . . . will observe" or "appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the exercise of any authority under this section. . . ." (§6(b)(2) and (3)), not the decision itself, Department of the Air Force, 47th Air Base Group, 4 FLRA No. 65 (1980). Nor, of course, was either Mr. McDeshen or Mr. Mitchell correct that under the October 2 guidelines "there would be no one working", as Paragraph 4 of the October 2 notice specifically provided, in part, as follows:

> "4. Even though their services are not required on 27 November 1981, the following employees must, at their discretion, be allowed to work or use leave without pay requested by SF 71:
> "a. Employees who have used all available leave (accrued and advanced). . . ." (G. C. Exh. 3).

The record is further clear that on October 19 Mr. Weppner had stated that "we had at least 15 opportunities to work 15 persons" (Tr. 83, see, also, Tr. 42).

The record further shows, as Mr. Weppner testified, that IAM declined both on the afternoon of October 19 and on October 20, 1981, to negotiate further and, finally, on November 24, 1981, refused to negotiate concerning the November 27 closure because IAM "had filed a ULP. Therefore the issue was closed. . . ." (Tr. 41). Of course, IAM is not charged with a refusal to bargain at any time. The obligation to bargain is a continuing obligation and a charge that a refusal to bargain occurred on a prior occasion neither excuses a subsequent refusal to bargain nor is its pendency a defense to an appropriate subsequent demand to bargain, cf. Kentucky National Guard, 4 FLRA No. 73 (1980); but that is not the situation here. Nevertheless, Respondent, on November 24, 1981, invited further negotiations on the impact and implementation of the November 27, 1981, closure as part of the negotiations with respect to the December 24 and 31 closure, which IAM declined. Legally, a refusal to bargain on one occasion is not "cured" by an offer to bargain at a later date, Vandenberg AFB, 4392d Aerospace Support Group, Vandenberg AFB, California, A/SLMR No. 435, 4 A/SLMR 626 (1974) (Compare decision of the Administrative Law Judge, 4 A/SLMR at 633, and the decision of the Assistant Secretary, 4 A/SLMR at 627) although the Council, on appeal, held that where, as in Vandenberg, a brief interruption of negotiations has a de minimis effect a finding of a violation is not warranted, FLRC No. 74A-77, 3 FLRC 491 (1975), 5 A/SLMR No. 554, 5 A/SLMR 574 (1975). Had Respondent refused to bargain in good faith on October 19, 1981, it would not have been "cured" by Respondent's offer to bargain on November 24, 1981. I have found, however, that Respondent did not refuse to bargain in good faith on October 19, 1981, notwithstanding that Respondent rejected IAM's proposal as written, for the reason that IAM terminated negotiations without bargaining fully on matters of impact and implementation within the scope of Respondent's obligation to bargain, and, accordingly, Respondent's offer to bargain on November 24, 1981, with respect to the November 27, 1981, closing of APG reaffirmed Respondent's offer to continue negotiations made both on October 19 and 20 and, to this extent, shows that Respondent did not refuse to bargain as to the impact and implementation of its decision to close APG on November 27, 1981. Indeed, because IAM declined to negotiate the November 27 closure on November 24, it cannot be known whether negotiations as to the December 24 and 31 curtailment, which resulted in an agreement, would have affected the November 27 closure.

Having found that Respondent did not violate §§16(a)(5) or (1) of the Statute, as alleged in the Complaint, by refusing to negotiate on the grant of administrative leave for November 27, 1981, as the grant of administrative leave was precluded by controlling DOD and DA Regulations, and that Respondent did not otherwise fail or refuse to bargain in good faith on the impact and implementation of its decision to close APG on November 27, 1981, it is recommended that the Authority adopt the following:

ORDER

The Complaint in Case No. 3-CA-20077 be, and the same is hereby, dismissed.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority dismissed the union's exceptions as untimely because they failed to comply with §§ 2425.1, 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Authority's rules and regulations, applicable to the computation of time limits.

DIGEST NOTES

Proposals are nonnegotiable that limit the agency's use of a telephone "hotline" established as a vehicle for the public to report criminal conduct, to exclude employee misconduct that is not criminal. The agency, the Customs Service, has a particular need to maintain an honest and reliable work force. The telephone hotline is part of the agency's internal security plan. The proposals would prevent management from employing every possible means, including investigating non-criminal conduct, to guard against any dishonest or prohibited conduct, whether criminal or not, among its employees. Such a limitation is inconsistent with management's right to determine its internal security practices under § 7106(a)(1) and to take disciplinary actions and remove employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A). Moreover, the proposals are not appropriate arrangements within the meaning of § 7106(b)(3). The negative impact of the proposals on management's ability to enhance the integrity of agency operations by investigating all improper conduct, criminal or non-criminal, and take appropriate disciplinary action far outweighs any arguable benefit the proposals may provide employees. (proposals 1 and 2)

A proposal is within the duty to bargain that requires the agency to provide the union with a summarization of each allegation of improper action which involves non-criminal matters that the agency obtains from a telephone "hotline" established as a vehicle for the public to report criminal conduct. The summarizations of allegations of improper action would not identify the employees concerned. Under the proposal, the agency retains the discretion to determine the timing of the release and the nature of the information that will be disclosed as well as the right to take any action necessary to protect confidential sources of information. The proposal does not interfere with the agency's right under § 7106(a)(1) to determine its internal security practices and it was not shown that the proposal violates the Privacy Act.

DIGEST NOTES

The activity violated § 7116(a)(1) when it prohibited an individual from posting union literature on his locker in the teachers lounge. There had been a past practice of permitting teachers to post a wide variety of material on their lockers. The individual posted a rival union's insignia and several memoranda and bulletins by the rival union concerning its accomplishments. Management forbid the posting of union literature in response to a threat by the exclusive representative to file an unfair labor practice charge if the practice continued. Apparently, management misunderstood the "equivalent status" rule which was designed to deal with demands of competing labor organizations for equal access by non-employee agents to an agency's premisses and for use by those organizations of an agency's services and facilities during organizational campaigns. Here, the individual was neither acting as a labor organization nor seeking to rival the incumbent by his actions.

The protected right to file a ULP charge encompasses the right to gather information in support of the charge. The activity violated § 7116(a)(1) when it directed a teacher to stop distributing a questionnaire to other teachers that was an investigatory effort to collect information in support of a ULP charge.

The Judge dismissed the activity's procedural allegation that the since charge was defective, all that follows in the subsequent investigation and trial is likewise defective. The Judge stated that a charge serves merely to initiate an investigation and to determine whether a complaint in a matter should be issued. A charge is sufficient in administrative proceedings if it informs the activity of the general nature of the violation charged against it in order to preserve the evidence relating to the matter. In order for a procedural defect to exist concerning a charge, a respondent must be prejudiced by the alleged defect.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would require the agency to pay all costs of annual eye examinations, physical examinations and certain other medical expenses. The agency is a mixed government corporation [31 U.S.C. § 9101] whose employees are "employees" within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 8901(1)(A) and are covered by the health insurance provisions of chapter 89 of title 5 of the U.S. Code. Thus the proposal concerns a matter that is specifically provided for Federal statute and is excluded by § 7103(a)(14)(C) from those "conditions of employment" over which an agency can be required to bargain under the Statute. (proposal 1)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that requires the agency to grant an employee's request for up to six months of leave without pay for maternity reasons after the employee has used all available sick and annual leave. Federal personnel laws and regulations contain no provision for maternity leave as a separate type of leave. Absence from duty for maternity reasons is a combination of sick leave, annual leave, and leave without pay [FPM, Supplement 990-2, ch. 630, subch. S13-2 and 3]. However, under the proposal, the agency would be precluded from requiring the employee to return to work at any point during the period covered by the request even if the employee is able to do so and the agency determines it has need of the employee's services. Therefore, the proposal directly interferes with management's right to assign work. (proposal 2)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that requires that an employee be notified by the field office supervisor whenever higher level management makes an inquiry regarding the assignment of work to a particular employee. The proposal would provide an employee with information as to internal management discussions and deliberations concerning its work assignments. Internal management discussions are part of management's substantive decision-making process in its exercise of its rights under § 7106. Thus the proposal would interfere with the exercise of management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B) and is not, as the union argued, a negotiable procedure under 7106(b)(2). (proposal 3)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that provides employees with the right to determine whether or not they will be transferred. The proposal directly interferes with management's right to assign employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and is not a negotiable procedure under § 7106(b)(2). (proposal 4)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would grant employees an unlimited amount of time, normally spent performing work, for purposes of travel. Under 5 U.S.C. § 6101(b)(2), agencies are required to schedule, to the maximum extent practicable, time spent in travel status during regularly scheduled duty time. However, the proposal would prevent the agency from requiring employees to travel during nonduty time in those circumstances where it was determined that travel during duty time was not practicable. Thus the proposal interferes with management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). (proposal 5)

Generalized and conclusionary reasoning is not enough to support a finding of compelling need. The Authority is not in a position on its own to determine the purposes agency regulations are designed to achieve or the importance the agency attaches to those regulations. To establish that a proposal is barred by an agency regulation for which there is a compelling need, the agency must (1) identify a specific agency-wide regulation; (2) show that there is a conflict between its regulation and the proposal; and (3) demonstrate that its regulation is supported by a compelling need with reference to the Authority's standards set forth in § 2424.11 of its regulations. Because the agency did not meet its burden of properly supporting the compelling need for its regulation that the agency claimed barred negotiations on a union proposal, the Authority could not sustain the agency's claim of a compelling need. Accordingly, the Authority found a proposal to be within the duty to bargain that requires the agency to provide $ 8.00/day plus mileage and other expenses to an employee whose duty assignment location on any particular day causes the employee's absence from residence to exceed 10 hours. The agency, a government controlled corporation, is not subject to statutory and regulatory provisions governing travel on official business for the Government (5 U.S.C. § 5701]. (proposal 7)

A proposal is within the duty to bargain that would reduce the waiting periods for within-grade salary increases to one year for steps 5 through 10 of each grade. The agency is a government controlled corporation within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 103(2). Consequently its employees are not covered by the General Schedule pay system. The proposal only concerns the timing of an employee's step increase and not the amount of salary which an employee will receive. Finally, the agency did not demonstrate the compelling need for its regulation that it alleged barred negotiations on the proposal. (proposal 8)

A proposal is negotiable that concerns the "5-4-9" compressed work schedule. The proposal is consistent with the Federal Employees Flexible and Compressed Work Schedules Act of 1982 [the Act]. Compressed work schedules do not concern the methods and means of performing work within the meaning of § 7106(b)(1). The agency did not establish the alleged compelling need for an agency regulation barring alternate work schedules. Employees are not required by the proposal to work the "5-4-9" compressed schedules nor does the proposal preclude the agency from requiring employee to work five 8-hour days when that is necessary to accomplish the agency's mission, or give employees the right to refuse to appear for work when ordered to do so. Finally, in subsequent negotiations, the agency might decide not to establish a "5-4-9" workweek because, in the agency's view, it would have an adverse impact. If impasse is reached, FSIP has the responsibility under the Act [5 U.S.C. § 6131] for settling the "adverse impact" dispute. [proposal 9]

A proposal is nonnegotiable that requires the agency to lease automobiles for employees' use, primarily for transportation to bank examining assignments which are frequently located outside the commuting area of the examiners' duty stations and residences. The proposal interferes with management's elective right under § 7106(b)(1) to determine the means of performing work. (proposal 10)

A proposal is negotiable that requires the agency to notify the union when it decides to change its travel regulations and provide the union an opportunity to negotiate on the application of those regulations to the bargaining unit. The agency is a "government controlled corporation" that is not subject to the statutory and regulatory provisions governing travel on official business for the Government. [5 U.S.C. § 5701] The proposal would not foreclose the agency from contesting the negotiability of any union proposal during future negotiations relating to specific changes in agency travel regulations. Moreover, the agency did not establish the alleged compelling need for an agency regulation barring negotiations on the proposal. Finally, a contract reopener to negotiate the application of changes in travel regulations is not bared by management's right under § 7106(b)(1) to determine the technology of performing work. The mere possibility that a union proposal might concern this matter is not enough to render the proposal nonnegotiable. (proposal 11)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that limits the duration of teaching assignments to two years. If the proposal concerns the assignment of employees to teaching positions, it in inconsistent with management's right to assign employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A). If the proposal concerns the assignment of teaching duties to employees already in certain positions, the proposal is inconsistent with management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). (proposal 13)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would extend the agency's part-time policy to any employee who has a legitimate reason. The proposal would preclude the agency from requiring an employee to return to full-time status when the agency determines it has a need of the employee's services on a full-time basis. Accordingly, the proposal interferes with management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). (proposal 14)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would provide employees with 8 days per year of administrative time for personal business. Under applicable Government-wide regulations [FPM ch. 630, subch. 11-5 and FPM Supplement 990-2, ch. 630, subch. S11-5] the head of an agency has discretion to grant administrative leave to employees of the agency in certain situations for brief periods of time. Based on the guidance set forth in several

Comptroller General interpretations of the governing provisions in the FPM, the Authority concluded that a blanket authorization of eight (8) days of administrative leave for personal business, without consideration of the specific circumstances of each case, exceeded the limits of appropriate exercise of discretion under the FPM. (proposal 15)

A "rule or regulation" within the meaning of § 7117(a)(1) is not intended to refer only to those rules and regulations which meet formal requirements as to notice and comment [see, for example 5 U.S.C. § 553]. The term also includes official declarations of policy which are binding on the officials and agencies to which they apply. Since the provisions of FPM Supplement 990-2, ch. 630, subch. S11-5 regarding an agency's limited discretion to authorize administrative leave is enforceable by the Comptroller General against officials and agencies, that regulation is a Government-wide rule or regulation. (proposal 15)

A proposal concerning official time was rendered moot by the certification of another union as the exclusive representative of the bargaining unit employees to which the proposal applied. (proposal 16)

Reimbursement for such expenses is inconsistent with 5 U.S.C. § 5704. (proposal 1)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would require the agency, whenever a position becomes vacant, to offer that position to a technician who, as a result of a RIF, was transferred to another location. ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Herbert Fishgold filed by the Department of the Navy (the Agency) on behalf of the Activity pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. For the reasons stated below, it has been determined that the exceptions must be dismissed as untimely filed.

The Arbitrator's award is dated March 25, 1986, and appears to have been served on the parties by mail on the same day.

March 2, 1984, and under sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Rules and Regulations, which are also applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, any exceptions to the Arbitrator's award in this case had to be filed with the Authority no later than the close of business on April 28, 1986. However the exceptions were not filed until April 29, 1986. Therefore, the exceptions were untimely filed.

Accordingly, as the Agency's exceptions were untimely filed, they are hereby dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This petition for review comes before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and presents issues concerning the negotiability of three Union proposals.

The Union offered these proposals in impact bargaining concerning the Agency's decision to establish a telephone "hotline." The purpose of the hotline was to serve as "a vehicle for the public to report (anonymously, if they so desired) criminal conduct, primarily the acceptance of bribes by certain employees." In addition, the Agency planned to send a short press release, providing the telephone number of the hotline, to newspapers that printed stories about criminal conduct by Customs Service employees.

II. Proposals

Union Proposal 1

(4) Information received via the hotline, involving non-criminal matters, shall not be investigated or incorporated in any record or system of records within the control of the U.S. Customs Service.

Union Proposal 2

(5) A press release for the hotline will include the following statement: "Information received via this press release involving non-criminal matters shall not be investigated or incorporated in any record or system of records within the control of the U.S. Customs Service."

Union Proposal 3

(6) The Union shall receive a summarization of each of the allegations obtained through the Customs hotline involving non-criminal matters.

III. Positions of the Parties

A. Union Proposals 1 and 2

The Agency argues that Union Proposals 1 and 2 will limit management's use of information from the hotline to the investigation of allegations of criminal activity. Thus, these proposals, according to the Agency, will violate its right under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute to determine its internal security practices. Furthermore, the Agency contends, the proposals are contrary to management's right to discipline under section 7106(a)(2)(A) as they will preclude investigations into allegations of non-criminal activity to determine whether employees should be disciplined or removed.

The Union contends that its proposals will not prevent the achievement of the Agency's stated objective of gathering information involving criminal activities by Customs Service employees. In addition, the Union asserts that information received from the hotline concerning non-criminal matters will have an adverse affect on bargaining unit employees and that its proposals constitute "appropriate arrangements" within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

B. Union Proposal 3

Regarding Union Proposal 3, which is discussed separately here as the parties treated it as a distinct issue, the Agency makes three arguments. First, the Agency contends that it is under no duty to bargain on the proposal because the dissemination of information concerning complaints about or allegations against employees was negotiated with NTEU and is covered by Article 3, Section 13 of the National Agreement. Second, the Agency asserts that the compilation and disposition of the information the Union seeks is an integral part of its internal security process and conflicts with the broad mandate granted to agencies in section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute to determine their internal security practices. Third, the Agency argues that Union Proposal 3 may violate the Privacy Act.

In response to the Agency's contentions, the Union urges that proposal 3 is limited to the Union's receipt of a summary of allegations obtained through the hotline whereas the language in the National Agreement requires management to notify employees of written complaints it receives about employees. Also, the Union contends that the hotline is unique and was not anticipated or discussed at the national negotiations. With regard to internal security, the Union asserts that its proposal will not interfere with Agency practices as its purpose is simply to ensure that the only allegations investigated are those of a criminal nature. Finally, the Union states that since the Agency will prepare the summary, it will control what is disclosed. In response to the allegation that Union Proposal 3 may violate the Privacy Act, the Union specifically notes that the proposal does not require the Customs Service to divulge the names of employees who are the subject of complaints.

IV. Analysis

A. Union Proposals 1 and 2

The Authority has held that where an agency alleges a union's proposal of an appropriate arrangement is nonnegotiable because it conflicts with management rights described in section 7106(a) or (b)(1), the Authority will consider whether such an arrangement is appropriate for negotiation within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) or, whether it is inappropriate because it excessively interferes with the exercise of management's rights.
